A SONG OF CHEER.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Over the mists of the wintry sea
A message of gladness is sent to me,
And I pass it on to my friends to-night,
This message written in words of light.
"Though dears in the darkness in which we stand,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

Like Cranes we certain we grope about
In dangerous places, in fog and doubt;
In vain we long for a shelter warm
From the chilling sleet and the driving storm;
But "Be ye patient," is God's command,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

Men's hearts, like the autumn leaves, are cast
Hither and thither by every blast:
The air is heavy with want and woe,
And the fierce War tidings we shrink to hear;
And a cry of sadness rings through the land,
"Yet "the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

It is always darkest before 'weak of day
Drives the shades of the night away;
The silence is deepest before the song
Bursts into joyousness, loud and long;
And though in the stillness of night we stand,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

E'en now as we wait in the shadows dim,
The angels are singing the advent hymn;
Faintly we hear it across the snow,
The good, glad anthem of long ago;
And we say, as we think of the abiding bond,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

For Christ is coming, the world's true light,
And he will banish the mist of night.
He not our troubles prepare his way.
And the night make ready for his coming day?
Oh, let the joy-song peal through the land,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

Let us go to meet it! How? as above!
Nay, little it matters, we need not care;
The skies may be starry with many a gem
As over the fields of Bethlehem!
Or we in the shadow of death may stand
When "the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

All shall be well in the happy morn
When we are like face, the lowly born,
And glad is the message that comes to me
Out of the mist of the wintry sea
For a star of hope is above the land,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

THE LESSON OF THE ASSASSINATION.

NUMBER THREE.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

"Why do the heathen (nations) rage and the people imagine a vain thing. The kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh. The Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath and vex them in his sore displeasure. Yet, (saith the Lord) have I set my king upon my holy will of Zion. I declare the decree. The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my son. This day have I forgotten thee. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen (nations) for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron. Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. Kiss (i. e. be reconciled) to the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are they that put their trust in him." Psa. i.

"Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight." Isa. v.

"Verily, verily I say unto you, He that entereth not in by the door into the sheepfold but climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber." John x.

"This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Mark vii. 6, 7

If one should describe the Government of the United States as in open revolt against God and the people of the United States as a nation of Infidels and Atheists, and announce a coming retribution of Divine wrath for those sins unless the people should speedily repent and thoroughly reform such a prophet of evil would doubtless be looked upon as a crazed fanatic and the accuser and his accusation would be rejected with indignant scorn, while the prophet of a smoother and more pleasing destiny for both rulers and people—of whom a large number are always in readiness for such occasions—would be warmly welcomed and applauded. Flatterers of the people are always sure to find pleased and willing hearers. The history of Noah and the antediluvians is significant and instructive. For one hundred and twenty years he was a preacher of righteousness to them and builded the ark in their presence for the safety of himself and his house in the coming deluge which he announced. But they did not heed him and all perished in the catastrophe save the eight persons who believed his report and escaped their doom.

Now our Lord saith expressly, "As it was in the days of Noah so shall it be also in the days of the coming of the Son of Man, For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." It seems he was so impressed with this truth that he asks significantly, "When the Son of man comes shall he find faith on the earth?"

From this testimony it is plain that when Christ comes a second time—whenever that may be—the world at large will be incredulous and unprepared. Certainly it would be so if he were to come now—a conclusion by no means unfavorable to his second coming at an early day according to the faith and hope of the faithful few who look for and love his appearing.

The people of the United States of America cannot claim exemption from that retribution and those calamities which will overtake all nations as a consequence of their indifference or stubborn incredulity of the actual return of the Son of God to the earth, accompanied by the holy angels and in great power and glory; nay must they not plead guilty to the charge preferred against them in the second Psalm quoted above? Do they not imagine a vain thing? Have they not set themselves against the Lord and against his Anointed? Hath not Jehovah said, "It is not man that walketh to direct his steps?" "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Yet the constitution and government of the United States, taking issue with the Most High, boldly declare that the people are capable of self-government—that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed"—that "all men are free and equal and that life liberty and the pursuit of happiness—of course according to their own definition of these terms—are among the inalienable rights of mankind." Accordingly in their fundamental law they banish from direct recognition all acknowledgment of God as the source and fountain of all wisdom and power—of his Son as the Savior and Redeemer of men and of his Word as the Divine Guide and Oracle of all truth and wisdom.

Is not this practically to break asunder the bands and cast away the cords (ties) by which God offers to restrain and govern them in righteousness? Let them show one man who is "capable of self-government" and if as these rulers declare, all men are so capable, what need of any government over men? Why not repeal all laws and leave every man to do as seems good in his own eyes, seeing that all are capable—all know what is right and all do it?

Is not such the result flowing from such premises? Can we wonder that the Most High should be represented as laughing in derision in view of man's presumption and folly? It is no wonder that he should speak unto them in his wrath and vex them in his sore displeasure and that they should perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little, while the Divine blessing is graciously bestowed on those who expect his Son and King to reign on Mount Zion and over the whole earth are to joyfully put their trust in him.

Such in brief outline is the States' relation to the Divine Ruler of all nations.

When we consider the relations which the people individually and of all ranks sustain to God in respect to their religious obligations and duties—what they believe and teach and practice—their departure from the truth God has taught them in his Word and their substitution of their own inventions and their adoption of human dogmas in place of the Divine oracles become even more conspicuous.

It would be curious to compile and record the numerous Popular Errors in Religion of which the American people are the patrons and the warm partisans.

Here follows only a few of them—each one of which can be easily shown to be condemned and disproved by God's word:

1. That man is by nature or in any sense at present an immortal being.

2. That the immortality of the soul is a Bible doctrine or is true in itself.

3. That the dead go to heaven or to a burning hell at death.

4. That men are in a conscious state after death and before the resurrection.

5. That faith in Christ is a special gift of God in answer to prayer.

6. That prayer is God's means of converting sinners to truth.

7. That sinners must pray for the forgiveness of their sins.

8. That infants, incapable of faith, are proper subjects for church membership.

9. That unconverted heathen and all Jews will be lost or punished for not accepting and obeying the law of God they never knew.

10. That the Holy Spirit must now be poured out or sent down from heaven to convert sinners.

11. That the gospel is believing in Christ.

12. That the kingdom of God is now established on earth.

13. That the kingdom of God is in men's hearts.

14. That the kingdom of God is the church.

15. That the earth with its heavens, etc., is to be destroyed or annihilated.

16. That eternal torment is the final doom of the sinner.

17. That hell is a place of burning flame and eternal misery.

18. That men, at any time, whether before or after the resurrection, go to heaven or to an eternal burning hell.

The people of the United States of America cannot claim exemption from that retribution and those calamities which will overtake all nations as a consequence of their indifference or stubborn incredulity of the actual return of the Son of God to the earth, accompanied by the holy angels and in great power and glory; nay must they not plead guilty to the charge preferred against them in the second Psalm quoted above? 17. That hell is a place of burning flame and eternal misery.

18. That men, at any time, whether before or after the resurrection, go to heaven or to an eternal burning hell.

19. That the Bible sanctions many churches—of different creeds and doctrines and denominations.

20. That there can be more than one body or church established by God.

21. That sprinkling or pouring water, on infant or adult, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, is Christian baptism.

22. That there is or can be more than one baptism, according to the Bible.

23. That unconscious infants are proper subjects of baptism.

24. That men's sins are forgiven, without baptism.

25. That baptism is a non-essential rite, although admitted to be a command of God.

26. That Sunday is the Sabbath day and to be kept as such.

27. That "the churches" (meeting-houses) are God's temples—or houses, and as such are sacred places.

28. That the Bible ordains or recognizes such a class of men as the clergy or makes any distinction (as modern religionists do) between clergy and laity.

29. That Christ is now reigning in heaven.

30. That before Christ returns to the earth all nations must be converted to Christ by the preaching of the gospel.

31. That all controversy and contention in religion is wrong and to be deprecated and discountenanced.

32. That creeds and confessions, and books of doctrine and discipline separate and apart from the Bible are allowable and harmless.

33. That the word of God is mysterious and incomprehensible and that preachers and ministry must be employed and paid to expound it to the people.

34. That sectarianism—the multiplication of sects and parties in religion—is lawful and innocent.

35. That the Scripture prophecy is not to be understood until accomplished and it is unprofitable and vain to attempt to expound or apply it.

Such are some only of the causes of that "controversy" which the Lord hath "with the nations" on account of which his wrath is, as yet, "kindled but a little." His judgments in the earth now in their beginning only, will not be abated but will continue to fall upon them with increased severity until he whose right it is to reign will come and God shall give him the nations for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession—until "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii.

OUR EXALTATION.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Beloved now are we sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2.

Who among us has realized the glory of God? Who has conceived of him as he is? Not one! We have all looked upon the glories that spring from his bountiful hand; we have seen suns rise and set, in all their wonderful beauty; we have marked the seasons come and go, and the budding leaf and flower grow into summer's perfection and fade and die, and bloom again. Yet amid this evidence of God's majesty and power, we are forced to confess—"How unsearchable is thy wisdom, and thy ways past finding out."

To know God perfectly we must be endowed with higher natures, natures capable of understanding the illimitable might of a Creator—who forever was, who is, and ever will be.

Are we to be made partakers of such a nature? Are we to possess that glorious attribute of God—immortality? Thankfully we answer, yes, if we observe certain conditions. Where shall we seek them? They are not known through the medium of the wondrous phenomena of earth. The mountains and seas speak of God, but tell us not of ourselves. To stand in solitude above the world, and feel the pure winds of heaven on our brows, is to appreciate to the full extent of our feeble minds the sublimity of God, yet not to understand his will toward us, the crowning work of his hands. If we would know ourselves, and God as he stands revealed, we must come to the Bible. From no other source can we obtain a solution to the mysteries of life and death: from no other source can we gain a knowledge of how we live and move and have our being."

Learning from the Bible that we are subject to all the infirmities of sin and death—that in Adam all die—from it we also learn that life eternal is the gift of God through Jesus Christ who brought it to light through the gospel.

Learning from the Bible that we are imperfect in character and nature, from it we learn that we are to be made perfect through obedience.

'Tis this that constitutes the Bible the corner-stone of Jehovah's work. It is a revelation to his most glorious creation. However man may have defaced himself he cannot deface the testimony that he was once altogether upright.

Man as he is, is the result of the sin of man, but the promises to man are the result of the incomprehensible and unutterable love of God.

Yet all mankind will not be exalted—and why? Simply because they refuse the offer of God to exalt them. All men will not be called the "sons of God" because they refuse the calling. Is it possible?

Will you, O reader, turn away from the glorious calling? Love you darkness better than light? Love you imperfection better than perfection? Love you death better than life? Is it true?

We stand astonished before the wonders of science, of nature: yet man, poor perishing man affords us no theme for astonishment in his headlong course to eternal death!

Are we humane? Have we imbibed any love from Christ? Then let us help the wandering hearts to God, and the feet that are going astray to the fountain of life, where washed from the stains of sin, and shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, they may pass into the narrow way that leads to everlasting life. Would you know, my reader, how to become a son of God? Would you understand the way to the greatest of all exaltations? Hear and heed the Word of God. As many, says the apostle Paul, as are led by the Spirit of God are his sons.

Jesus addressing Philip, said.—"Believest not thou that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the work" Thus the words that Jesus spake came through the Father, and were prompted by his Spirit—therefore Christ was led by the Spirit of God, and became his beloved Son with whom he was well pleased.

Christ was made perfect through suffering, and became the Captain of salvation to lead many sons to glory.

Reader, ever bear this in mind. The Savior was perfected through obedience and suffering. If thus he was perfected, can you hope to be perfected otherwise? Can you gain a crown of life by not believing the gospel and obeying its precepts? Never deceive yourself. You must believe and obey, and work, and pray, and watch to the end.

Let the world indulge in idleness, and hate, and malice. Make it not your trade.

But going back. Jesus on one occasion said to his disciples: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, for they are life."

These words are the utterances of the Spirit of God they are recorded for our guidance and salvation. As many as are led by the teaching of the spirit word of God, are made partakers of the honor, peculiar and incomparable Sons of God. Brought to God by adoption into the family of faith, as many as are baptized into Christ, become with him heirs according promise, of the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for an everlasting possession.

Paul to the Galatians, chap 3, proclaims it a necessary step for all those who will be blessed with faithful Abraham, to embrace the things promised him as the basis of all hope. By putting on Christ in baptism, we are adopted into Abraham's family, receiving the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba, Father.

How important, then, O reader, that you understand how to become a participant with Christ, heiring with him an eternal inheritance. If you are Christ's brother, you are God's son, for it is written—"He who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified, are all of one (Father)."

A stranger coming to your home might call you father, but you would not acknowledge him your son unless you adopted him as such, and he became heir jointly with your natural descendants.

So it is with God. You must become his by adoption into the family of which Abraham is the type, by believing the very gospel preached to Abraham: otherwise, though you approach on bended knees saying, "My Father," you may not be heard.

The gospel is the stepping stone to exaltation. Are you wise? Believe it and obey. There are men who give their lives to the exaltation of an hour. Will you, O reader, give your life for the exaltation of eternity? This life cannot extend beyond the circles of a few years, and the grave receives us all at last.

I have examined several systems of religion, but I have never found one to compare with the religion of Christ. All others contain the elements of discord, decay and death.

The religion of Buddha exalts but to abase, carrying its votaries back to degradation from heights of honor and glory.

Mohammed appeals to the lust and passions of mankind, and his heaven is is the offspring of the basest ambition.

Of all false religions these approach nearest the religion of Christ, yet so far away it suffers no comparison.

O way of life sublime!
O glorious gospel of God!
O wondrous love of Christ!

There is power enough in these to sanctify each poor beggar at the beautiful gate of thy Temple of Truth; to remove all our sorrows, to heal all our wounds, to comfort our stricken hearts, enabling us to grow daily into a realization of the depth of the riches and grace of God.

Brevities.

A copy of the first Bible printed brought, at the sale of the Duke of Marlborough's Sunderland Library in England, last week, $8,000. A copy of the Bible authorized by Archbishop Cranmer in the reign of Henry VIII. sold for $575. A copy of the "Vinegar" Bible sold for $1,275.

Dr. Laws, of the British Livingstonia Mission, writing from Lake Nyassa, announces that the New Testament is being translated into Chinyanja and Chitonga. These two translations are additions to the thirty-two African languages into which portions of the Bible have been rendered. The whole Bible has, as yet, been published in only eight of the many hundred languages of Africa.

SUNK LAKE.

In the Cascade Mountains of Oregon, about seventy miles from Jacksonville, is a remarkable sheet of water called the Great Sunken Lake. The distance from the water to the summits of the surrounding mountains is thought to average two thousand feet. The depth of the water is unknown. The surface is said to be never ruffled, the banks being so high that air currents do not affect it. Its length is estimated at from twelve to fifteen miles, and its width at ten to twelve. There is a mountain in the centre having trees upon it.

SURVEY OF EASTERN PALESTINE.

Lieutenant Condor with the English surveying party, has returned to Jerusalem for the winter, bringing with him the results of his first campaign across the Jordan. After the preliminary work of reconnoissance and measuring the base-line was accomplished the survey was commenced, and, up to the present, 500 square miles have been successfully accomplished. One of the surveyors, Mr. Thomas Black, who was on the former staff for some years, has been compelled by illness to resign and return to England. It was found that in the East more rapid progress can be made than in Western Palestine; while the cheapness of food and forage is some set-off to the heavy payments required by the Arabs for escort. Over 600 names have been collected; more than 200 ruins have been examined; some 400 cromlechs have been found; and plans, sketches, and photographs have been taken. Lieutenant Conder says, "The idea already put forward, that these cromlechs are referable to certain centres, is now fully established; seven such centres being explored where the cromlechs occur in numbers." In addition to the cromlechs several menhirs or standing stones have been found, and ancient stone circles in connection with both classes of monuments. Among the sites explored are Heshbon, Elealah, Madeba, Baal-Meon, Nebo, and Pisgah, the hot springs of Callirrhoe, Rabbath Amman (where the party remained for a fortnight and made a special survey), and the Jordan valley. Lieutenant Conder reports that he has found the place of the worship of Baal Peor and the site of Beneth Baal; that he has an important suggestion to make as to the "bedstead" of Og; that he has discovered the method by which the enormous stones used at Ark el Emir were brought up from the quarries; that he has found a Sassanian building at Amman, which seems likely to illustrate in an interesting manner the architecture of the Kubbet-es-Sakhra at Jerusalem. As regards inscriptions, the party have found none of importance; only two Greek inscriptions being reported, and fragments of others. A Roman milestone, with a Latin inscription, was found. A considerable number of Arab traditions have also been collected. The party are now engaged in reducing their observations into shape at Jerusalem.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE---ITS PROXIMITY.

The Two Witnesses Continued. Proofs from Zech. vi. 12, 13. What Temple is Intended? Its Investigation Continued. Congregation, or (Ecclesia-Εκκλησια-קהל al-dah). Exposition of Zech. vi. Completed.

No. 25.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The Two Witnesses.—Christ calls them "My two witnesses." He does not say, seventeen centuries hence two persons shall arise, prophesy in sackcloth three and one-half years; be slain; their bodies lie unburied three and a half days; come to life, and be translated; these shall then (during those three and a half years) be my witnesses; but he says "My two witnesses" (they now exist). "And they shall (not now) prophesy 1260 days, clothed in sackcloth." Rev. xi. 3. "They are (not will be) the two olive trees and the two lamp-stands, standing before the Lord of the earth." They were in existence when [illegible] Elohim, but their sackcloth commenced. [illegible] in this age of sodaism and deeds of [illegible]? [illegible]owl- [illegible]s

[illegible] No. [illegible] word. [illegible]e---temple of [illegible]elling-place of the [illegible] visible or invisible; [illegible] in heaven---the universe: on [illegible]; in the sea; on land; in a mountain; in a wilderness; in a tent; a splendid mansion; in a congregation, or in a person. The Lord has had, and still has many temples, still, one is called "the temple."

3. Orders of the Lord's Temples.---(1.) Celestial; (2.) terrestrial: (3.) the universe is God's temple, or house. He constructed it and dwells there. John xiv. 2; Psa. xi. 4; Rev. vii. 15.

In this temple are smaller temples. In this vast universe---the limitless expanse dwells God, with the superior orders of his family. One of these smaller mansions was prepared for the temple, or dwelling-place of a lower order---man (Adam). With Adam God dwelt in Paradise while he held dominion over the earth. The whole earth was Adam's kingdom during his obedience. Matt. xxv. 34.

This mansion, brought into its perfect state, (the restitution), is the Lord's temple, for his Son, Messiah, the Second Adam, with his family, and his beloved bride. This thought we design to eliminate; let us trace it as revealed by Jehovah.

A mansion with its family, a house---living house; a temple---living temple; one that the BRANCH shall build. This primary idea has many subordinate ideas, filling the offices adjuncts---secondary though its specific, since they are comprehended under the generic idea. The generic idea may be divided into two orders:

1. A dwelling place.
2. A family, or dwellers.

The word temple, or house, includes [illegible] ideas. The one inanimate; the [illegible]nimate---a temple and its occu- [illegible]y with its family was God's [illegible]l the flood. Floating [illegible]window, and shut door [illegible]e future seed of we- [illegible]build the "temple of

4. God took up his abode with the fathers," Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; manifested great interest in calling Abraham to the place of his future sanctuary, and constituting him the father, by faith, of many nations. Jacob, when fleeing from his home, a friendless pilgrim, in a gloomy solitude, lies down at night, with the ground for his bed, and a stone for his pillow. The future opens, and, lo, he is in God's first temple. Waking out of sleep he says, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew (it) not. How dreadful (is) this place! this (is) none other but the house of God, and this (is) the gate of heaven. And he called the name of that place (בֵּית־אֵל Beth-ale) the house of God."

5. God dwelt with his family in their cruel bondage in the land of Mizraim. He blessed them in the land of Goshen. They increased in numbers and wealth, and their prosperity brought them into slavery. Hearing the cry of oppression God sent them a Savior, Moses---one of the crown children.

6. Jehovah tented with his family in the wilderness, fed them; gave them light by night, and a cloud by day to defend them from the intense heat of the sun. That he might be recognized as their true lawgiver, he called Moses to the summit of Sinai; and, in the midst of the thunders and lightnings, surrounded with the glory of the Lord like devouring fire, God gave him the Law for the government of Israel; written with his own finger on two tables of stone.

7. The Lord promised Moses that he would go with his people through the wilderness, and camp with them [illegible]thy and he showed Moses a pattern [illegible] tent and furniture, with the ex- [illegible]njunction that there should be [illegible]ation, either in the structure or [illegible]rces, since it was a miniature of [illegible]e mansion, the universe. Beyond [illegible]l was heaven; outside the veil [illegible]he earth, man's special habitation. [illegible]d dwelt on the mercy seat between the two cherubim during their forty years' wanderings, and still longer. There was the cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.

8. Jehovah made the temple of Solomon his dwelling-place. The temple was the tabernacle doubled. It was the same old pattern enlarged, and therefore a type or photographed universe. Before its dedication, the Lord took up his abode between the cherubim in the cloud which filled the house. "Then spake Solomon, The Lord said he would dwell in the thick darkness. I have surely built thee a house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in forever."

Here was his visible presence (shechinah)---the symbol of the Divine Being---which continued while that temple remained. The temple of Zerubbabel was without the shechinah; it being built after a Persian fashion of temples; it was rebuilt, principally by Herod the Great, and was noted for the visits of the Messiah---the Branch. That temple was burned by Titus, since which God has had no visible temple for his dwelling-place on earth. In no one particular spot is his special dwelling-place; but in spirit and in truth he may be found by the devoted members of his scattered family.

The visible temple is intended, usually, when the word occurs in the Bible. Still, it is not the one which the Branch shall erect.

Can it be said that Messiah has ever built a visible, inanimate temple; one constructed out of wood, stone, or any lifeless matter?

From what we have said about the shechinah, let it not be inferred that we consider that God forsook the earth as a dwelling-place; only, that the absence of the shechinah was one of the five particulars that the Jews reckon to have been wanting in the second temple. Jehovah appeared to the prophets; and during Christ's abode on earth there were many manifestations of the Divine Presence.

The words "Temple of the Lord" and "House of God," often express the same thought---a visible dwelling-place; it is not necessary therefore, to trace the word house. Two ideas are associated with the word house---a building and its occupant. Both take the name; the one is literal, the other figurative. The secondary, or figurative meaning is often the most important.

It is that idea, or meaning, that we now propose to investigate.

What "Temple of the Lord" is to be constructed by the Branch?

We have already seen that Zerubbabel was to complete the second temple. Zech. iv. 9. "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands shall also finish it." See Ezra vi. 14, 15.

The temple of Herod was not a new structure. The Branch is not, therefore, the builder of this repaired temple, though the son of a carpenter. While under Joseph, he worked after patterns furnished by the master builder in the land of Palestine; the pattern of this new Temple was made by his heavenly Father. God gave him the job of building his Temple and gave him the pattern. For that building he has been selecting the material from all ages since the fall. Laborers have also been employed to assist in preparing the elements for that beautiful structure. All the dwelling-places, which were God's abode among his people Israel, were formed of inanimate matter, such as wood, stone, gold, silver, and precious stones. The buildings and their fixtures were fashioned out of substances derived from the mineral and vegetable kingdoms. The future Temple gathers its material from the animal kingdom---from the family who was constituted its governor. It is a Living Temple composed of a living superstructure, on a living foundation, on which living stones are built up into a living house.

Let us read the words of the prophets and Psalms explained by Jesus, and his apostles.

"The stone (which) the builders refused is become the head (stone) of the corner." Psa. cxviii. 22.

"Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same has become the head of the corner; this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?" Matt. xxi. 42.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a precious corner (stone), a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste." Isa. xxviii. 16.

"This (the Branch) is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." Acts iv. 11.

"As it is written, Behold I lay in Zion a stumbling-stone and rock of offence; and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." Rom. ix. 33.

"And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence for both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Isa. viii. 14.

"And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner (stone)." Eph. ii. 20.

Such is the inspired record relative to the foundation of this Temple of the Lord. Can it have any other true and living foundation?

"For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus the Christ." 1 Cor. iii. 11.

Let us now examine the materials of the superstructure, and the Temple itself. We shall see a temple made of living stones; and also, composed of smaller temples---temples within a Temple; each individual stone being a temple. The whole structure being the house or temple of the Deity, as well as each of its intergral parts.

The Branch was himself a temple of the Lord since the Deity dwelt in his Son in all fulness.

"In him (Christ) dwelleth all fulness of the Godhead bodily." Col. ii. 9.

"Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple (sanctuary), and in three days I will raise it up. The Jews therefore said, Forty and six years was this temple (sanctuary) in building, and wilt thou raise it up in three days? But he spake of the temple (sanctuary) of his body." John ii. 20, 21.

"Know ye not that ye are the temple (sanctuary) of God, and (that) the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man destroyeth the temple (sanctuary) of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple (sanctuary) of God is holy, which temple---sanctuary) ye are." 1 Cor. ii. 16, 17.

Know ye not that your body is a temple (sanctuary) of the Holy Ghost (Spirit) which is in you, which ye have from God." 1 Cor. vi. 19.

The people of God are, collectively, as a church, or, more properly, a congregation, the temple (sanctuary).

"We are God's fellow-workers; ye are God's husbandry (tilled land). God's building. According to the grace of God which was given to me, as a wise master-builder I laid a foundation; and another buildeth thereon. For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. iii. 9-11.

"For we are the temple (sanctuary) of the living God, even as God said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them." 2 Cor. vi. 16.

"So then ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but ye are fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets (pointed out by them), Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom each several building (every building) fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple (sanctuary) in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for (into) a habitation of God in the Spirit." Eph. ii. 19-22.—Revised Version.

"Unto whom (Christ) coming, a living stone, rejected indeed of men, but with God elect, precious (honorable), ye also, as living stones, are built up, a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood (for a holy priesthood) to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for (God's) own possession." 1 Peter ii. 5, 9.

The people of God collectively, under the old covenant, were called Moses' house; the body of Moses; under the new, the body of Christ.

This body in its collective capacity is called church; more properly, congregation; an assembly of believers---house of the living God, the pillars and support of the truth. It was in this house, or temple (sanctuary) that the great apostate hierarchy arose, and sat in judgment upon God's people. A great apostate temple has thus been erected, usurping the power of the Royal High Priesthood of the Branch.

The true witnesses belong to the living temple, or sanctuary of God; the false witnesses belong to this apostate hierarchy---this counterfeit priesthood. The Roman hierarchy, is an idol temple within the true temple of God.

WHO IS PROPERLY AUTHORIZED TO ADMINISTER BAPTISM?

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

This is a subject that I have often thought is not as thoroughly understood as it should be. I have come to this conclusion from the frequent calls, in our paper, for some one of our preaching brethren to come to certain points to preach and baptize some certain ones who had learned and embraced the truth, and consequently wished to be baptized. I see a case of this kind in a late RESTITUTION of such a call having been made and responded to, and yet proved to be a failure.

Brother A. Hasson writes from Elk Point, Dakota, submitting a proposition to the brotherhood, to establish and sustain a fund to send some of our preaching brethren to communities where there are but few, or none, of the faith, and especially where there is some one or more desiring baptism, and cannot have it, because they cannot go where there is a preacher, or attend a meeting. He then cites a case, and says:

"The need of such a fund for such a purpose will become apparent in a case in point here in Dakota."

Again he says: "It will be remembered that some months since, Mrs. J. C. Voss, of Green Island, Neb., requested, through THE RESTITUTION, that some preacher might come that way, that she might be immersed." Brother Hasson adds: "Through Mrs. S. B. Wince and myself a meeting was arranged to take place here, to be conducted by Brother T. J. Whitsitt, of Newell, Iowa, on Oct. 7th, and continue over Sunday, at which time she was to be with us and be immersed."

But Brother Hasson says that she was prevented from attending the meeting on account of sickness, and consequently could not be baptized.

Now, had Brother Hasson been properly instructed in the gospel, both this sad disappointment and the expense of sending a preacher all the way from Iowa to Dakota, might have been saved. Brother Hasson might have gone to her and told her that he had come to perform the rite of baptism upon her according to her request. And she could have called in a few of her neighbors to accompany her to the water to witness the solemn scene. But perhaps Brother Hasson would excuse himself as not being a preacher, as he had engaged a man of Iowa to come and preach, and baptize the said lady. But I claim that Brother Hasson could have done all the preaching that would have been necessary for the occasion. And if in no other way, he might have read the account of Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost, or Philip's preaching at Samaria, or Paul's sermon to the jailor, or all of them, and still have started the same hour for the place of immersing. This, I think, would be the more proper course to pursue in such a case, as I can no where in the New Testament find that any man, or set of men, are especially authorized to administer baptism. Hence I believe it to be a duty incumbent upon the church, but not resting on any man, or set of men, to the exclusion of others. Where church organization exists the church works through the means of its officers. Hence the administration of baptism and the communion devolves on the officers of such church, or on whom such officers may designate to perform such work.

Eph. iv. 16. "From whom (Christ---the head) the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." See also Col. ii. 18, 19.

But where there is no organization, and consequently no such officers, the same duties devolves upon Individual Christians, else their lights could not be seen to shine to the full extent.

Hence, were I living in an isolated part of some country where there were no church organization, and some were influenced, either through my labors, or otherwise, to accept the truth, and being desirous to obey the Lord in baptism, and making such desire known, I assure you that I would not be slow in volunteering my services to perform the right of baptism to such person. And I should go into the work with a joyful heart, believing that I would only be doing my duty as a Christian. And here I leave the subject, for some abler pen to take it up.

But it seems I cannot take my leave of the dear RESTITUTION without first saying that I heartily indorse Brother J. F. Wagoner's article in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 7. And would to God that every Christian professor would lay it to heart and abandon the use of the abominable, filthy, stinking, and poisonous weed, and save the money spent for the gratification of the appetite fostered by that much worse than useless habit (I mean the using of tobacco), and thus have some means to spare for the proclamation of the gospel. And let our ministers in particular see to it that they take Paul's advice (2 Cor. vii. 1), "Cleansing themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Thus setting a glorious example for their audiences to imitate.

Your brother in the hope of eternal life in the soon coming kingdom.

PERSIA.

Persecution at Hamadan.

A remarkable religious awakening has been going on among the Jews at Hamadan for many months. There lies before me a list of six church members, and of thirty-five other Jews who are reported as believers, though prevented, by fear of persecution, from openly confessing their faith. The unbelieving Jews, as in the days of old, have not failed to stir up opposition, and persecutions have continued now for more than two years. And this, notwithstanding repeated orders from the Persian authorities at Teheran, one of which expressly declares:

"Let a Jew choose the Christian faith or a Christian accept the Jewish faith; they should not incur opposition or molestation from anybody."

The latest case of persecution is the most serious. The facts, as gleaned from native reports, specially the letters of the pastor of the church at Hamadan appear to be thus:

About two weeks ago, some of the Christian Jews went by invitation to a friendly entertainment. While they were there, a number of soldiers, instigated by hostile Jews, took a woman along with them, and putting her into the garden where the party was assembled, rushed in themselves and raised an outcry, as if a great crime was being committed. Seizing with violence some of the parties, they brought them before the Governor, who ordered them to prison, notwithstanding their protest of innocence and the testimony of friends, and demanded 200 tomans (nearly $400) for their release. The persons thus imprisoned were Suleiman and Khoda-dad, and a third whose name was not given. Those named are Christian converts.

Two days after the arrest, the native pastor telegraphed to the missionaries at Teheran a brief notice of the false accusation, arrest, imprisonment, and the sum demanded for their release; requesting help in the matter. This telegram was immediately laid before the British Minister at the Court of Persia, who kindly consented to address the Department for Foreign Affairs on the subject.

The day after this telegram was sent the Governor had the prisoners severely bastinaded, and during their imprisonment the chief officer repeatedly reviled and beat them, and urged them to become Mussulmans. But they replied:

"If you cut off our heads we will not deny Jesus."

The day following a telegram from the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs (who has jurisdiction in the case of all non-Mussulman sects in Persia, as well as foreigners) arrived at Hamadan, inquiring into the case; and finally by the intercession of Dr. Raheem (a Jewish physician in favor with the Governor, who is also a convert and a church member), a release was effected on the payment of 70 tomans (about $1-40).

The Governor then directed some one to have the pastor telegraph to Teheran that the Governor had taken nothing, and that they were satisfied with him. An answer being returned that the pastor would not send such a message, the pastor himself was summoned before the Governor, who sharply rebuked him for reporting the matter to Teheran and declared that he would, in consequence, demand 75 tomans of the remitted taxes from the Jews and 50 tomans from the Armenians; and finally ordered the pastor to be bastinadoed. His feet were actually bound for the purpose, but at the earnest intercession of Dr. Raheem, he was released without being beaten, with a threat of severe punishment (the cutting off his ears) if he ventured to intermeddle with such matters again. The disgrace of being bound for the bastinado, even though not actually beaten, is something fearful in the judgment of the Persians.

The pastor in fear has left the city and taken refuge in a neighboring village, under the protecting shadow of a powerful Persian prince, who is friendly. The Armenian congregation has written a petition for redress of this grievous outrage on their pastor (the like of which they declare has not happened in the 300 years they have dwelt under the shadow of the Persian Government), addressed to the Department for Foreign Affairs, which has been received and handed to His Excellence the English Minister, who has manifested a kind interest in the case, for transmission to the Persian authorities.

This case is a critical one, and it is pleasant for us to remember that in a few days the attention and prayers of many Christian friends will be turned toward Persia.—Letter from J. L. Potter, Teheran, Persia.

THE DEAD SEA.

The Rev. Theodore Cuyler, in a recent letter from the Dead Sea region said:

Our afternoon's march over the bleak, treeless, and brown mountains of the wilderness was inexpressibly tiresome until we came in sight of the Dead Sea. It lay 2,000 feet below us—a mirror of silver, set among the violet mountains of Moab. More precipitous descents over rocks and sand brought us, by sundown, to the two towers of the most antique monastery on the globe. The famous convent of Mar Saba is worth a journey to Palestine. For thirteen centuries that wonderful structure has hung against the walls of the deep, awful gorge of the Kidron.

It is a colossal swallow's nest of stone, built to the height of 300 feet against the precipice, and inhabited by sixty monks of the Greek church—genuine Manicheans, and followers of St. Saba and St. John of Damascus. No woman's foot has ever entered the convent walls. Instead of woman's society they make love to the birds, who come and feed off the monks' hands. At evening they toss meat down to the jackals in the gorge below. At sunset I climbed over the extraordinary building—was shown into the rather handsome church and into the chapel or cave of St. Nicholas, which contains the ghastly skulls of the monks who were slaughtered by Chosroes and his Persian soldiers—and gazed down into the awful ravine beneath the convent walls. Some monks in black gowns were perched as watchmen on the lofty towers; others wandered over the stone pavements in a sort of aimless vacuity. What an attempt to live in an exhausted receiver.

The monks gave us hospitable welcome, sold us cane and wood-work, and furnished us with lodging on the divans of two large stone parlors. One of the religious duties of the brotherhood is to keep vigils, and through the night bells were ringing and clanging to call them in to their devotions. The vermin in the lodging-rooms have learned to keep up their vigils also; and as a result our party—with one exception—had a sleepless night. I have such a talent for sleeping, and like Pat, "pay attention to it" so closely, that I was able to defy even the fleas and mosquitoes of Mar Saba. By daylight the next morning we heard the great iron door of the convent clang behind us like the gates of Bunyan's "Doubting Castle," and for five hours we made a toilsome descent of the desolate cliffs to the shores of the Dead Sea. That much maligned sea has a weird and wonderful beauty.

We took a bath in its cool, clear waters, and detected no difference from a bath at Coney Island, except that the water had such density that we floated on it like pine shingles. No fish from the salt ocean can live in it, but it is very attractive to the eye on a hot noon-day. A scorching ride we had across the barren plain of the sacred Jordan—which disappointed me sadly. At the place where the Israelites crossed and our Lord was baptized it was about 120 feet wide; it flows rapidly, and in a turbid current of light stone color. In size and appearance it is a perfect counterpart of the Muskingum, a few miles above Zanesville. Its useless waters ought to be turned off to irrigate its barren valley, which might be changed into a garden. For beauty the Jordan will not compare with Elijah's brook Cherith, whose bright, sparkling stream went flowing past our lodging-place at Jericho. We lodged over night in a Greek convent (very small), and rode next morning to see the ruins of the town made famous by Joshua, Elijah, Zaccheus, and the restoration of Bartimeus to sight. Squalid Arabs haunt the sacred spot.

He who can make his daily toil a pleasure by cheerfulness has found the philosopher's stone, which transmutes base metals to gold.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Dec. 28, 1881.

A HAPPY New Year to all.

WE have receive a remittance of one dollar, from some person who mailed his letter at Valentine, Ind., but no name accompanied it. Who was the sender?

WE will try to give attention to some queries as soon as soon as we can. We will also notice some books and pamphlets when we have more time to examine them. Our brethren must bear in mind that our editorial labors are only a part of our responsibility. We have to look after all the financial receipts and disbursements connected with publishing THE RESTITUTION, which takes quite an amount of time each day.

WE acknowledge the receipt of kind tokens of regard from our friends both at home and abroad. To a brother in Brooklyn, N. Y., and to another in Millfield, O., we hereby express our most grateful thanks for a present in money from each as a token not only of friendship, but as an appreciation of our humble labors in the cause so dear to us all. To our brethren and sisters of our home church in Plymouth we can only briefly say, that their presents serve to strengthen the bonds of Christian love and attachment, which we hope will be as enduring as the everlasting ages that we hope to enjoy in the kingdom of God.

WITH the present number we are brought to the last issue for the year 1881. We have tried to do our best, but feel conscious of many failures. We shall enter upon the duties of another year with a great degree of diffidence, as we have a painful consciousness that we are occupying a position that our former pursuits in life were not calculated to best qualify us for—the peculiar duties that are so imperatively demanded of anyone who edits a journal read and criticised by thousands. If our brethren will be as forbearing as they have been, and work for the financial prosperity of the paper, we hope it will soon be in a condition to be placed in abler hands. No one would hail a change editorially for the better more heartily than ourself.

SOME of our brethren are making our paper their missionary by sending it to some others prepaid for six months or a year. We too are doing a little in this way. Some give it to a poor brother or sister in Christ. Let us all work while the day of salvation lasts. Our gospel age nears its close, and the time for reward for the least act done for Christ, or for one of his dear children is now very near. Our list has been slowly on the increase for the year now closing, and this increase has been largely due to the efforts and sacrifices of our friends. No one is to-day the poorer for taking our paper the last year, or for any extra sacrifice that they may have made to present it to others. "Give, and it shall be given to you again." No one looses financially who aids the cause of the Redeemer. No one that drops our paper to save its cost will be any better off at the close of the year, even in a money point of view.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE.

In answer to Brother J. P. Manning we can only now say that all the information we can give at present is—that from a circular sent us by J. B. Alden, the manager of this company, we learn that a new organization has been formed to go on with the business under the name of the Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, 36 Beekman Street, New York. We have reason to hope that all orders will ultimately be filled, but for money sent and for advertising. All among our personal acquaintance, who have remitted for books, have received them as ordered. Mr. Alden says:

The Useful Knowledge Publishing Company starts with a proposed capital of $10,000, which is not yet all paid in, and the company does not run in debt, so we do not ask you to charge to our account. But the "Literary Revolution" (started from 470 a little while ago) has paid the papers more for advertising in the past two years than any other five publishing houses in the United States, and the investment is considered a good one. When we get in our capital for advertising purposes, our friends will hear from us. To some of you the American Book Exchange is still indebted on account of volumes of the "Library of Universal Knowledge" to be delivered for advertisements or notices. Some of you who have made complaints—even pretty sharp ones, at times—perhaps understand now better than you did why you did not get them promptly. The undersigned proposes to see that you get them yet.—Likewise some of the rest of you to whom the American Book Exchange is not indebted. But give us time to catch our breath.

Yours truly,
JOHN B. ALDEN.

A $20.00 BIBLE PRIZE.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly in the prize puzzle department of their Monthly for January offer the following easy way for some one to make $20.00:

To the person telling us how many times the word Moses is used in the New Testament Scriptures (not the Old Revision) by Jan. 10, 1882, we will give $20.00 in gold as a prize. The money will be forwarded to the winner January 15, 1882. Those who try for the prize must send 20 cents with their answer, for which they will receive the February number of the Monthly in which will be published the name and address of the winner of the prize, with the correct answer thereto. Cut this out: it may be worth $20.00 to you. Address, Rutledge Publishing Company, Easton, Pa.

Communications.

Brother Button says he concludes to answer my criticism of his article, but first expresses his astonishment at my confused observations. He then cites an instance. "The new heavens and earth are as literal as the old spoken of in the same connection, and they are the same that God created in the beginning." He seems to think this conflicts with the passage I quoted from Heb. i., respecting the habitable earth to come.

This earth to come, or future earth, is identical with the new earth, and both mean the literal earth in its renewed state. If I had said the new earth will be just as literal as the one created in the beginning, there would have been no confusion in Brother B.'s mind, and yet the new earth will be the one created at first, though greatly changed from the present sin cursed earth, for there shall be no more curse. The heavens and earth were pronounced very good at first before sin entered, and the same earth, now defiled, is to be renewed in its primeval beauty, by a great regeneration—a mighty deliverance from its bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Brother B. concludes that I mean that the same old heavens and earth that God created 6,000 years ago will be so reclaimed from bad conditions, that they will be called new as our Western Continent has been recovered from its dominion of savages and its former state to present civilization, in which goodness and righteousness will exist more than now. If that is the meaning of my language he certainly agrees with me.

I hold that a remnant of the people of the world will be reclaimed from their present bad moral condition, and that the righteous will inhabit the new earth, because the Bible says so. I look also for the new heavens and earth, with as much confidence as I do for the righteous moral state of things therein. Neither would I confound the glorious place where the meek shall live forever with the meek themselves. The conquering and killing Indian chiefs, and burning their villages, as necessary means for the establishment of civilization in this country, may be used to illustrate the future conquest of the Gentile powers by Christ preparatory to the millenial reign and peace, but cannot illustrate the great physical change of the old earth to new. The original curse upon the ground remained after the Indians were subdued. Wickedness too has been increasing many fold.

It is admitted that the earth is not to be moved out of its orbit, though it may be terribly shaken in the near future as in the past. It is only by a figure that the literal heavens and earth are said to flee or pass away, indicating their great change.

Allow me to ask, in the words of Brother B., Are you sure of your ground? Is the new interpretation you make of Heb. i. 10? You assume that the beginning spoken of means the beginning of preaching the gospel. That Jesus, when he began to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, he laid the foundation of the new heavens and earth.

Please read again Psa. cii: "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth," etc. When David wrote the foundation of the earth had already been laid of old—the reference is clearly to the then old creation of heavens and earth in the beginning. If it be admitted that Christ laid the foundation of the earth at creation, it would not be any more in favor of his pre-existence than the passage, "all things were made by him, and without him was not anything that was made." Jesus did not make new heavens and earth 1800 years ago, because the Bible locates them beyond the resurrection, second advent, and restitution, when there will be no more curse, pain or death.

Our Brother speaks of the shaking of the heavens and earth of all nations. What does the prophet Haggai say about this shaking, or rather the Lord to him? "Thus saith the Lord, Yet once it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come."

The Heavens, earth, sea, and dry land should not be confounded with nations and kingdoms upon the earth. Paul expected a kingdom that should not be moved, because the kingdom promised the saints will be under the whole (new) heavens, and on the whole (new) earth, and they will never be shaken. The kingdom is often used to mean the territory of the kingdom, and that will experience no more earthquakes.

Isa. li. 16, is quoted to prove my statement erroneous, that the heavens and earth are never used in the Bible as figures to represent something else. Look at the passage. "That I may plant the heavens and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion thou art my people."

The references to Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22, show that it is the new heavens and earth that he has promised to plant or create. Zion and Jerusalem are personified and spoken of in this connection, and all through the prophets, as a woman or mother and the Jewish people her children. It is not the testimony of Isaiah, then, but the testimony of Brother B. that God planted the heavens of Israel's commonwealth, and laid the foundations of an Israelitish earth.

The passage quoted in Rev. xii., is full of striking symbols—a woman with a crown of twelve stars, that brought forth the man child that is to rule all nations with a rod of iron. The woman symbolizes doubtless, the church—the man child, Christ, the dragon that sought to devour the child Pagan Rome. The stars cast down by the tail Brother B. thinks are political stars, falling from political heavens. Why not take Jesus' use of stars, Rev. i., "The stars are the messengers of the seven churches." The twelve stars in the woman's crown that were cast down by the dragon are more likely to mean the martyrs that were slain by Pagan Rome. The heavens then could not represent Pagan Rome. The heavenly places spoken of that Christians occupied meant the exalted places of honor in God's sight—as Capernaum was exalted to the literal heaven, as it were, in respect to the Divine favor, and would be cast down to hades for their sins.

I still maintain that the phrase heavens and earth is never used to represent something else. But suppose that in some instance, it was used as a figure of something else, in highly figurative portions of the word, it does not follow that the new heavens and earth that Peter and John looked for and that we should look for, connected as they are with the old heavens and earth which are reserved unto fire—that were once overflowed with water, and were created in the beginning very good—that they are metaphorical.

This is a very important practical issue between us, that we should see alike if possible. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing we look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."

The literal coming, the great change by literal fire, perdition of ungodly men, the blessed hope of new heavens and earth and their glorious capital—the New Jerusalem, are presented to us as the grandest motives for all holy conversation and godliness, looking for the despised Savior and the new earth—Paradise with supreme and all-absorbing desire. But if you spiritualize these great and important events the motive power of this Bible hope is nearly destroyed.

E. HOYT.

[For ourself we have no doubt that the re-genesis, when God shall "make all things new," will be such a change as will affect the physical constitution of the earth, as well as the political and moral condition of its inhabitants. When the deserts shall rejoice, and when the curse shall be so fully removed that there shall be no more death, neither sighing nor sorrow, is the consummation for which creation travails in the agonies of the present bondage of corruption. We look for a new heaven and a new earth in which dwelleth righteousness,—or in which righteous persons shall dwell. The earth made new, and its inhabitants all righteous, is the "restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began." Let us so order our conversation that it may be ours to behold the salvation of God when the re-genesis shall be complete. —ED.]

WARSAW, Poland, Dec. 25.—During the celebration of high mass in the Church of the Holy Cross, a man was seized while picking pockets, in order to effect his escape, the culprit cried "Fire!" Immediately a great panic seized the congregation, who rushed for the doors. During the confusion forty persons, mostly women, were crushed to death and sixty others were seriously injured. The culprit is a Jew. On learning this fact the lower classes attacked and gutted many of the shops kept by Jews.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 26.—The rioting at Warsaw still continues, and numbers of the shops kept by the Jews have been sacked by the rioters, 600 of whom have been arrested. Of the thousands of Jews in Warsaw not one is to be seen in the streets. The Jews say that the riot was planned by their enemies.

NEWS FROM THE JEANNETTE.

The following telegram has been received from Mr. Hoffman, Charge d' Affairs of the United States at St. Petersburg, at the Department of State, Washington:

"Jeanette crushed in the ice June 11th (O. S.) latitude 77 degrees, longitude 157 degrees east. Crew embarked three boats; separated by wind and fog; No. 3, with eleven men, Engineer Melville commanding, reached mouth of Lena September 19th. Subsequently No. 1,* with Captain De Long, Dr. Ambler and twelve men reached Lena in a pitiable condition. Prompt assistance sent. No. 2 not heard from."

The point at which the Jeannette is said to have been abandoned is about 180 miles north-east of the nearest of the New Siberian Islands and 600 miles from the mouth of the Lena River, which is about midway between the eastern and western points of the Siberian coast. The Lena River is more than one thousand miles from St. Lawrence Bay, the winter quarters of Lieut. Berry. The crew of the Jeannette consisted of thirty-one men. Of these, five are in the boat not yet heard from. The chances are that the entire crew is safe. Further details will be awaited with intense interest by the whole American people. Until they come, the history of the Jeannette from September 1879 to June 1881, can only be a matter of unsatisfactory conjecture.

For the noblest man that lives there still remains a conflict.—Garfield.

A talent is perfected in solitude, a character in the streams of the world. —Goethe.

The moment that a Christian goes where he cannot take Christ with him he is in danger.

No man has the right to expect the approbation of his neighbors while he has the disapprobation of his own conscience.

The look of sympathy, the gentle word
Spoken so low that only angels heard,
The secret act of pure self-sacrifice,
Unseen by men, but marked by angels' eyes,
These are not lost.

Life is divided into three terms—that which was, which is, which will be. Let us learn from the past to profit by the present, and from the present to live for the future.

When people are suffering God knows it. He does not forget us. Those who are ill-treated have a Friend whose eye is not shut. He will reward it.

The knife's sharp cut can be endured—
Its ugly gash by time is cured;
But bitter words, when they o'erflow,
Inflict a deep, unhealing blow.

Where science speaks of improvement, Christianity speaks of renovation; where science speaks of development, Christianity speaks of sanctification; where science speaks of progress, Christianity speaks of perfection.

Christian charity is a calm, wise thing. It will sometimes appear to a superficial observer a very hard thing—for, it has the courage to refuse.

Where now with pain thou treadest, tread
The holiest of the saints of God.
To show thee where their feet were set,
The light that led them shineth yet.
The footprints of the life divine
Which marked their path, remain in thine;
And that great life transfused in theirs
Awaits thy faith, thy love, thy prayers.

The best men know that they are very far from what they ought to be, and the very worst think that, if they were a little better, they should be as good as they need be.

The virtues of exalted character can no more be expected from unsettled faith, than fruit in autumn from a tree whose roots are frequently disturbed through the summer. As well expect flowers to blossom over the ever-shifting surface of the Sahara, as social and moral beauty over the arid wastes of skepticism.

PREACH THE GOSPEL.

"Go, then, to a work so solemn that angels might tremble to bear the trust—a work so pregnant with issues for good or for evil, in time and eternity, that imagination fails to embrace their number and full significance—as becomes the children of earth. Firm, yet gentle; bold to reprove, tender to restore—weak in ourselves, yet strong in the mighty God of Jacob; apply to your task. Go! Despair not amid difficulties, and shrink not from toil; and though no earthly recompense is yours at the resurrection of the just you will have a sure reward—a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

LATER YEARS THE BEST YEARS.

To a man of middle life existence is no longer a dream, but a reality. He has not much to look forward to, for the character of his life is generally fixed by that time. His profession, his home, his occupation will be for the most part what they are now. He will make few new acquaintances—no new friends. It is the solemn thought connected with middle age that life's last business is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that a man begins to look back and marvel with a kind of remorseful feeling that he let the days of youth go by half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling—it is the sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is passed, and every day that follows is shorter, and the lights fainter, and the feebler shadows tell that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the first gray hairs become visible—when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that a man is no longer going up hill but down, and that the sun is always westing, he looks back on things behind. Now, this is a natural feeling, but it is the high Christian tone of feeling? We may assuredly answer, No. We who have an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that faileth not away, what have we to do with things past? When we were children, we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood, the earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, and then home.

And so manhood in the Christian life is a better thing than boyhood, because it is a riper thing; and old age ought to be a brighter and a calmer and a more serene thing than manhood. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than his first, if he will look on, and not back. There is a peculiar simplicity of heart and a touching singleness of purpose in Christian old age which has ripened gradually, and not fitfully. It is then that to the wisdom of the serpent is added the harmlessness of the dove. It is then that to the firmness of manhood is joined almost the gentleness of womanhood. It is then that the somewhat austere and sour character of growing strength, moral and intellectual, mellows into the rich ripeness of an old age made sweet and tolerant by experience. It is then that man returns to first principles. There comes a love more pure and deep than the boy could ever feel. There comes a conviction, with a strength beyond that which the boy could never know, that the earliest lesson of life is infinite—Christ is all.—F. W. Robertson.

DECATUR, Neb.

Editor Restitution:

I see my subscription for THE RESTITUTION has expired. I thank you for still continuing to send. I feel it is a paper which, as a general thing, speaks forth words of comfort, reproof and instruction to those who read it, and its doctrines are of vital importance to those who would make their calling and election sure.

I agree with the brother who wishes a fund raised to send preachers to those who are not able to bear the expenses, and I would further suggest that such preachers visit the brethren along their routes to and from such places. I am alone here (excepting my wife), and I would gladly meet any of the preaching brethren at any station near here, for the pleasure of a visit with them, and of hearing them proclaim the things concerning the kingdom of God.

Yours in Christian Hope.

OMAHA, Neb.

Editor Restitution:

I am well aware that my year is up, and I design to be a little more prompt than I was the last time, so I will send you $10.00 this time, for I believe that the paper is the best one printed on the globe. It far surpasses every paper or periodical that I have ever seen. The Rainbow is the only one that comes anything near to it.

Let me ask you what is going to become of our Encyclopedia that you advertised in your paper? I sent them the money for one and that is the last that I have ever heard of it, only a card acknowledging the receipt of it. Is the concern bursted, or are they going to send the books by and by?

Now you want to know what you shall do with the money I send you. Well, send two copies to me; one to L. O. E. Manning, Big Flats, Adams county, Wisconsin; also, can try one to Miss S. K. Wisson, San Jose, California; and send one to Miss Rosa A. Manning, Shioeton, Outigama county, Wisconsin.

I believe to send this paper will be the best missionary work I can do, for it speaks plain truths, and that is what we want and what we need, and what we cannot get by going to the synagogues, although we can always hear some truths spoken there, but we that are familiar with God's word can see the old serpent coiled up and hidden out of sight of all eyes except those that are watching for him, and is really stands us in hand to be on the watch continually, for he is just as cunning now as he ever was at any period since the formation of man upon the earth.

It sometimes seems so strange to see and hear men preach with such apparent sincerity and earnestness as they are doing now-a-days, and yet teaching the doctrine of men instead of God's word. Then again it seems to me that with all of their great learning and knowledge they are entirely ignorant of God's plan. The Bible seems to be a sealed book to them, for if it was not a sealed book, would they presume or dare to teach such doctrines as are taught continually in these synagogues? I feel and believe they would not unless they were blinded, which I believe is the case.

Yours ever truly,
J. P. MANNING.

WHAT CHRIST IS COMING TO DO.

ROBERT ROBERTS.

There are various ideas afloat in the public mind on the subject. We need not so much to occupy the time in discussing what may be mistaken ideas, as exhibiting what is revealed in the Scriptures of truth on the point. What is revealed is in reality very plain and easy to be apprehended. It exhibits a prospect full of interest; full of sublime interest, and perhaps in certain ...tions, full of terror.

The apostolic movement that succeeded it was the most important and influential the world has ever seen; but after all, it was only an appeal to voluntary submission to declared and attested truth. It left the majority at liberty to disregard a phenomenon which they did not understand, or to treat with indifference a summons which they were not inclined to obey.

...he return of Christ to the earth will ...from all the past experiences of ... It will exercise the minds ... never have been exer... ... exercise the minds of ...d low, rich and poor, ... civilized and bar... ...t for which there ... ...ed preparation ...een centuries. ... a thief, but not as a stranger. Though the world has not been looking for him, the world has been talking of him ever since he went away. It talked of him as it talked of no one else. All classes talk of him. The Jew has cursed him: the sceptic has laughed at him: the blasphemer has scorned him. the ignorant multitude has superstitiously feared him; his friends and brethren have loved and longed for him. Civilization has honored him in her buildings and institutions; learning has lavished its highest culture upon him; war has unsheathed the sword in vindication of pretensions supposed to be springing from him. The world has groaned under oppression inflicted in his name but not by his authority, the soil has reeked with blood in the turmoil he has caused. So true is it, as he said "That he came not to send peace but a sword." Matt. x. 21.

All this was developed a situation in the earth that will invest his return with an interest, painful and thrilling and fearful, without parallel in human history. The ordinary course of human feeling will be arrested by its occurrence. The man of business will be brought to a stand, perplexed and afraid: the man of science paralyzed with a half sceptical wonderment that knows not how to deal with a matter he has despised, but which now dawns on him as a sober reality; the man of artistic preoccupations will stand bewildered in the presence of an event outside the range of his taste and accustomed mood, but of the seriousness of which education will have given some, though inadequate, an idea: the politician struck dumb, as by an event of evil omen, out of all his calculations; the aristocrat, the defiant, proud, arrogant and haughty, will practically learn the meaning of what is written in Isaiah (chap. ii. 2) "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of man shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." The common people panic struck in the shop and in the field. All classes of society will quail before the strange eventuality. A heavy apprehension will brood o'er the minds of men—a sense of undefined impending disaster—a fear of the mysterious and supernatural, aggravated ...he knowledge that Christ has been ...rected, and that he is the appointed ... human kind.

...r will be amply justified in ... that will follow; for Christ ... tread the winepress of the ... and wrath of Almighty God." ... 15. He comes to terminate ...g interval of forbearance and ...ce which men have misconstrued ... abused. He comes to proclaim ...d administer the long slumbering ...y of vengeance. Isa. lxiii. 4. Notwithstanding, the ultimate sequel will be vastly and gloriously different from what common theology has led the people to look for. The people are looking for a conflagration of heaven and earth. They expect that when Christ comes the ground will melt under their feet, and the starry universe dissolve in flame. They think Christ is coming to wreck and destroy nature—to withdraw his chosen to a distant ethereal heaven, and to confine his enemies to an indefinable hell of fire and brimstone. No such dreadful prospect clouds the vision of those who have become enlightened in the Scriptures of truth, and who have consequently come to see that these ideas are part of a system of priestly fable by which the world has been deluded for ages. The prospect of the return of Christ to earth is terrible enough in its immediate bearings; but the burning up of earth is no part of that terribleness. Such an event is an impossibility in view of the Divine determinations as declared. God has a far more beautiful and rational purpose with the earth than burning it up. He declares to us in Isa. xlv. 1, 8, that he made it not in vain—that he formed it to be inhabited. He tells us by David in Psa. xxxvii. 9, that those for whose habitation it has been formed are those who wait upon him in the present time—the meek, of whom Jesus testifies (Matt. v. 5), that they shall inherit the earth. He has declared to us that as truly as he lives, he will fill the earth with his glory. Num. xiv. 21; Isa. xl. 19; Hab. ii. 14. His Son was manifested to take away the sin of the world, and he tells us by John in the Isle of Patmos, that when that work is finally accomplished, there shall be no more death, that sorrow and sighing shall flee away. It would be a strange consummation of such a glorious plan to make a bonfire of the earth as soon as it is delivered from all evil and made the habitation of righteousness, life and joy. God has decreed the perpetual stability of the ordinances of heaven and earth. The nature of this plan involves it, for he has bequeathed the earth for an everlasting inheritance to Christ and his friends.

No, no; whatever men may have to fear from the return of Christ to the earth (and there will be much to fear in the first instance), they will have nothing to fear in the shape of that "wreck of matter and the crash of worlds," which a well-known classical quotation has made people familiar with. There will be no catastrophe of nature to look for. The question is what will we have to look for? For what purpose does Christ appear in this world?

The answer introduces a programme in which there are several items. We will take the items in their order as revealed. The first item is what we may call a domestic incident domestic that is, in relation to Christ. He has a house to set in order, of whom Paul says (Heb. iv. 6) "whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope steadfast unto the end." I would specially commend this saying to those who may have any concern in the subject of belonging to the house of Christ "whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope steadfast unto the end." Let each one thinking himself Christ's ask himself the question. "Do I hold fast the hope?" Paul says (there is but one "hope" (Eph. iv. 4) and that we are saved by it. Rom. viii. 12. How can you hold fast the hope if you should happen not to have it? Have you hope? Investigate the question: What is the hope? Do not rest till you find it. Investigate the matter for yourselves. Listen to God's voice. We have it here in the Bible. God never intended that any class of men should come between you and him. Coming to the Scriptures, you will ascertain what is the hope, and be enabled, after embracing it, to hold it fast, and thereby acquire and retain a place in the house of Christ, which will first and specially engage the attention of Christ at his return.

Concerning the relation of Christ's coming to his house, Christ himself says, as you will recollect, in Mark xiii. 34, "The Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house and gave authority to his servants and to every man his work." In Luke xix. 15, he tells us that "having returned, he commanded those servants to be called unto him." The purpose he states in his oft-repeated statement: "I shall give to every one of you according as your work shall be." In the light of this, we understand what Paul meant in 2 Thess. ii. 1, by our Lord Jesus Christ and our gathering together unto him. It is a gathering together for the purpose stated by Paul when he says, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that we may receive in body according to that we have done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. v. 10.

The first thing, then, on Christ's arrival in the earth is the conveying of his own people to his presence for judgment. The class so convened will comprise a small class and a very large class. The small class are those of Christ's whom his coming may find alive. The large class are those of them who are in their graves, of whom Paul tells us that at this time they arise from the dead. "The dead in Christ rise first," before the living are dealt with. 1 Thess. iv. 16. This is what Christ himself said of the dead: "This is the Father's will that of all that he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day." John vi. 33. Daniel also speaks of resurrection occurring at this time: "At that time, many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," (Dan. xxi. 2,) and in Rev. xi. 18, we read of the same crisis: "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come and the time of the dead, that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst destroy them that destroy the earth."

But with regard to this resurrection, it is probable the world in general will know nothing of it, for being confined to the responsible, it is a much smaller affair that popular theology has led people to expect, and the reorganization of the dead from the dust need not leave traces of the phenomenon in the localities where it takes place. The feature of the matter of which they may become cognisant is that which is associated with the resurrection of the dead and coming after, viz: the removal of the living element of the body of Christ from the various places where they may be living at his return. This will probably be the first indication that the world will have of the presence of Christ in the earth. The removal of those who are looking for Christ will be an incident calculated to excite public alarm.

The length of time that will be occupied in the judicial inspection of the house of Christ is not revealed. It is a process that will occupy time.

The operation of the judgment is briefly defined thus: "That they may receive according to what they have done, good or bad." 2 Cor. v. 10. Acceptance before Christ and a change of nature, assimilating their bodies to the glory and incorruptibility of his own nature, is the portion awaiting those found faithful.

After a brief interval, during which the marriage of the Lamb (that is, the union of Christ and his people for an everlasting companionship) is celebrated, the curtain rises, so to speak, so far as the world is concerned. Up to this time, the world at large is unaware of what is going on. Christ's return to the earth has not at this point come within purview of the world's sight. He is in fact till now in preparation for manifestation; he is not ready for the work upon which he is to enter towards the world until he is complete in himself, and he is not complete in himself till his body is perfected and united to himself. We must remember that the Christ of the Bible is a multitudinous Christ, that is, a Christ consisting of a body and head, or by another figure, a bride and bridegroom. The head and bridegroom is the individual "Man Christ Jesus," now glorified in the heavens; the body and bride is the entire community of those who are truly his, and whom he will approve and choose and glorify in the day of his appearing. The judgment process in question is the preparation of the complete and glorious Christ community with Jesus of Nazareth in their midst as the immortal hierarchy by whom the world is to be governed in the age succeeding the tumults consequent on his appearing.

Having completed his preparation by the acceptance and physical glorification of those whom he adjudges worthy to rule the world with him, in his kingdom, the next thing is to lay the foundation of that kingdom as a political fact in the earth. How is this done? What step is taken to begin his kingdom on earth?

"ISRAEL'S SEVEN TIMES AND RESTORATION."

The Last Paper by Brother In T. Cumulativism.

J. H. COOK.

H. repeats THE RESTITUTION to political: it not meet the points in which they differ in the argument. But, as the suggestion would seem to require too much room, and too much of "Saul's armor" to be practicable, I volunteer to condense the subject, and meet, so far at least, the necessity our brother feels. There is far more to be said to set forth the subject intelligently, even to those who have become somewhat "taught of God." I was over thirty years ago nearly where he seems to be now; and so in need of primary instruction.

1. I had been taught that God had spoken on all these points—that he saw "the end from the beginning: and that his counsel would stand." So I had something and so got more. But "my fellow-laborers" were held worthy very much as the Jews were at the first advent, by a dispensation and presumptuous habit of opinion. The Jews associated the Messiah's name at once with the kingdom, deliverance, and glory; so we were forty years ago grouped altogether at the point of his second coming—as if the great and appearing day of the Lord were not as 1,000 years—the age to come—and not the Sabbatismos that remaineth for the people of God. Heb. iv. 9; Acts ii. 20; 2 Pet. iii. 8; Rev. xx. 4-7.

The Jews would have nothing—except as Jewish; so the corresponding class with us. They would have nothing except as belonging to our gospel age—which would if carried out have rent the whole moral canopy of heaven from top to bottom.

2. "Remember the days of old—when God separated the sons of Adam—he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people and Jacob the lot of his inheritance." Deut. xxxii. 8-15.

The pattern shown to Moses in the Mount unveils so far the then past. But now the saints are to take the kingdom forever, and forever and ever—for the age and age of ages to come. Dan. vii. 18; Matt. xii. 32; Eph. ii. 7; iii. 21.

This range of duration is replenished with Sabbath, temple, city, land, throne, nationality and glory—past and future; with one nomenclature and one all comprehending chronology, geography and ethnology. God's will shall be done in earth, after the original pattern from heaven. The unchanging, everlasting God, is of one mind. His gifts and calling are without repentance. Rom. xi. 26-28; Mal. iii. 6; Num. xxiii. 19.

As duration is continuance in time, so other terms are consistent as to geography, nationality, king, kingdom and city and subjects.

The Melchisedec-Priestly-Blessing to Abraham (Gen xiv.) did not divert the course of Jehovah's doings to Israel in type: so Christ and his royal priests of that order will not divert or mystify them in the anti-type. "The Scriptures cannot be broken."

3. You say truly, p. 1 col. 3, "Such facts show that the restored kingdom of Israel can not obtain in the present dispensation." You add, as if unaware of what you had said that, "The only time and place where an earthly restitution could have taken place was at Christ's riding into Jerusalem."

This ignores all prophecy and all history belonging to that period. As if "the seven times" of Israel's punishment: the fourth Kingdom of Rome, the gospel age: and the calling of the seed of promise: were all so many myths to be superceded by a theoretic supposition. Let us begin and end with God's word.

4. All Christians become "wise in their own conceit" when they ignore "this mystery that blindness in part has happened unto Israel (and apostasy to the church) till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Hence, they deny that Israel shall be saved—that such is God's covenant unto them, when he shall take away their sins—for the Father's sake. Rom. xi. 25-29. Such see not "that the casting away of them" is supplemented by "the receiving of them—life from the dead." Verse 15; Ezek. xxxvii.

5. In this mood of mind it is nothing that "Jesus did die for that nation (John xi. 49-52; xviii. 14); that his very name embraces this assurance of their salvation (Matt. i. 21); that he was exalted a Prince and a Savior to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins (Acts v. 31); and that Paul was miraculously converted "for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe on him." It is on this line that Jesus said, "Salvation is of the Jews." John iv. 22. In all prophecy, and the promise and oath to Abraham, the wide world's blessing centres there. Gen xxii. 17, 18; Psa. cii. 13-22; Isa. xxvi 6-9; Rom. xv. 8-13.

The God of hope fills us with all joy and peace in believing (this) that we may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost.

In closing, please observe—

1. That consistency in the Revealer, and the coherency of the parts revealed, holds us to this line of Jehovah's goings till we reach the triumphant consummation of "the seven times." The whole system is harmonious. The land of Promise; the tree of life; and Paradise restored, will yet answer to the word.

2. That the reason for believing in the second coming of Christ at all is the precise reason for believing that he will reign on David's throne, over the house of Jacob—under the new covenant. The apostles will sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28; Luke i. 33; xxii. 29, 30; Jer. xxxi. 31-34; Heb. viii. 8-12.

Thus "the sanctuary will be cleansed—and in their midst forevermore"—(when) "the (nations, Gentiles or) heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel." Ezek. xxxvii.

But I forbear. Faith takes "the word of the Lord." On the other hand "private interpretation" is always afloat and undeceived. One link of a chain, broken, breaks the chain. One factor changed, falsifies the whole problem. God has given us none too much gospel. The Jew, Gentile and church of God, must each fill their place.

Lovingly for truth.

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL.

HELENA M. HUNT.

For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the gathering of them be, but life from the dead? Rom. xi. 15.

When we look abroad on the world around us, and so plainly see all things pointing toward Christ's precious promise—"I will come again"—we cannot fail to be struck with one remarkable fact, and that is the gradual building up again of Jerusalem and the return of many of the Jews to their own land. What a wonderful nation the Jewish nation has been! found in every quarter of the globe, under every climate, under every form of government, wearing the indelible mask of their nationality on their features, with the same fidelity to the institutions of their fathers and the same faith in the promises of their God—and to them are those wonderful promises made which are found in Jeremiah, and where the Lord has sworn by himself because he could swear by none greater.

When we begin to compare the position of that people under the different governments of the present day and see what history tells us it was not over fifty years ago, we may in some measure understand how all things are working together, under Divine guidance to bring about the fulfillment of prophecy at a day not very far off; we see many individuals of the Jewish race rising to remarkable pre-eminence in the world; it is scarcely necessary to name the family of the Rothschilds, whose banking houses are established in almost every capital in Europe. Sir Moses Montefiore, the oldest English baronet who has done so much towards the advancement and prosperity of Jerusalem, and not least among these, Britain's late talented and esteemed Prime Minister, Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield.

It seems strange that the religious bodies around us, as a rule are blind to the more sure word of prophecy, and reject the very notion of Israel's future glory under the government of the King of Righteousness and Peace, but their blindness will no more affect the fact of the restoration than the blindness of the Jews could affect the appearance of Christ.

If by any means (says Paul speaking of his people in Rom. ix.) I may provoke to emulation them which are of my flesh, and save some of them. How naturally the tender heart of the great apostle of the Gentiles turned towards his own brethren, and how full of pathos are his words, "If the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the gathering of them be, but life from the dead?" Peter, who has been always called the apostle of the Jews, commences his first epistle thus: Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the elect strangers of the dispersion in Pontus, Asia, Galatia, etc., for twenty years he labored in Judea and Samaria preaching the gospel and afterwards spent many years in Babylon, which held the largest population of Jews next to Jerusalem, writing to them concerning the end of their faith he says, "Concerning which salvation prophets inquired and searched diligently, even they who prophesied of the grace which should come to you and searching what manner of time the spirit of Christ which was in them should signify, when it testified beforehand, the sufferings of Christ and the glory which should follow." The prophet Jeremiah tells us that when Christ returns the Jewish nation will be willing to receive him and cry, "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned, for thou art the Lord my God." "In those days saith the Lord, I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah; I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

Report of Labors.

To the dear brethren in Michigan I would say, I preached at Watson, Sep. 26, preached three discourses, baptized two obedient souls into Christ. This is a live church; many are interested who have not united with the body, as yet.

Went from this place to Brother E. Miller's neighborhood, and preached several discourses. The interest was fair. Our beloved Brother Miller has done much good work in his community. He has been a most faithful worker; but his health is failing. The Lord reward him.

Went by special invitation to Hesperia, which is a live little town. We found Sisters Bush and Rodgers, whom we had not met before. They are dear in the faith. We also met Brother Weaver for the first time. He has been identified with the Adventists for a long time I understand. He furnished me his commodious hall to preach in and besides all this he and his kind companion remembered that it takes money to pay railroad expenses, and helped me very liberally, the Lord will reward them. Here we met Brother Wm. C. Wells, who had been the means of getting us here. He has studied his way out of Babylon, and amid opposition has embraced the truth, and is preaching it. We were much pleased with his zeal and ability. May the Lord bless him in his noble work.

We found a goodly number of warm hearted friends in Hesperia, preached twelve discourses, and baptized four obedient souls into the Christ. May they ever be faithful to their trust. I expect to return to Hesperia as soon as possible.

Have just finished my labor for the present near Kalamazoo. The interest is good; baptized Brother R. Worthington; here we had the sympathy and prayers of our beloved Brother Lemmon and family. A good number expressed their determination to make the everlasting kingdom their home.

The truth is gaining ground in this State. Public sentiment is much more favorable; I was urged very hard a few days ago by one of the trustees of the Congregational society to hold some meetings in their church. He said his people were anxious to hear me, but my appointments were such I could not comply, but intend to go there as soon as possible. What we want is good earnest workers, who have the cause at heart, and can preach the gospel of the kingdom in its simplicity and leave hobbies out. It don't matter very much whether the wicked have a resurrection or not, so far as the righteous are concerned; the great question is What must I do to be saved?

The world is perishing for lack of knowledge, and our great effort should be to persuade men to accept the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation.

Literary Notices.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM. By H. V. Reed. This is a tract of the New Life Series, No. 2, consisting of 16 pages, on the much controverted subject of baptism. The position taken by the writer is, that baptism administered in the single name of Christ was the early practice. It is written in the perspicuous style of its well known author, and may be obtained by addressing him at Room 19 Times Building, Chicago, Ill. Price not given, but probably 10 cents a copy.

BERITH. God's covenant with Abraham and David as unfolded by Jesus Christ and his apostles in the proclamation of the kingdom of God, what shall I do to be saved—set forth in a short and condensed manner. By R. K. Bowles. This title page gives a definite idea of the work itself. It is a clear and concise exhibition of the faith once delivered to the saints. It is a closely printed tract of 24 pages. Price 10 cents. Address the author, Richmond, Va.

BABYLAND FOR 1882.

The only magazine in the world expressly for babies. Babyland is edited by the editors of Wide Awake. And this dainty monthly, indispensible in all households where there are baby-folks, will be made more beautiful for 1882 than during any year before. It will have its musical jingles and its pretty stories of tiny men and women, and its large, handsome pictures, as heretofore. And in addition, one of our best artists will draw for it a set of beautiful pictures of Child-Life on a Farm. They will be in outline, and will be very popular in the nursery for the children to draw or to color. Mrs. Clara Doty Bates will also write for it a set of twelve Nursery Poems. Babyland is printed in large type, on very heavy cream-tint paper. A Novel Offer! That all the babies in the world may know how delightful Babyland is, the publishers make the novel offer of sending the magazine, as a little congratulatory present, postage paid, and free of charge, for three months, to every baby born during 1882 whose address is sent them by the parents or friends. Babyland is only 50 cts a year. Send the address of your baby, and the addresses of your baby friends, and specimens will be sent them. D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers, Franklin St., Boston.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

This publication is widely known in America and Europe, having been before the reading world forty years, and occupying itself with the study of human nature in all its phases, including phrenology, physiognomy, ethnology, physiology, etc., together with the Science of Health, and no expense will be spared to make it the best publication for general circulation, tending always to make men better physically, mentally, and morally. Parents should read this Journal that they may better know how to govern and train their children. Young people should read the Journal that they may make the most of themselves. To each subscriber is given the Phrenological Bust. This bust is made of Plaster of Paris, and so lettered as to show the exact location of each of the phrenological organs. The head is nearly life-size, and very ornamental, deserving a place on the center table or mantel, in parlor, office, or study, and until recently has sold for $2. This, with the illustrated key which accompanies each bust, and the articles in the Journal on Practical Phrenology, will enable the reader to become a successful student of human nature. One of these heads should be in the hands of every one who would know "how to read character." The Journal is now published at $2 a year (having been reduced from $3), single numbers 20 cts. When the premiums are sent, 26 cts. extra must be received with each subscription to pay postage on the Journal and the expense of boxing and packing the bust, which will be sent by express, or No. 2, a smaller size, will be sent by mail post paid. To those who have the bust, or prefer it, we will send the new book premium, "Phrenological Miscellany." Send for circular. Send amount in P. O. Orders, Drafts on New York, or in Registered Letters. Postage stamps will be received. Agents wanted. Address Fowler & Wells, Publishers, 753 Broadway, New York.

NEARER HOME.

When the year has lived its summer,
And the birds have touched their strain
And fall rips for the sickle
Beside the hoary-headed grain,
All my feelings gather softly
Like sweet comforters, and —
Summer time has gone, but I am
Bringing a richer, fruitful day.

When I, standing where the summer
Lingered fondly to the last
See the fairest flowers withered
By the first chill autumn blast,
Naught of sadness fills my spirit
That my years have been so —
For each leaf that flutters —
Tells me I am nearer home.

And when sunset fades out coldly
And the harvests fields look gray,
The last golden sheaf is gathered,
The last reaper goes away,
Weary I, and sadly loitering,
Resting shadows softly come,
Touching my sore feet with healing,
As they whisper, "Nearer Home."

And my heart puts off all sadness,
Though the harvest fields are gray,
Though the golden fruits are gathered,
And the birds have flown away;
For I'm going where the flowers
Bloom in a perpetual spring,
Where the birds no more are silent,
But remain to sweet sing.

Where no frosts hath ever blighted
The bright verdure of the clime,
And the fairest fruits are gathered
Where the sun knows no decline:
And my wearied spirit resteth
In a soft and hopeful tone,
Till the stars shine down to light me
Ever onward to my home.

Abdel Tewfik Effendi, the Turkish scholar who was imprisoned in Constantinople, and afterward banished to Chio, for assisting a German missionary in translating religious books into the Turkish language. He has now escaped to England, and is about to enter the Church of England. He is related to the Sultan, and is the first Ulema converted to Christianity.

The Grand Visier of Turkey, in the name of the Sultan, has written to the Bey of Tunis demanding a large sum of money for the sustenance of the Moslem refugees from Sfax now in Constantinople, and for the losses suffered by them through the French bombardment of Sfax. The Bey is said to be much distressed about the matter, and has sent the Grand Visier's communication to the French Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The people of New Zealand are called Maori pronounced Mahrees. They were very fierce and warlike, and gave the British Government much trouble, the Maori wars being very difficult and costly. Their houses have carved posts, often hideously ugly, and their heathen idols were really horrible. The cloaks which the children wear are made of grass, often in very pretty patterns, and shed the water admirably. The natives of New Zealand have been under the gospel for many years, and are now nearly all civilized.

Dr. Matteucci remarks on the almost absolute want of water in Darfur and the consequent recent cultivation of watermelons by the natives as far as the arid soil will permit. They also utilize the Baobab tree in a curious manner. Hollowing out the huge trunk of the older trees by fire, they by some prehistoric primitive method get the hollow trunk filled with water during the rainy season, the water keeping sweet for eight months. The people of Darfur, Dr. Matteucci says, are still in a primitive, uncorrupted condition, a contrast to the Egyptian-ized natives of Kordofan.

The complete success of the expedition sent out by the Royal Geographical Society of Rome in charge of Signori Matteucci and Massari is likely to cause a disturbance among map-makers. These parties have found their way from Egypt across the continent to the Gulf of Guinea, exploring many hitherto unknown regions in the dark continent. A full account of their journey and the country and people along the way will be looked for with intense interest.

AN ARAB KINGDOM.

The Turkish Government suspects, or professes to suspect (writes our Paris correspondent) Cherif Pasha of wishing to revive the plan of his father-in-law, Sulleman, to create an Arab kingdom, formed of Egypt, Lybia, Syria and Arabia. Sulleman was the Lieutenant-General of Mehemet Ali, and indeed more, for he created his army and often furnished him with ideas. He stood out against French influence in the Levant when the restored Bourbons were at the Tuileries, but sided with it when "the citizen king" superceded them, and entered into an active and long-continued epistolary correspondence with M. Thiers. This Sulleman was a Frenchman, and had been a distinguished officer of Napoleon's Guard. He saw a great future before the Arab race, and labored after 1830 to create a Pan-Arabic monarchy to make head against the Turkish power. Lord Palmerston at one time feared he would, under the patronage of M. Thiers, realize his plan. Cherif's wife is the daughter of Sulleman, and was imbued with his ideas from childhood. She is a woman of strong character and intellect, and patriotic in the sense attached to the word by the Egyptian Arabs, who look upon her husband as one of themselves. In this time of Pan-Germanism, Pan-Slavism, Pan-Latinism, and it may be Pan-Britonism, the Porte is apprehensive of a Pan-Arab power starting suddenly up and wresting from the Sultan his Asiatic and North African territories and suzerainties. That such a state will rise is probable. His great ambition now is to obtain for the native population of Egypt the blessings of a just government, financial order, and good public schools.

THE BIBLE CORROBORATED.

Heinrich Brugsch, who unquestionably is the best Egyptologist of the times, has published "A History of Egypt under the Pharaohs," in which he embodied the results of his investigations among the Egyptian inscriptions. In the tomb of one Baba, who lived in the time of the shepherd kings, he has found a remarkable ratification of the Bible story of Joseph and the famine. The inscription in that tomb recites the praises of Baba after this fashion: "I gathered grain as were I a friend of the gods of the harvests. I was careful at the period of seed time. And when now a famine arose that lasted many years, then I distributed grain to the city in its distress." From other data Brugsch has no doubt that this refers to the seven years' famine of the Mosaic record.

WASHINGTON'S GREAT-GREAT-GRANDFATHER.

Perhaps no place in "the old country" should be of more interest to Americans than the parish of Brington, in Northamptonshire. Little Brington is about half a mile from Great Brington, and is noteworthy as containing the house formerly occupied by the ancestors of George Washington. The church of the village is an ancient structure dedicated to the Virgin, and bears the traces of many alterations and restorations. On the pavement of the chancel is a stone also bearing this inscription:

Here lieth the bodi of Lawrence Washington sonne and heire of Robert Washington of Soulgrave in the Countie of Northampton Esquier who married Margaret the Eldest daughter of William Butler of Tees in the Countie of Sussexe Esquier, who had issue by her 8 sonns and 9 daughters, which Lawrence Deceased the 13 of December A. Dñi. 1616.

Thus that by change of choyce of this last eight Knots life to death resigns as days to night;
But as the sunne returne revives the days
So Christ shall to though turnde to dust and clay.

This Lawrence Washington was the lineal ancestor, presumably the great-great-grandfather.

Outside the Fold.

Poor, trembling lambs! Ah, who outside the fold
Has bid their stand, all weary as them not?
Dangers around them, and the bitter cold
Creeping and gnawing to thy inmost heart;
Who bids they wait till some mysterious feeling,
Them knowest not what—perchance may never Know—
Shall find them where in darkness thou art kneeling,
And fill thee with a rich and wondrous glow
Of love and faith; and change to warmth and light
The chill and darkness of thy spirit's night?

For miracles like this who bids thee wait?
Behold, "the Spirit and the Bride say, Come!"
The tender Shepherd opens wide the gate,
And in his love would lead thee gently home
Why shouldst thou wait? Long centuries ago
Thou hadst known, the Shepherd paid for thee.
Then art his own. Wouldst thou his beauty know,
Nor trust the love which yet thou canst not see?

Thou hast not learned this lesson to receive,
"More blest are they who have not, yet believe."

Wilt thou thus wait for feeling? Dost thou say,
"Faith would I love and trust, but hope is dead;
I have no faith, and without faith who may Rest in the blessing which is only shed
Upon the faithful? I must stand and wait."
Not so. The Shepherd does not ask of thee
Faith in thy faith, but only faith in Him;
And this he means in saying, "Come to me."
In light or darkness seek to do his will
And leave the work of faith to Jesus still.

Children.

No other class touches the chords of so tender a concern as do the children. What issues hang on a child's life! In the palm of the tender little hand is carried a mother's heart, a father's hopes. If the child misses the path of honor and falls into evil ways, and grows up to an evil youth, a mother's heart will go down to the grave with sorrow. What a path the child's tender feet has to tread! Through what snares, through what experiences of evil, through what perilous companionships its life must run! Who that reflects on the hopes and fears bound up with every child's life, the possibilities, alike dread and splendid, that overshadow it, but has his heart stirred with a deep and pathetic longing to do something to rescue these tender lives from the touch of harm?

The Boy Who "Don't Care."

"My son, you are wasting your time playing with that kitten. You ought to be studying your lesson. You'll get a black mark if you don't study," said Mrs. Mason.

"I don't care," replied the boy.

"You ought to care, my dear," replied the lady with a smile.

"I don't care," said James.

"Don't care' will ruin that child," said Mrs. Mason to herself. "I will teach him a lesson he will not forget."

When noon arrived her idle boy rushed into the house, shouting:

"Mother, I want my dinner."

"I don't care," replied Mrs. Mason.

James was puzzled. His mother had never treated him so before. He was silent awhile, then he spoke again:

"Mother, I want something to eat."

"I don't care," was the cool reply.

"But recess will be over, mother, and I shall starve if I don't get some dinner," urged James.

"I don't care."

This was too much for the poor boy to endure. He burst into tears. His mother said:

"My son, I want to make you feel the folly and sin of the habit you have of saying, 'I don't care.' Suppose I did not really care for you, what would you do for dinner, clothing, for a nice home and education? I hope, therefore, you will cease saying, 'I don't care.'"

James never looked on this evil habit in this light before. He promised to do better, and, after receiving a piece of pie, went to school a wiser and a better boy.

The Prompt Clerk.

A young man was commencing life as a clerk. One day his employer said to him:

"Now, to-morrow that cargo of cotton must be got out and weighed, and we must have a regular account of it."

He was a young man of energy. That was the first time he had been entrusted to superintend the execution of this work. He made his arrangements over night, spoke to the men about their carts and horses, and, resolving to begin very early in the morning, he instructed the laborers to be there at half-past four o'clock. So they set to work, and the thing was done; and about ten or eleven o'clock his master came in, and seeing him sitting in the counting-house, looked very black, supposing that his commands had not been executed.

"I thought," said the master, "you were requested to get out that cargo this morning."

"It is all done," said the young man, "and here is the account of it."

He never looked behind him from that moment—never! His character was fixed; confidence was established. He was found to be the man to do the thing with promptness. He very soon came to be one that could not be spared; he was as necessary to the firm as any one of the partners. He was a religious man, and went through a life of great benevolence, and at his death was able to leave his children an ample fortune.

The Christian.

Faith.

A young mother in New Hampshire once took her little two-year-old daughter by the hand, and went out for a stroll in the green fields and pleasant pastures. They had walked quite a distance when, the child becoming weary, the mother placed her upon a large flat stone, on the top of a high wall enclosing several acres. In this field, on the farther side, unnoticed by the mother, was a spirited horse. Having left her child as she supposed in a place of safety, where she could occasionally give her a passing glance, the mother continued her ramble, until suddenly her attention was arrested by the heavy tramp and loud snorting of the horse, which was hurrying in full gallop toward the little one. A glance was sufficient to show her she could do nothing for the child; her next impulse was to hie to some place of safety, and having done this she watched with trembling and anxiety the course of the spirited animal whose speed seemed constantly accelerated until, within a few feet of her darling, he halted, and as if fearful of alarming the child, slowly advanced toward the wall. As he did so, the little one in her innocence and joy, extended her tiny arms and placed them around his neck, and the horse laid his head confidingly in her lap. She stroked and patted and hugged and kissed him, and after a few pleasant moments the gentle creature quietly returned to his feeding.

I am acquainted with that mother, and know her religious faith and daily life: but you who are not, may form some idea of the feelings of gratitude that would come welling up in her bosom as she, motionless and in silence, watched that tender scene.

Such feelings of gratitude must necessarily flow towards some being or object, created or uncreated. They could not center on the child, she only acted from some unknown impulse; neither could the horse be the recipient of her thanks, since he could not understand the results of his playful act; and as for the woman, she had been but a passive observer of the scene, and no thanks were due to herself. Her gratitude must rise naturally to him who overrules all events, the great Unseen, though not Unknown.

Now that young man who says, 'I do not believe in such things,' has he never experienced similar feelings? Is there not in the deep recesses of his soul something that keeps whispering, "There surely is a God, a first cause, a Divine Ruler?" And when great dangers are passed, is there not a warning of the better feelings, a degree of loving gratitude toward the great Unseen?

And the young woman who says, "Such things are all nonsense," why does she tremble, as in the stillness of the midnight hour her mind reaches forward to thoughts of judgment and eternity? And did she never feel gratitude to a Divine protecting power for having preserved her from danger and averting some threatening blow? Is there a human heart that beats without love and gratitude, love of existence and gratitude for its continuance?—and does not this indicate a spontaneous belief in God our Maker?

Infidelity is unnatural; it springs from seed God never planted in the soul. Implanted in our very nature is the consciousness of God as the First Cause, and a belief in his Divine providence; and this belief is one degree of faith, though it is not that perfect faith, "without which it is impossible to please him." "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." That faith we must have or we can never be saved from sin, and its guilt and its consequences. This faith in Jesus Christ works by love, purifying, renovating, and ennobling the heart and life. By it we may take hold of Christ and receive him as our Savior, Redeemer, and Lord; and casting our care upon God, submit ourselves to his holy will, and strive in every act and word and thought to fulfill his Divine requirements. Through this faith we are saved, by the grace of God; our feet are planted upon the rock; and we have life through Jesus Christ our Lord. But without faith it is impossible to please God; and then—what then?

Leeds Mercury.

How Printing Came.

Among the many curious things in the British Museum is a tablet of stone which is nearly 4,000 years old and which contains, as claimed by Mr. George Smith, a record of the flood. The ancients frequently cut inscriptions and records of important events into stones which formed their monuments and temples. The brickmakers of Assyria, Persia and Egypt had their own marks indented into the clay with the corner of a burnt brick. A stylus, sharp at one end and blunt at the other, made and erased letters in tablets of soft wax. The Romans made a kind of book by binding together a few wax-covered slips of wood.

We are much indebted for our knowledge of the past to ink. Black ink was sold like India ink, and made from lampblack and glue. The letters on the papyrus or parchment stood out in relief. Occasionally, red and green inks were employed. Emperors sometimes signed in purple ink. This was obtained from the beautiful murex, the secretion at first being yellow, the light changing it to a variable violet. Cicero says that an ink was made from the liquid which the cuttle-fish discharges to darken the water, that it may escape when pursued. Silver and gold ink beautified violet parchment. It is reported that in Algiers the iron and gallic acids of two rivers flow together, the mixture forming a veritable ink.

Nearly 3,000 years ago block-books were printed from engravings on wood, by the Chinese and other Eastern nations. The Chinese have no sign for each word, and thus several thousand words cut in wood were necessary. The Germans claim the credit of introducing printing, paper and newspapers into Europe. They early printed playcards and legends of the saints with wooden blocks and plates, perforated with novel designs. In the early part of the fifteenth century the block page was separated into letters, which permitted any arrangement similar to the 13, 15, 14 puzzle. This was a very valuable invention, and is claimed for both John Gutteuberg, of Strasburg, and Laurens Koster, of Haarlem. It is claimed in 1423, when Koster amused his children one day in the woods by cutting their names on the bark of trees, the idea came of making separate block letters, and thus the invention of movable type. Gutteuberg, his apprentice, assisted by John Faust, used a wine press in starting a printing office at Mentz in 1425. Peter Schoiffer, one of Gutteuberg's workmen, first cast metallic type, which soon cheapened books that the masses began to buy them. Manuscript books, which were often the work of a lifetime, could be owned only by the rich.

A punch and matrix or mold is required for every kind of metallic letter or character employed in printing. Few people have sufficient skill to cut in on the end of little pieces of soft steel the finely-proportioned letter. When the die is finished and hardened a single stroke stamps an impression in a small piece of copper, which is made to fit into the bottom of a little box or frame. Into the top of this mold is poured melted type metal. This is lead, mixed with antimony which hardens, and tin and a little copper which toughens. When the alloy has cooled, the mold, made in two parts, opens on a hinge, and out drops a new type. The grooves in the bottom make them stand up erect, and the nick in the side helps the compositor to tell when the type is right side up. The type wrapped in papers, each letter by itself, is now ready for sale. A font of type, or enough for printing, includes large and small capitals, small letters (more of the letter "e" than any other), italics, figures and punctuation marks, nearly 200 different characters in all.

The sizes mostly used are pica, small pica, long primer, bourgeois and brevier. Great primer was formerly used in the largest old Bibles. Type smaller than the brevier is called minion, nonpareil, agate, pearl, diamond and brilliant. Last summer I purchased in London an Oxford Bible, the smallest printed, containing 3,566,480 letters. It is a diamond type; and is only four and a half inches long, three inches wide, and about half an inch thick; the usual size of a small Testament.

The smallest book ever printed with type is a microscopic edition called "Little Dante," which was exhibited at the Paris Exhibition. Its 500 tissue pages contained the 14,233 verses of the "Divina Commedia," and the whole volumes is only to inches long, one and three-eighth inches wide, and five-eighths of an inch thick. The best magnifying-glass was used by the type setter and proof-reader. The tedious work occupied five years in its completion, and ruined the eyesight of the compositor. Raised type for the blind was invented by Abbe Valentine Haus, a Frenchman.

JUST THE DIFFERENCE.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air to every one, far and near, that can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness, as orchards in October days fill the air with perfume of ripe fruit.

Some women cling to their own homes, like the honeysuckle over the door, yet, like it, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness. There are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruit around them. There are lives that shine like star-beams, or charm the heart like songs sung upon a holy day.

How great a beauty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul so that they shall be music to some and fragrance to others, and life to all! It would be an unworthy thing to live for, to make the power which we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand with a brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long for, enjoy and appreciate.

THE [illegible]
New York [illegible]

The Sun for 1882 will make its [illegible] revolutions under the present management, as always, for all, but not [illegible] greedy, contented and unhappy, [illegible] and democratic, depraved and virtuous, great and obscure. The Sun's light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but its moral warmth is for the good, while it pours but discomfort on the [illegible] of the perpetually wicked.

The Sun of 1882 was a newspaper of a new kind. It descended many of the former, and a multitude of the [illegible] words and phrases of ancient [illegible]. It undertook to treat in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the Sun. It rose to a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modelled after the Sun. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the Sun's example.

The Sun of 1883 will be the same out-spoken, free, truthful, and independent newspaper.

As a liberal [illegible] of the means which an abundant and prosperity [illegible], we shall make it better than ever before.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Distance from Printing House Square is not the first consideration with the Sun. Whenever anything happens worth reporting, we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or in Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the Sun's political course.

The Weekly Sun, [illegible] into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence [illegible] the Weekly Sun, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Sunday does not know and rest and like the Sunday Sun, each number of which is a Cyclopedia of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good-sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little!

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the Sun.

Our terms are as follows:

For the daily Sun, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post paid, [illegible] cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of [illegible] columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, post paid.

The Sunday edition of the Sun [illegible] printed separately at $1.20 a year.

The price of the [illegible] 6½-x 9½ [illegible] clubs of ten [illegible] copy free [illegible]

EVERY [illegible]

And printed on both sides of the [illegible] in an artistic manner. The [illegible] at the head of the Editorial [illegible]

The Youths' Examiner will be [illegible] instruction of our children, in [illegible] that will not only enlarge their intellects, but elevate and strengthen and build up their moral and religious natures. Its exposition of Bible subjects will be based upon what is known as the literal view of the prophecies. The mortal nature of man, the reign of Christ and his saints on the earth, etc., etc. The doctrine of the atonement, and life only through Christ will be plainly set forth, and every effort be made to bring these great Bible truths before them in a language both simple and tasteful. Easy lessons in science and other important branches will from time to time be given, accompanied with suitable illustrations.

It contains some stories, but only those that contain practical truth and information.

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 14, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform consistency toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 20, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again. * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Va.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from pen of any modern writer, a plainer [illegible] the gospel of the Kingdom and of the [illegible] one better suited to general instruction [illegible] subject, than that which brother Jones has given in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom.'"—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 4, 1882. NO. 1.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Our subjects are so numerous and so complicated in their relationships and bearings that in order to make them clear and intelligible, we are obliged to repeat, and sum up, and classify. Our position, in time, is like the position, formerly, of the table rock, above the falls of the Niagara. It is both interesting and dangerous. The accelerating waters (the masses of people) by their eroding power, are moving us nearer to the precipitous fall—the thunders of the seething Maelstrom are uttered more distinctly. The period for calm reflection is becoming more circumscribed; and confusion of interests makes the notes of alarm less heeded.

Let us pause a moment and look at our surroundings. We are at the "time of the end;" for many are running to and fro and knowledge is increasing. Where is Michael, that great prince, and advocate of Israel? It is the time when he is to stand up to defend the cause of his downtrodden people.

It is the period of delay. God is not often in a hurry, especially when delay will save an offender; neither, when the honor of his name, and the interests of his beloved Son, are in danger can he be guilty of any degree of slackness.

The delay is exceedingly brief. "The third woe cometh quickly." This period is peculiar and interesting, because it is the theatre of many and very remarkable agents.

1. It is ushered in by a terrible national judgment, giving the period the name of "the hour of God's judgment." Royalty is shaken and one of the ten wards of Babylon falls. Upon the face of this period we recognize this noted soar.

2. It is the period when the seventh angel utters his voice before his trumpet sounds; for we have heard the events of his era proclaimed. As Noah was the warning messenger of the approaching flood; and Lot of the overthrow of the cities of the plain; so has the warning voice of the resurrection angel been distinctly uttered.

3. The voices of the three messengers, with their three distinct messages—the "age gospel," the fall of Babylon, and the denunciations of human worship, have also been heard.

4. The three unclean spirits are accomplishing their mission. With such agents and such agencies around us in the most intense state of activity, we have no reason to wonder at the extraordinary features of our times.

Let us now carry forward our temple thought. Every thought must have a name; it is only a tramp through the mind without it. The name introduces it to the memory and thereby gives it a settled habitation, we look over a varied landscape; an interesting object forms its image on the eye's retina—this image produces a thought. We name this new-born infant, Temple. This is the name of a thought, which was begotten by an image, produced by a real object. This we call a literal, real object. The word temple is the name of a literal building. Such a temple was commenced and completed by Solomon; one quite similar, though not a pattern, was begun and finished by Zerubbabel; and, centuries later, rebuilt, in part, and beautified by Herod the Great.

Again, we see a people educated for some common purpose, meeting to serve and worshipping the Divine Being; bound together as one great whole obeying certain laws given them by God. God meets with them; takes up his abode with them as he did in the literal temple. A mental image is formed; a thought springs up. We wish to name this new thought. This living, body is so similar to the other in its origin and uses, that Analogy says, Call it a temple also: and we call its name temple. Such a temple Christ the Branch is preparing to build.

We have now given two thoughts one name. For the one name, therefore, we have two thoughts; each standing for a class. Two new thoughts are formed: the one we call literal, the other figurative. We have now two classes of temples: the one literal, the other figurative. These two classes may contain thousands of individual temples with distinctive names according to location and use.

For further illustration, take the word kingdom, and analyze it.

The primitive thought, which was called kingdom, had its origin in the image of a territory under one Chief, for kingdom is compounded of king, chief, and dom, properly, master.

God said of Israel, "Ye shall be to me a kingdom of priests." Exod. xix.

"Ye shall be the elders under me, of the land which I promised to the fathers."

This original thought is the parent of an endless variety of specific thoughts. Under the generic term Nature, we have three kingdoms: the mineral, the vegetable and animal; each the offspring of the original thought, each one of these is again subdivided. Hence the name kingdom becomes the head of a numerous family of associated thoughts.

Resuming our former investigations of the word temple, many subordinate thoughts should be traced.

We have already seen the name temple giving rise to two classes of thoughts; literal, and figurative. Our remarks on the literal have been sufficiently extended, to be fully understood. [illegible] dwelling-place, whether in heaven or in earth; whether of human or of Divine construction.

The tabernacle was a temple of the Lord made by man from a Divine pattern shown Moses in the Mount. Solomon's structure was a temple of the Lord formed after the pattern of the tabernacle—enlarged to double the size; it was a full-grown tabernacle. The building erected by Zerubbabel was a temple; built principally after a Persian pattern of temples. It was inferior to Solomon's temple in five particulars. The shechi-nah was not there. Herod's structure was also a literal temple, but it was likewise inferior to that built by Solomon. Christ's body was a figurative—a metaphorical temple, since all the fulness of God was in it. At his transfiguration the shechi-nah shone through. The people of God individually are the temple of the Lord, since God dwells in each one—each person is therefore a temple, metaphorical. The people of God are collectively the temple of the Lord, since they constitute God's dwelling-place. They are also a metaphorical temple, since they assume the name of those former visible structures which God anciently made his visible abode.

So far our original temple thoughts may be fully understood. There are other associated thoughts which demand names.

1. With a literal temple we always associate ideas of form and locality. They are visible, localized structures; the location is as real and literal as the building—this position will be admitted. Is the same true of the figurative temples? The answers to this question will not be as readily given, owing to a very confusion of thoughts. It is asked, Can a figurative building have a literal location? Can it have any other? Christ's body was a figurative temple; had he not a literal dwelling-place? He made his visible home in whatever place his official work called him. Christians individually have literal homes like others. In their collective forms they are still, as congregations, in possession of literal localities. The bodies of the people of God are as literal, and therefore as visible, as those of the world; yet as a body of believers, they are a temple of the Lord. Wherever they meet to worship God they are a figurative temple, but literal persons. This figurative temple, the church, connotes [illegible] separated from the literal persons that form the congregation. Let us illustrate the idea.

It is said, "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." Isa. xxviii. 16.

This stone is Christ, and consequently, it is a figurative stone, and it is the foundation of that temple of the Lord, which shall be built by Christ the Branch. But the temple, though figurative, has a literal location. Zion. The temple is not Zion, but it is erected on Mount Zion. Modern churches do not use the form of sound words when they call their denominations, Our beloved Zion.

Again it is said, "And the stone that smote the image, became a great mountain and filled the whole earth." Dan. ii. 35.

Here are three names—stone, mountain, earth. The stone increased to a mountain. Stone, and mountain (kingdom) are symbols. The location (earth) is literal. This we learn from the image itself. It was composed of four monarchies whose locations were the earth. The promise to Abraham and his seed was a land as well as blessings. We are all begotten by the Spirit, and born of the same; but, does this birth annihilate our literal bodies, so that they will not partake of the literality of Christ's resurrection body? John says that "we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Christ in the body, ate, conversed, walked, and exhibited all the attributes of a literal person; and dwelt on the earth forty days, conversing about matter relative to his future kingdom. His return among other things is to subdue, reign over and on the earth. His saints (his family as joint heirs) are to reign on the earth with him. The figure does not connect [illegible] dwelling-place, whether in heaven or in earth; whether of human or of Divine construction.

The fact that Christ is the second or last Adam allows no other interpretation.

How, then, is the church, or the congregation a spiritual or metaphorical temple?

Because it is composed of living stones, dressed and laid up by the Spirit, not by human might, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of hosts." Zech. iv. 6.

But, is it not said that we shall offer up spiritual sacrifices?

True; but the sacrifices are spiritual, not those that offer them. The Spirit prepares us, real, literal beings, to offer sacrifices. It does not teach that spiritual beings of our race, but divested of all flesh and bones, (unlike Christ) shall offer up invisible, airy sacrifices in a mystical temple on a mystical earth. They will be the free offerings of a real person purified by Christ's blood.

The living stone, which is the foundation and top corner stone of this future, new temple of the Lord, was to be laid in Zion.

Why fix its foundation in Zion? Why call its name Zion as to its location?

The place, where this new temple is erected, Why is it called Zion, rather than any other name?

There is always a primary reason why a place is called by one name rather than by another. It is interesting to trace the origin of names.

A mountain took the name of Zion, (Hebrew—צִיּוֹן—tsi-yon) dry land, beacon—a dry beacon. It was adjacent to Mount Moriah, of which, (Zion) Morish was said by some authors to be a part; hence they say:

"Mount Zion, where the city and temple of God stood, and where the tribes of Israel went up continually to serve him, and receive his Divine instruction."—Roy's Hebrew Lexicon.

It is called the mountain of the Lord's house.

"But in the last days it shall come to pass (that) the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top (overlopping) the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we shall walk in his paths: for the law shall go out of (out of) Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Micah iv. 1, 2.

Zion is the watch tower of the kingdom of Messiah. Verse 8.

"And thou O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem."

"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion." Psa. xlviii. 2.

"Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."

John sees the Lamb stand on Mount Zion (Sion) and with him a hundred and forty (and) four thousand, having his (Christ's) Father's name written in their foreheads. Rev. xiv. 1.

The Bible authorizes the following conclusions:

1. There was, in ancient times one Mount Zion, the great seat of the line of typical kings.

2. Its future will be infinitely more glorious than its past; for,

a. It will be one mount, high and beautiful without a rival, the others being removed to give place to an extended plain.

b. This mount will be the location of the anti-types; the King, his throne, temple, city, the metropolis of his kingdom—to which deputations from all the earth shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. Zech. xiv. 16.

It is the centre and pinacle of the Pyramidal mountain kingdom.

THE JOYFUL FLOURISHING OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

CHARLES MOORE.

With God there is no hesitancy; all is sure, distinct, and bright with his own sunshine. Listen to some of God's words regarding his golden age:

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them (who love the Lord); and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." The curse of the earth now being removed, it shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God."

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself." Psa. l. 2-6.

O what superb grandeur and majesty is in the benevolent and merciful purposes of God to his saints.

"O rejoice with us all ye people, for this same God, is our God and judge; and we are his saints. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet. He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved."

Arise then, thou who would become a saint of the living God, and let thy light so shine that others may see thy good works, and glorify thy Father who is in secret, and God, even our God shall bless you openly. And thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name."

"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God. Great is our Lord, and of great power: his understanding is infinite. The Lord lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground. Sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving; sing praise upon the harp unto our God; for the Lord cometh to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishment upon the people, to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron, to execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all the saints.

"O love the Lord, all ye his saints, for the Lord preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer. O taste and see that the Lord is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry."

Brethren, let us take "sweet counsel together, and walk unto the house of God in company," no harm can overtake us, for we are his "peculiar people," and the hand of God doth protect us. He will send from heaven, and save us from all those who would annihilate us from the face of the earth. But we are as it were storm proof against the scoffs and abuses of the world; for we having taken upon ourselves 'the whole armor of God,' we are enabled therefore to withstand all the fiery darts of the wicked.

"Stand therefore brethren, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

Brethren, what great consolation there is in this "when the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory," and "the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away."

Brethren, the Lord is about to be exalted in Zion; and he shall fill the whole world with the grand illumination of his divine laws. As soon as his exaltation shall take place "wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of our times, for the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king, he will save us. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness, shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness shall be quietness and assurance forever.

"He shall judge the poor of the people, he will save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor."

"In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace as long as the moon endureth. All kings—that are holding dominion over men—shall fall down and worship him: all nations shall serve him."

Brethren, let us so live, that when "he who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory," and so be ever with the Lord. Amen.

OUR EXALTATION.

W. L. CROCKETT.

When you contemplate O reader the poverty of human fame, turn at once to the true riches and lasting exaltation in Christ Jesus.

Not long since the great Count Bismarck confessed his unhappiness. He confessed that he had gained his front rank in the statesmanship of the world, at the expense of tears and blood. Not his tears, not his blood, but the tears and blood of the miserable victims of his ambition. Would the humblest believer of the gospel exchange exaltations with him? Would the poorest follower of Christ exchange riches with him? Would he who embraces the hope of Israel, give his simple home life and his Bible for a life lease to the palace of a king? Life is vain. Little by little it slips away. It is a dream to many from which a terrible awakening will come. In their dreaming the "great" say—"It is mine!" But, reader, if you are a brother of Christ the apostle speaks for you—"All things are yours, present or to come."

But Bismarck is not the only great man that has in the midst of "his own" confessed a void in life, and a ceaseless heartache. Millions have confessed the same. I present only notable examples.

Sir Walter Scott who has charmed the world by his wondrous imaginative power, and his unaffected simplicity and kindness and nobleness of heart—this great man rose to an elevation of earthly fame, almost equal to that occupied by Shakspeare. He lived in romance; his home was the abode of intelligence and hospitality; yet reverses came; his mind weakened, he wandered out in search of health; he failed; he came back to his home; and there surrounded by weeping friends, by wife, by sons, by daughters, "on a glorious autumn day, with every window wide open, and the ripples of the Tweed over its pebbles distinctly audible in his room—he passed away, and his son closed and kissed his eyes."

What did this wonderful man say when face to face with death? Looking back at his life; viewing the grand work of his master genius—what were his words?

Calling his son-in-law, Mr. Lockhart, to his bed, Sir Walter Scott said—"Be a good man! Be virtuous: be religious, for nothing else can comfort you when you come to lie here."

Alas, alas, the world knows not how to be religious. Religion to it, is but a name.

Robert Burns said—

"To make a happy fireside clime
For weans and wife—
Is the true pathos and sublime
Of human life."

He could see no further. He said a truth, but not the whole truth—

"To live for God, to God, is best
That we can do—
Serve God, love man, and we are blest
Through Christ the True."

Humanity exalts the heart, but the truth lifts the life to companionship with God. Mr. Ingersoll has said that humanity is the only true religion. In his ignorance he has been forced to this, no doubt, by the sad truth—

"Man's inhumanity to man Makes countless thousands mourn."

But humanity is not all of religion—though a noble part. It embodies the second great commandment—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Yet before this was written—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy soul and with all thy strength."

Who that is wise cares for the wealth of this world to the exclusion of wealth awaiting the faithful in the kingdom of God? Here thieves break through and steal. Here are "the worm, the canker, and the grief," to blast every blossom of happiness. Not that our life is one unceasing woe. I speak comparatively, and of the ultimate end of all that partakes of decay. It is true we have life, and liberty and love, but we are not perfect in joy. Our life soon vanishes. Death tears from our hearts the forms we cherish; and liberty at best, is but a monument our foolish hearts have erected amid a million graves. We are not free in the fullest sense, yet. We are slaves to decay—and the chains of our bondage clank mournfully in our journey from the cradle to the grave.

I know we hide for a time our fetters with flowers—and our smiles for awhile push aside the wrinkles of decay—but the end must come. We cannot live always—and we would not live always where every sunbeam carries a corresponding shadow and every heart "is beating a funeral march to the grave."

Our exaltation consists in the Divine consolation, the grand certainty, of a higher and enduring state.

We are called to such honor, such a weight of glory, we cannot despair.

We go not hence saying—

"Forever and ever farewell."

No, the hope makes us from "all men most miserable"—"sons of God."

To see a gray-haired man tottering to the outstretched arms of death; falling with a curse on his lips—O no matter if that man loved and was loved, no matter if that man embodied generosity, he has so little—so little do I write—absolutely nothing—to console him for the tears he has shed, and the graves he has decked.

If you would be ready for death—above all, for the coming of Christ, make preparation now. You must hunger for righteousness, O reader, if you would be filled.

Let me illustrate the condition of one going to death without the sustaining power of the glad tidings.

A certain nobleman had a jester, to whom on one occasion he gave a staff and cautioned him to never part with it, till he met a greater fool than himself. Some time after this occurrence the nobleman fell sick. He sent for his jester and said—

"I am going on a long journey."

"Will you come back in a week?"

"No!"

"In a month?"

"No!"

"In a year?"

"No!"

"When will you come back?"

"Never!" replied the nobleman.

"What preparation have you made for so long a journey?"

"None!"

"Then," said the jester, "take back the staff you gave me. One who will go on a journey from which he never expects to return, without preparation, is a greater fool than I am!"

Reader, it is not only to make the Lord your guide for the valley of the "shadow of death," but learn speedily of that "great salvation," for behold the Bridegroom cometh. Will you appear before him with shame? or will you stand before him assured that you shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body—"made like him when you see him as he is."

Editor Restitution:

I thought I would give a brief report of my labors for the past two years. I have devoted almost my entire time in trying to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom.

My stated appointments were Tecgarden, the Island, Hamlet, and Eagle Creek; have immersed ten persons and helped to re-organize three churches. There has been a query in the minds of some why we should have to re-organize the church at Hamlet. When I came to Hamlet I found a mixed multitude in the church of immortal soul and sky kingdom and church kingdom believers. There were but two families that were sound; they were fruits of Father Logan's preaching more than twenty years ago. Hence, when I began to teach the truth on these subjects it caused a breaking up, and there was a call for a new organization. We organized with twelve members, under the name of the Church of God at Hamlet. They number twenty-five or thirty now.

At Eagle Creek we organized, have only twelve members.

I have concluded for the winter, to go to any points where there is an opening.

I expect to give a course of lectures at Grovertown next week. Any brethren wishing me to visit them can write me at Ligonier.

There is a report that has obtained some credit—that I have been allied with the Seventh Day Adventists. I wish to disabuse the minds of some on this subject. I am not in sympathy with them, never was, and never expect to be, from the fact that I have thoroughly investigated their whole system, and there are at least ten points of difference that cannot be reconciled with the truth.

I remain your brother in Christ, hoping for the restitution of all things.

The second Sunday in December I visited the brethren near Hillsburg, and spoke at that place. No one of our faith ever spoke there before, and considerable prejudice was manifest at first, but the meetings grew in interest and numbers, till at last standing room was at a premium. I received many invitations to return and think that in February I will make arrangements to go and stay a week.

That man Aaron Walker has done a great amount of teaching in that part of the country, but his followers are fast leaving him, and accepting the more perfect way of life. I returned to that point last Saturday and held meetings at Kings Corner, and at the close of the services, I united in marriage two of Brother J. A. Thurman's daughters—Rachel M. Thurman and Wm. Whitcombe, and Attarah J. Thurman and Gaban Hodgen. May the divine blessing attend them through life. Brother and Sister Thurman know how to dispense the hospitalities of life. I see a prospect to accomplish much good if we could put workmen in the field.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 4, 1882.

WITH this number we commence the Vol. for 1882. We have been listening during 1881—the first year of a decade to which the index-finger of prophetic chronology so ominously points—to the warning strokes of the alarm bell that has been heard around the world. These echoes of coming doom have confirmed the student of prophecy that we are rapidly nearing the border line of dispensations. With this conviction, while wishing all our friends and patrons a happy new year, we have solemn forebodings that the year now ushered in will be no less phenominal than the one now closed. This boasted age of progress is an age of abounding iniquity. With all its gorgeous temples and towering spires, it is, nevertheless, a terrible fact that history is repeating itself, and, like the days just before the flood, the whole world is filled with deeds of violence. How many hypocrites of to-day, who wear the Christian name, are like the Scribes and Pharisees whom the Messiah denounced as whited sepulchres. If our Lord were now upon earth he would terribly indict many of the haughty worshipers whose names are set on high, and who love the chief seats in the costly synagogues, whose god is gold, and whose pride and arrogancy could not be condoned by the contributions cast into the treasury as a peace-offering for devouring widows houses, or growing rich by oppressing the orphan and grinding the faces of poor. Like Noah it devolves on us to give the last notes of warning to a doomed world. The gospel age is near its sunset, and a night of most fearful terrors will enshroud a sinful world before the Sun of righteousness shall brighten the dawning morn of the age of restitution. It is no time now to fold hands in listless idleness and apathy. The commissioned church is doing its last work in this now closing generation of Gentile times. Soon we shall never have another opportunity to witness for Jesus. Soon the dying echoes of the last call of mercy will float off into the silences of eternity. To reach the ear of impenitency no more forever. O of what worth will the wealth, the pleasures, and the vain honors of this world be when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven? When the thrones are overturned, the sceptres broken to shivers, and when the jeweled crowns are all trampled in the dust, what will all the flaunting of bedizened royalty avail? What will the pallatial mansion, the sumptuous fare, the silks satins and fine linens, the melody of viols, and the supercilious exclusiveness of proud conceited wealthy associates, avail the rich nabob, when all the gold and silver of earth shall be no more than dust and ashes? O, brethren, as we tread the border lands of ages let us walk with footsteps of solemn circumspection, for the fashion of this world is fast passing away. Beyond the soon coming night of blackness, tempests, and untold horrors, will dawn the morning of the day of God. Though the snows of more than three-score and ten winters have whitened our temples, we may live to be transported by angels on the chariots of clouds over into the summer lands of Paradise. But should there be one more dark river to cross on this side of Eden, we will try to follow the shining footsteps of the Lord of life who has passed through the dark waters before, and in this way reach the heavenly country that lies beyond the swellings of cold Jordan. With our robes of service closely adjusted, and with girded loins we enter now upon the solemn responsibilities of another year. We shall try to watch and faithfully record the grand acts of its drama in our future numbers. Brethren, aid us by your prayers and means. It may be the last year of labor and sacrifice. Closing we say may God's blessing be with you all.

Sententious.

Holy duties should be performed with holy gladness.

The best people need afflictions for trial of their virtue. How can we exercise the grace of contentment it all things succeed well: or that of forgiveness if we have no enemies.

He understands liberty aright who makes his own depend upon that of others. True liberty does not permit the enfranchisement of one's self through the enslavement of some one else.

Speaking of the coming millennial glory of the church, and of the ministries of angels in advancing that glory the poet Bickersteth says:

Human hearts weary of sin,
Weary of warfare, weary of their woe—
Welcome with shouts the messenger of peace,
Upon the speaking mountains. Beautiful
Their steps, and harmony followed where they trod.
Forever like a crown of holy flame.
Wreathing their brows, the Pentecostal Spirit
Moved on the waters of darkness: and again,
God said, "Let there be light, and there was light."

THE NEW YEAR.

A tower sublime; a book unread;
A tree with fruit unharvested;
A path untrod, a house whose rooms
Breathe yet the heart's divine perfumes;
A landscape whose wide border lies
In silent shade 'neath silent skies;
A wondrous fountain yet unsealed;
A casket with its gifts concealed—
This is the year that for you waits,
Beyond to-morrow's mystic gates.

Editor Restitution:

It has been some time since you heard from me. I left my home in Nebraska Aug. 1, and went to Greeley County. Commenced meeting near brother Shaw's, in the Seventh Day Adventist neighborhood. We had good meetings: continuing eight days. Ten accepted the one faith.

From there we came to Clark Station, on the U. P. R. R., and stayed four days, promising to return Jan. 1. From there to Cloud Co., Kan.: held meetings at the Star Schoolhouse. Became acquainted with brother Messimore and wife, and others.

I next held meetings near Jamestown, Cloud Co. Kan., in a new field where they never heard the gospel before. At this place fourteen accepted the one faith and were baptized. Also held meetings at Clifton, Kan. Received three additions, two by recommend and one by baptism. The brethren here would like to have any of the preaching brethren who are passing stop and see them. If any come to Jamestown, inquire for O. Belden, W. W. Belden, F. K. Pearson, or B. Spyry living northeast of Jamestown five miles.

On the first of next week I shall start back to Nebraska to fill my appointment. Will be gone about four weeks, and will return to Cloud Co., Kan., where I am located.

A MENTAL MONSTROSITY.

What a New York Physician Calls Guiteau.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Dr. Samuel G. Armer, dean of the faculty of Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, says, in reference to Guiteau's condition, "that the world is full of Guiteaus —filly-balanced mental monstrosities, compounded of badly arranged intellectual forces, feeble moral faculties, and enormous self-conceit. Such people are kind of 'missing links' between a low and irresponsible animal type of brain and the supreme ideal of perfect humanity. If such persons are pronounced irresponsible for their deliberately planned purposes of murder, society has no longer any safeguard against the worst elements of its population. Compared with such characters insane people are comparatively harmless, for they are usually confined.

AT BETHLEHEM.

As we approached Bethlehem, we struck into well-cultivated fields, and the barley was ripening. Comely women passed us on the bridle-path, some of them wearing a veil like that of Ruth; which is capacious enough to hold "six measures of barley." During the harvest season the farmers sleep in the fields over night, as they did in the days of Boaz. It is said that they still retain the salutations mentioned in the Book of Ruth. "The Lord be with thee!" and "The Lord bless thee!" As we rode through several barley fields, later in the day, I noticed a most striking verification of the parable of the sower. The traveled path was so narrow that some handfuls of grain from the sower's hand must have lodged on the beaten track and been trodden under foot of men and beasts. There were several patches of rank and angry thorns, which had thoroughly "choked" out the barley. In the "good ground," which was fertilized by the wash of lime from the adjacent hills, the grain was yielding its twenty or thirty fold. * * *

Bethlehem is the most beautiful and thrifty town in modern Palestine, and it is the one in which the population is almost entirely Christian, Mussulmans are scarce in the little city of David. Not over three hundred are to be found in a population of five thousand. Most of the people belong either to the Latin or the Greek churches. German Protestants have opened a small school, with thirty or forty pupils. The Bethlehemites are an industrious folk, with a considerable Yankee skill in the manufacture of various ornaments and "notions" out of olive wood, mother-of-pearl, and coral. Some of our readers will remember the tasteful articles which they had on sale at the Philadelphia Centennial. It is said that they brought back over seventy thousand dollars in solid cash. If Palestine were under British or French rule for a single generation, there would be several more Bethlehems between Dan and Beersheba. The detestable tyranny of the Sultan is a perpetual malaria.

The sun was blazing down fiercely as we rode through the narrow streets of Bethlehem, passing several new and bright-looking buildings, to the Latin Convent. A jolly monk gave us a cordial reception, permitted us to get a good rest on the divans of a long, cool apartment, and set before us a lunch of bread, fruits, honey, and a bottle of native wine, which remained unopened. Dudley Warner says that the wines in that convent are decidedly calculated to promote total abstinence.

After lunch the courteous monk led us through several passages into the choir of the celebrated Church of the Nativity. We descended by a flight of sixteen steps into the crypt, and found ourselves in the chapel, which is forty feet long, sixteen feet wide and ten feet high. The pavement and walls are of marble, and the apartment is lighted by thirty-two lamps. Upon one side of the chapel is a recess, and in its pavement is set a silver star, around which is the famous inscription, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est." The recess is brilliantly lighted with fifteen lamps. The traditional "manger" was carried away to Rome, long ago. From this gorgeous subterranean chapel the monk conducted us by an underground passage to a grotto, called the "Chapel of St. Jerome." We entered this with genuine veneration. Here that grand and devout old scholar spent about thirty years of his useful life (from about 300 A. D. to 420), and here he translated God's Word into the valuable "Vulgate" version. Among all the saints in Romish calendar, Jerome is the noblest and the saintliest.

From the crypt we ascended into the nave of the "Church of Nativity," the oldest Christian structure on the face of the globe. Built by the Emperor Constantine, about the year 330, there is strong evidence that the nave, with its eleven columns of reddish limestone and antique pavement, is a part of the original edifice. The six capitals of the columns are Corinthian, and on each one is engraved a cross. A whole chapter might be written about this delightfully venerable structure, within whose walls Baldwin the Crusader, was crowned king, on Christmas Day, A. D. 1101.

"Were you not disgusted with all that foolery of a marble-lined grotto, with its silver lamps, and smoking incense, and monkish tales?" my readers may inquire. Yes, I was disgusted with the overlaid gewgaws and monstrous impostures; but underneath that Church of the Nativity, I firmly believe that the infant Jesus was born. I believe that in some portion of that rock was the subterranean stable which witnessed the original Christmas glory. Probably Joseph and Mary lodged at the khan which stood on the ground once owned by the family of David. Justin Martyr, in the second century, says that Jesus was born in a grotto in Bethlehem. Origen confirms it. The conscientious and careful Jerome sought out the exact spot, and selected his cavern or cell so as to dwell close by the birthplace of his Lord. The tradition is unbroken, and no rival spot has ever been indicated. Bethlehem has not been besieged, and torn to fragments, and built over again and again, like poor Jerusalem; so that the weight of argument is almost overwhelmingly in favor of the site now covered by the ancient church, and I feel an assurance that last April I saw the spot on which Christianity broke from Heaven into this dark and sin-cursed world.

From the roof of the convent the outlook is glorious. To the north is David's Well, and beyond lies Jerusalem. Away to the east are the verdant fields in which the shepherds watched their flocks on that original Christmas night. The hills, the rocks, and the valleys are the same that re-echoed the angelic songs when the skies above Bethlehem were filled with celestial melody. The star hung over those very heights. The glory of the Lord shone on those limestone cliffs which we climbed that April day, and through that atmosphere floated the midnight Christmas song: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."—Theodore F. Cuyler.

THE SUMMIT OF OLIVET.

Congressman Cox's Description of the Ride Up the Mount of Olives.

We reach the summit of Olivet. Leaving for the present the old tower on the right and "ruins" near the brow of the mountain we go to the old crowning mosque. There is a sheik here, too. He is in command and levies his tribute. They all do. Near is a church to commemorate the Ascension. After our guide has embraced and kissed his sheik also we mount the dark, winding stairs of this minaret. It is called Tur. The wind blows quite cool. The view on every point is superb. It is the finest prospect about Jerusalem, as it is seen from every part of the city. So, from it all the prominent objects are visible. Below us immediately are the trim terraces, where corn is sometimes raised on ledges of the rock; but the olive trees are not plentiful but sporadic. There are enough of them even unto this day to vindicate the name of Olivet. There is a clear sky. No haze obscures the sight. The mountain is a ridge, and rises above Mount Moriah some 220 feet. The walls of the city and octagonal mosque on the Temple's right, and a few cypresses and the dark dome seen under us, through across the deep ravine. Here Jerusalem and its churches and holy places is indeed "golden" Jerusalem. From St. Stephen's to the Golden Gate, and from the Golden Gate to the southeast corner, the magnificence of the eastern walls is appreciated in all their beauty and strength. We cannot see the tombs of the bither side of the Valley of Jehosaphat, nor the multitude of flat Jewish gravestones awaiting removal when the dry bones of Ezekiel shall rattle for the judgment; but the massive masonry of the old walls shows grandly; although 100 feet of it is still concealed by piles of rubbish. The city in its four elevations, with their angles and gardens, towers and domes, stands out and up in its lights and shades. Wrap your coat about you, for it is cold on the minaret, and take your glass for the far-off eastern view. Not yet—wait. Below you, to the east, is the beginning of the "Wilderness of Judea," which no one that saw the Sahara around Damascus can mistake for a smiling land. Over white, bot hills, and over gray, verdureless vales, in involutions and convolutions, and swathed in simmering sunshine, the bleak landscape descends for miles, until it melts into the valley of the Jordan, whose course can be traced by its zone of greenery. The glare is not too great in the mid-afternoon to see the line of the valley of the dark line of the river as it enters the stark-still Dead Sea, a portion of which, like a bluish sadness in an immense sarcophagus, is discovered between the brown hills and cliffs of the intervening wilderness and the range of the horizon's verge. A few olives break the sameness of the color till the pale azure of the Dead Sea is reached by the vision. Above it is a massive wall, so remote as to seem like an exhalation, and yet so near that its shadows and ridges appear. These mountains are fifty miles away. They are the ever-bounteous mountains of Moab.

The truth is that Olivet is not a half-hour's walk, and even if the ascension were at Bethany, which is beyond Olivet, is not, an hour away. But whatever be the fact, Olivet is holy ground. It was chosen by the Savior for his most confiding utterances. Was it not here that he talked of what would befall Jerusalem, his disciples and himself? Was it not here that he spoke some of the wisest parables, and prayed and rested at evening, after turmoil and toil of the city and day? Was it not here that he agonized and gave up his own to do his Father's will? If his ascension was at Bethany, certainly he passed—even as we are now passing—over Olivet to reach Bethany.

On the summit of Olivet we find a newly-built sloister for nuns. It is built by a French Princess, Mme. Latour d'Auvergne, and is to be eventually her tomb. It is said to be the spot where our Savior taught his disciples to pray. In the inner court of the cloister is arranged on little tables the Lord's Prayer in thirty-three languages. As we enter, our Spanish pilgrims crowd the court and surround the tomb of the Princess. A life-size figure in white marble lies at full length over the sarcophagus, and is said to be a good likeness. The face and figure are those of a beautiful woman, mute and angelic in death. Sweet lavender and other flowers ornament the garden and give their aroma to the shaded walks, and all is in neat and dainty contrast with the dirt and slovenliness of the city. The Princess is absent now on a visit to France, her native country, but her workmen are perfecting her future mausoleum.

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

One by one the rain-drops fall from the clouds to the earth, and in time congregate and form the mighty ocean. One by one snow-flakes gently spread themselves upon the ground, shrouding it in a mantle of beautiful white, till their combined inertia resists the momentum of the ploughing train.

One by one the leaves of the trees shoot forth from their parent stem to cheer man with their beauty as the cold, dreary winter months give way to balmy spring; and one by one they again seek shelter and repose in some shady nook as autumn lays her chilly hands upon them.

One by one the flowers in the field and in the garden spread open their tiny buds, that we may behold the beauty and enjoy the perfume of the full-grown blossom; and one by one they, too, fade and die.

The magnificent buildings we behold as we pass along the street were erected by laying up the bricks one by one. The mighty wall around Jerusalem was built by placing those mammoth stones one by one.

Just so it is in the make-up of a precious life. Our years are numbered one by one; our days, our hours, our minutes, do not come to us in bulk, but are handed down to us one by one.

Our characters are not formed by a mass of deeds at once committed, but by deeds performed one by one. We are all aware that this is only a probationary state, in which we are preparing for a future and an eternal one. According to our manner of life here will be our condition in that future state. The judgment passed upon us at the last day will be with reference to our life as a whole, but that life, let us remember, is made up of the actions of each individual day. "If we take care of the dimes, the dollars will take care of themselves," so if we make right use of the days, the year's actions will be right, and the deeds of a lifetime will be right also.

When we, so far as possible, look into our future and consider the duties and labors, successes and misfortunes, joys and sorrows of our lives, we are on the brink of exclaiming, "This is too much for me, I can never live through it." But let us remember, dear brother and sister, that we have not to live a lifetime in a day, but only one day at a time. This is all we have to do. If every day we live this one day well, we will never be called upon to look back, when we reach the shining river, upon an ill-spent life, nor will we, with sorrow-wrung heart, look forward to a woeful hereafter.

And how shall we live this one day at a time? That is the question. Simply this is the answer: Obey the law of God, the law of man, the law of our physical being, and our consciences, and the result will be the one desired. Let us inform ourselves of the requirements of these different laws.

There two things are strictly necessary in order to live properly the to-day of our lives: We must have a strong, unquenchable desire to obey God and all subordinate lawgivers, or we never will succeed in pleasing God, which should be the one end and aim of our being. We must also get into the Spirit, so that where the written law does not point out to us our course, we may still have a pilot to guide us safely through the hidden rocks in life's ocean.

We must take the name of Jesus with us at every moment during the day; that is, we must have in view, as the grand end, or result of our every act, the honor and glory of God. This being our desire, we have his promise that he will guide us by his Holy Spirit into green pastures and beside the still waters, and also that he will be with us in the dark valley of death. Many other most precious promises, too, he has left with us, and all may be obtained, if we but seek them. And in order to do this our constant praying must be, "Nearer, my God, to thee." We must live close by the bleeding side of Jesus, and live one day at a time.—E. Hamilton.

AN IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT.

In Harper's for October, a writer who knows whereof he affirms has this to say of Mormonism:

"The men of the East should remember that once before there was an institution in this country around which there was a shield of sympathy, but there came a day at last when we had to choose which should rule, that institution or this Nation. The history of what followed is fresh in all minds and little as the masses believe it, if this monster in Utah is left to grow, there will come a time when there will be another call for volunteers; and as before, the whole country will be hillocked with graves, and the land moistened by the rain of woman's tears."

I would repeat and emphasize this warning and add: That time will soon come. Mormon theocracy, unchecked by the Government or by public sentiment, will count it self strong enough to measure swords with this Nation in another decade. Brigham Young's prophecy that in ten years he would either be President of the United States himself, or would dictate who should occupy that position, has not been fulfilled to the letter, but the power he represented has been steadily growing ever since the prophecy was uttered. Every attempt to break down this power only brings out more strongly the fact I have indicated. When Governor Sladen refused to sign and give a certificate of election to the Forty-Seventh Congress to Apostle Cannon because he was a polygamist, it was hoped that the disgrace of having a man with four wives in the highest councils of the Nation would be wiped out; but while the friends of decency and law were rejoicing over this prospect, news came from Washington that the Clerk of the House of Representatives had placed Cannon's name on the roll, thus giving him prima facie right to the seat which he has occupied eight years, to the shame of the whole American people.

When President Garfield, in his inaugural message, defined his policy in relation to Utah, the law-abiding citizens of the Territory believed that a better day was beginning to dawn, but in less than four months the assassin's bullet struck down the wise and good President from whose administration so much was hoped, and the Mormon leaders, while pretending to deplore the event, held up before their people that portion of his inaugural which related to the enforcement of the laws in Utah, and bade them remember that all who thus attempted to "persecute the saints" were destroyed by the judgments of God!

Last month two female Mormon missionaries were sent out to the Eastern States. One of them, writing home to the Mormon papers in Salt Lake, says:

"We are compelled to believe that President Arthur is not any more kindly disposed toward the Saints than President Garfield was; so now nothing remains for us but to trust in God and vindicate our cause."

According to the Mormon creed, the Lord always avenges them by slaying their enemies. If President Arthur determines to do his utmost toward compelling the Mormons to respect the laws of this country, he will become "the enemy of the Saints," and the people will be taught to expect his speedy downfall; and should harm befall him, his fate will be held up as an example of the swift judgments which overtake those who oppose this people.

The Mormons pray for the destruction of their enemies; and they pray with a great deal of faith, because, as Brigham Young used to say, instead of sitting around and waiting for the Lord to do everything, they go to work to answer their own prayers. When the Arkansas emigrants attempted to cross this Territory in '57, the Saints prayed that they might be destroyed, because they came from a State in which a Mormon elder had been killed; and they found means to compass an answer to their prayer within thirty days. The same spirit that prompted the butchery of defenseless women and little children on the bloody field of Mountain Meadows still animates the Mormon hierarchy, and those against whom their prayers are directed to-day may expect a like fate. Do your readers feel inclined to set down this statement as preposterous? Let no one ask what there is to deter Mormons from the commission of any crime to which their creed may prompt them, or their leaders incite them? No Mormon is ever punished for a murder committed in obedience to counsel. The number of religious murders in this Territory—cold-blooded assassinations, that were the direct outcome of the Mormon creed,—reaches many hundreds, and not one of the perpetrators has ever been punished. Of the fifty-eight white men engaged in the massacre of Mountain Meadows, only one has suffered the penalty of the law, and his conviction would have been impossible if the Mormon leaders had not determined to sacrifice him as the means of ensuring his silence. Men whose hands are red with blood, men who have had a part in notorious murders, occupy positions of trust and authority. Some of them draw salaries from the Treasury of the United States. All of them are so tenderly dealt with by the Government, that we can hardly blame them for their oft-repeated boast that they are above the law.—Mrs. A. G. Paddock, of Salt Lake City.

THE REAPERS.

And she went, and came, and gleaned in the fields after the reapers. Ruth ii. 3.

Who are the reapers?

There are large fields in which each one can work: we can all be reapers, and be bringing in our golden sheaves, for the time is soon coming when we will be rewarded for the work we have done.

Those who are not ready will have occasion to weep and lament, and will say, The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. The wheat will be saved and the tares will be bound together in bundles and be burned.

"Let both (the wheat and the tares) grow together until the harvest, and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn." Matt. xiii. 30.

To the young brethren and sisters just starting in the right path I would say, be faithful, and let us all live right, that we may meet in the kingdom where there will be no more parting nor sorrow.

There are temptations on every side and we will have to guard ourselves. How grand and glorious it will be to receive a crown for our good work and sit at the right hand of the Father on his throne.

The preaching brethren are the great reapers, but there are so few of them now who are devoting their entire time to preaching, and there are very few young brethren, in fact none, that I can think of, who are preparing themselves for the ministry, so we should be at work. My father has been almost constantly away from home traveling and preaching for several years—through all kinds of weather—until this winter and part of last fall. We have moved up into Michigan on a little farm, and father will be very busy through the busy season, so he will have very little time to preach only in the winter. The older preachers are not always going to last, but the time will not be long now to work, for the signs that mark the coming of our blessed Redeemer are fast increasing.

I like to see letters from the dear brethren and sisters. I should like to see letters from some of the young men and women who are starting in the good cause.

I trust we will all meet in the kingdom where there will be no more parting. Your sister,

ZERAH M. HATCH.

The example of Christ is living legislation—law embodied and pictured in a perfect humanity. Not only does it exhibit every virtue, but it also enjoins it. In showing what is it enacts what ought to be. When it tells us how to live, it commands us so to live.—John Eadie.

MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE.

J. F. GELLETLY.

The path to life is overcast with shade,
And treacherous are the foes that prowl abroad,
Yet will I travel onward undismayed,
And chant to merry numbers to my God

I need no grappling weapon round about,
I crave no quiet security from harm;
Give, Lord, the eye that's keen, the heart that's stout,
Edge thou my weapon and nerve thou my arm.

Ask no shortening of my rugged way,
No fearful fetters promising retreat,
One atom from thy store of faith's enough to stay:
Clothe thou my naked breast and shoe my feet.

Through the deep darkness show me but thy light,
And though I tread along companionless,
I'll wake the startled echoes of the night
Singing thy praises in my loneliness.

A PLATFORM.

A Broad, Level, Even, Secure Platform, perfectly safe for the Believers of the one Abrahamic Faith to stand upon. We give it in a declaration of the things we must surely believe and teach.

NEWELL BOND.

1. There is one God and but one—El-Shaddai—the Almighty strong one, who only hath immortality dwelling in the light.

2. There is one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, the Mediator between God and man, who was begotten by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, was crucified, was both dead and buried, was unconscious in hades, the state of the dead, three days and three nights, from whence he arose the same identical Son of Man, exhibiting his wounds to his heart-stricken disciples; was with them forty days instructing them in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; thence he ascended to the right hand of God. Exalted a Prince and a Savior, he is to wear the triple crown—prophet, priest and king. He has filled the office of prophet, a great teacher indeed, for he taught as man never taught, he has marked out for us a perfect course with a book of discipline all-sufficient for the government of the church of God and perfecting of the saints for immortality and eternal life. He is now executing the office of high priest, the antitype of the Aaronic high priesthood, but the order being changed to that of Melchesidec, after the power of an endless life.

We must surely believe and teach that this same Jesus will so come again or in like manner (literally, personally) as he was seen to go into heaven, to complete the great salvation and restore all things spoken by the mouth of all God's holy prophets since the world began. The order and manner of his coming is plainly stated and clearly defined in the Scriptures—he comes in the clouds to the aerial or atmospheric regions of our planet, sends out his angels or messengers to gather his elect, the righteous saints are raised with the living saints changed from mortal to immortal in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air; so shall we ever be with the Lord. How long Christ and his bride will remain in the air we cannot say, for the word does not give the definite time, but there seems no good reason for believing it to be very long; their work is upon the earth to execute the judgments written, this honor have all the saints. Praise ye the Lord. They will come to Mount Zion in Jerusalem in Palestine. He will take possession of the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there will be no end, then will the law go forth from Zion, etc. Then will the kingdom be set up in its mustard seed form and roll on and increase in greatness till it becomes a great mountain (government) and fills the whole world, or the whole earth.

It will be the fifth universal kingdom, God's everlasting kingdom, and never to be given to other people—the saints will reign with Christ for an age—1000 years; they will reign on the earth yea for ever and ever. After the rapture of the saints, the Bride, the Lamb's wife, there will be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation on the earth. That time is fast approaching, and as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth—Jesus.

We believe and teach that man is mortal, naturally and inherently so; that the immortality of the soul is a heathen dogma that is not in the Bible, that there is no eternal life to any of Adam's race only through Christ and a resurrection out from among dead ones, that in Adam all die, so all in Christ will all be made alive, blessed and holy is he or they that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death will have no power. The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. That man is unconscious in the death state, and does not know anything; it is a profound sleep, where silence reigns supreme; there is no distinction between the rich and the poor, the king and the beggar—all quietly sleep together where it is dark as darkness itself, and where no light is; so says divine inspiration.

God made, the world to be inhabited; so he says, and we believe it. His purpose is plainly revealed, viz., to have it peopled with a race of holy, sinless beings, which will be accomplished through God's plan of salvation. The curse will be taken off all things, all will be restored, made new, and again bloom in Eden beauty; the devil will be destroyed and all his works.

We have carefully avoided in our platform all side issues, crotchets, hobbies, etc., that have distracted and divided the church of God.

In conclusion, let us look at a few facts as they stare us in the face—for forty years, since the cry has been made "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," have we been divided with these side issues, and to-day we are no nearer a unity of belief than when we first embraced the belief that Christ was soon to appear in beauty and glory. Do we realize to what a disadvantage we present ourselves before an apostate church and an infidel world? Dear brethren, if you have not felt the fearful effects of the diversity of theories held by us, the writer has. A house divided cannot stand, so says the Master.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo.

To the Faithful Scattered Abroad, Greeting:

Beloved, as we see the signs thickening around us, telling us that the race is nearly run, how wise in us to see that we cast aside every weight—and those sins which most easily beset us. To each heart is known that sin, but we each one have that blessed assurance that he will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are not able to bear.

Again, we are told to count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations—evidently because by this meant is our strength tested. The strength of a vessel is never known while she continues to sail on smooth waters, but let the tempest rise and how she trembles; how soon her weak points are discovered; how soon the master seeks a port, or casts anchor. Even so may we cast anchor in the hour of present temptation, if in truth and verity we cherish that hope which we are told is as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast entering into that within the vail.

Beyond the vail of this age of trial, sorrow and care we can by the eye of faith see the glories of that age which we hope soon to see ushered in. Then to those who have through Christ obtained immortality there will be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. Then there will be no heartache to behold a "vacant chair." There will be no vacant place in the kingdom of our Lord. There will not be one missing in all that chosen blessed family. All previous foes will be as completely lost in supreme love to Christ as the light of the faintest star in the firmament is lost in the glorious brightness of the noontide. All those who attain to immortality will constitute one family all dwelling in perfect harmony—all knowing and doing the Master's will, while earth restored to Eden beauty will be their dwelling-place, not a phantom region beyond the "bounds of time and space." (Alas that so many nominally good people are content to feed on such husks.)

The Book of books tells us that we cannot serve God and mammon. We must make choice. Let us count the cost. To obtain immortality, which includes all blessedness, we must continue patiently in well doing even to the end. We must crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts. Every unholy desire must be subdued, we must bring ourselves entirely into subjection to the will of Christ and be constantly in a state of preparedness for his coming.

Though we see the world rocking with iniquity, though we see the popular churches manifestly the hold of every foul spirit—the cage of every unclean and hateful bird, we need not fear that God has forgotten his promise. Nay verily, these signs are but way-marks on our journey, telling us in accents too plain to be mistaken that the day is near, that it hasteth greatly.

Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption is nearer now than when we first believed. If we hope to be among the redeemed in the coming day we must see to it that in walk and conversation, we cast no stumbling-block in the way of any. We must search the Scriptures daily and in all things seek to know what the will of the Lord is. We cannot afford to nurse false theories however fondly cherished they may be.

The Master whom we profess to serve, once said, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me," or "He that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me."

He claims the first place in our hearts. Surely he is worthy, he gave his life for us. He brought life and immortality to light through his blessed gospel, and made it possible for us to hope for a sinless life which will ever be young, though continuing throughout the everlasting age on ages.

Your sister looking for the Just One.

New Year.

The book of the New Year is open,
Its pages are spotless and new;
And so, as each leaflet is turning,
Dear children beware what you do.

Let never a bad thought be cherished;
Keep the tongue from a whisper of guile;
And see that your faces are windows
Through which a sweet spirit shall smile.

And now, with the new book, emblazon
To write its white pages with care;
Each day is a leaflet, remember,
That is written, then turned—beware!

And if on a page you discover
At evening a spot or a scrawl,
Kneel quickly and ask the dear Savior
In mercy to cover it all.

An Honest Boy.

In a country school a large class was standing up to spell. In the lesson there was a very hard word. I put the word to the scholar at the head, and he missed it; I passed it on to the next, and the next, and so on through the whole class, till it came to the last scholar—the smallest of the class—and he spelled it right; at least, I understood him so, and he went to the head, above seventeen boys and girls, all older than himself.

I then turned round and wrote the word on the blackboard, so that all might see how it was spelled and learn it better. But no sooner had I written it than the little boy at the head cried out,

"Oh, I didn't say it so, Miss W.—; I said e instead of i," and he went to the foot, of his own accord, quicker than he had gone to the head. Was not he an honest boy? I should have always thought he spelled it right if he had not told me; but he was too honest to take any credit that did not belong to him.

Early Days.

Jesus at Nazareth.

If I were to ask my little readers what great danger the child Jesus was delivered from, most of you could tell me that Herod wished to kill him, but that he escaped out of Herod's hands. You could tell me, too, how he escaped—that God warned Joseph in a dream to take the Virgin Mary and her infant Son into Egypt, and that Joseph did as God directed him. Joseph and Mary and the Holy Child stayed in Egypt till Herod died, and then returned to their own country.

Joseph perhaps intended to live at Bethlehem, where Jesus Christ was born. But he found that a cruel son of Herod was king over Judea, and God warned him by a dream not to stay there. So he took Mary and Jesus to Nazareth, where he had lived before. It was very natural that he should wish to live where he was known and would find people ready to help him in his trade.

While Joseph was doing what he thought best, God was doing what, many years before Joseph was born, he had said he would do. The Jews despised the people that lived at Nazareth; possibly most of them were low, bad people. If Jesus went there he was sure to be despised. And when he grew up and began to teach and to preach, men did look down on him and call him contemptuously a "Nazarene!"

Ages before that happened, the prophets had foretold that Jesus would be despised; and we see their words come true. But only God could have foreseen so long before what would happen, so we know that God spake by the prophets. And this is one reason why we believe that the Bible, which contains the words of the prophets, is the word of God.

It is well for us to remember that Jesus Christ lived for many years at Nazareth among a poor and bad people. Jesus was poor as they were, but he was not bad like them. He was poor when a boy, and poor all his life. I think this teaches us that we should not despise the poor, but be kind and courteous to them. I have known children who would be quite respectful to rich people, and very rude to poor people. I have known persons almost too proud to even speak to a working man. Of course this is very silly, and wrong too.

Jesus lived for many years among bad people, but he was always pure and holy himself. If you are unfortunately in bad company, you need not follow the bad example. I know it is hard not to be led away by those who are always near us, and are going wrong themselves. But we may be sure Jesus will help us, and that he knows how to help us, for he has been in bad company himself.

I have read of a boy who was compelled to live among thieves; they tried to coax him to steal, they promised him all sorts of good things if he would steal; they threatened him with all manner of evil if he would not do as they did; they beat and starved him and ill-used him in every possible manner. But he stood firm, and would not do what he knew to be wrong; and God cared for him, and took him out of their hands.

I know a boy at school who was in a class where nearly all the boys copied their exercises and cheated in their sums, and those who did not—except himself—pretended they did, to save themselves from being persecuted. But this lad said boldly that it was wrong to copy and cheat, and he would not do it. The other boys would rub out his sums when he had done them, and teased him in all kinds of ways; but I am sure he was happier than the other lads, because he had an approving conscience, and because he was trying his best to be like the Boy Jesus.

Christmas at Bethlehem.

Bethlehem of Judea, although under Turkish dominion, is almost wholly a Christian town of about 5000 inhabitants, these Christians belonging chiefly to the Roman Catholic, Greek and Armenian Churches. There are also about two hundred Protestant converts. It is not one day that is commemorated in Bethlehem, for the Protestants and Catholics observe it on Dec. 25, the Greek Church twelve days later, and the Armenians celebrate theirs two weeks still later. Thus Bethlehem is crowded with spectators and worshippers for about four weeks, as Bethlehem is now, even as it was then, the resort of thousands of pilgrims and strangers from every quarter of the globe.

These visitors, differing from one another in ideas, manners, language and costume, have yet a certain unity in the purpose for which they have assembled. It is customary for members of the residents of Jerusalem to spend Christmas eve at Bethlehem, especially as the Roman Catholics celebrate it there with great pomp and ceremony. Those belonging to that church go as worshippers, and hundreds belonging to other creeds as spectators.

There are no vehicles of any kind in this country, so people come on horses, mules, donkeys, or camels. Numbers of people walk to Bethlehem from the Holy City—a distance of about five miles—and as we gaze down the road we see hundreds of pedestrians and equestrians in almost every imaginable costume.

The sun is shining brightly, and the fields are green; the roadside is lined with pink and white oleanders; the road has a gay appearance, for the natives are all dressed in their bright holiday costumes. We also notice a long line of horsemen. It is the Catholic Patriarch from Jerusalem. A squad of gaily attired policemen, Bedouins on their Arabian steeds, and cavalrymen, head this procession. The Patriarch, in a purple cloak, is mounted on a white horse, and a large company of bishops, priests, deacons, Jews, Turks and infidels follow, mounted on any animals they can obtain. Bethlehemites of both sexes, gaily dressed, meet this procession half-way, and salute them with songs, firing of guns, beating of drums, and tinkling of cymbals. They then head the company, and escort it into the town, and as they pass through the streets they are greeted with songs and cheers.

The Catholic, Greek and Armenian monasteries, and the great complex Church of the Nativity, are all under one roof, which covers the supposed stable cave where Christ was born. They all form a great fortress-like edifice, in front of which is a large open square that is now crowded with people of every description. The Church of the Nativity is said to have been built by the Empress Helena in the fourth century. It was destroyed in the fifth, and again restored by the Emperor Justinian in A. D. 636. It is a beautiful building of magnificent architecture.

The service here begins at midnight. The church is brilliantly lighted with thousands of wax tapers. Flowers and evergreens adorn the pillars, altars and huge chandeliers. The crowds are so intense as hardly to give one breathing-room, for the pushing, jamming and elbowing is perilous to life and limb, especially as most of the people are holding lighted tapers. It is a marvel that they do not set fire to each other.

During this grand service, which is conducted by the Jerusalem Patriarch, some monks appear dressed in sheepskins, representing the shepherds. A sound of melody bursts from the hundreds of assembled priests, singing the "Gloria in Excelsis." It is caught up by the worshippers, and for a moment the spectator is almost spellbound. This service continues till three o'clock A. M., when it is ended by a procession, in which the Patriarch carries a waxen image, in a golden crib, representing the child Christ. It is taken down into the grotto, i. e., the manger or place where it is supposed Christ was born. Gold and silver lamps are hanging all over the place, and the roof and walls are draped with crimson figured satin; the curtains are left open here and there, so as to give the spectator an opportunity to see the natural rock. A marble slab covers the floor of an arched recess, in the middle of which is set a large jasper, surrounded by a large silver star, having this inscription in Latin on its broad border: "Here Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary." The Patriarch lays the waxen image in the supposed manger. When he has finished, another hymn of praise is sung, and the bells ring out their chimes. The Patriarch turns to the priest next to him, and, embracing him; says, "Peace, peace." The priests and monks and all the worshippers do the same, and amid the chime of bells, the peal of the organ, the people disperse, wishing each other a blessed Christmas!

These are the grand ceremonies that attend the observance of Christmas night at Bethlehem, but there is very little of a spiritual character about them.

We doubt not that the simple services in our Protestant churches and Sabbath Schools, where the birth of Christ is remembered with thankful hearts and songs of praise, is more acceptable to God than all the outward pomp and parade with which the event is commemorated in other parts of the world.—*L. Dexter's Journal

1881.

The year 1881 has reached its close, and we are now able to review its leading events as connected with the whole field of human affairs. For more than seven hundred years astrologers and modern prophets have for some reason or other been making doleful predictions as to various and great calamities that would befall the inhabitants of our earth during this fateful year. The astrologers based their prophecies upon the peculiar planetary combinations that have, as we all now know, been present in the heavens during the year just closed. The two planetary conjunctions of the 19th of June and 18th of November respectively, are among the most remarkable that have ever been written down in the astronomical history. The perihelion of the four great outer planets, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, now begun and in full course of being accomplished in the near future, is an astronomical event of unusual interest, as it is said, that the same planetary combination cannot happen again for more than two thousand years. The general aspect of the planet Jupiter has been a remarkable one during the year. A brown spot, larger than the entire land surface of one continent, is one feature, and hurricane storms have been seen raging across its surface at the velocity of one hundred and fifty miles an hour. Seven or eight comets have appeared in our planetary system during the year. Unusual agitation has taken place on the surface of the sun during the year just closed. Upon our earth we have certainly had, so far as atmospheric conditions have been concerned, a phenomenal year. This much has now become historical. Our atmospheric system has evidently been surcharged with electricity, and under this condition storms of the most violent character have kept up full play throughout all parts of the world, during the year, with an unusual number of deaths and other casualties, by lightning. The clouds, in portions of this country and in the Old World, have poured down such floods of rain as to cause loss and suffering in many large districts, and even as we neared the close of the year, the Atlantic ocean has been storm-swept by such hurricane gales as have hardly ever been encountered before by the great ships that go down to sea on its surface.

On the 23rd of August a storm center of unusual violence was reported as having formed in the region of the West Indies. Within about three days this storm struck the coast of Georgia as a hurricane, and at Savannah destroyed $2,500,000 worth of property, and 238 lives were reported lost.

Since the middle of October Old England and her coasts have been visited with such violent storms as have not been felt in that country for half a century, as some of the accounts state it. There has, in the course of the year, been terrible displays of earthquake and volcanic power in portions of the world far distant from each other. The most notable of these was the destruction of Scio, on the beautiful Island of the same name, in the Grecian Archipelago. Suddenly, without a moment's warning, in the month of April the city was utterly ruined by one of the most violent earthquakes that has ever been recorded.

We give the following from the New York Sun in reference to this matter:

Among the remarkable things for which 1881 will be remembered are its earthquakes. Not since the memorable years of 1811 and 1812 has there been such a wide circle of terrestrial disturbance as now exists. Seventy years ago nearly the whole Western Hemisphere trembled under the strain of internal commotion. But the area in which the earthquakes were felt was bounded by the two great oceans, and neither Europe nor Asia suffered to any great extent. The present area of commotion seems to have no limits. Reports of violent earthquakes have for many months past come from every quarter of the globe. The shocks that desolated Chios in April rank as agents of destruction with the earthquakes which destroyed Lisbon in 1755, Riobamba in 1797, and Caracoas in 1812.

Tremendous volcanic action has been in full play during the greater part of the year in the Sandwich Islands.

The general tendency towards the prevalence of infectious and contagious diseases in all parts of the United States during the year has been remarkable. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever and malarial ailments here prevailed in portions of the country, which have heretofore been supposed to be exempt under natural laws from all visitations of this kind, and while we write this article small-pox prevails as a scourge over a large portion of the country. Large districts in Russia have been terribly scourged with diphtheria in the course of the year. What was known in past centuries in Europe and Asia as the black death plague broke out in Mesopotamia, on the Euphrates River, during the summer, and as the year closes the Asiatic cholera is said to be steadily advancing towards Europe from its old starting point. A city paper says: "The alarming spread of cholera across the water has awakened the attention of Boards of Health, and American cities should be speedily got in order for the fell destroyer." The death roll of the year will go down in history bearing two illustrious names. The Emperor of Russia, Alexander II., was assassinated on the 13th of March, and the President of the United States, James A. Garfield, received a fatal wounding at the hands of an assassin on the 2d of July and died on the 19th of September. The world's death record for this year has been a very full one.

A full record of the fires, accidents, casualties and mishaps, even of large proportion that have befallen mankind during the year would fill a volume. The terrible fires that swept whole counties in Michigan and Canada during the early fall were calamitous in the extreme.

In our country the crops of most kinds have been cut short by drouth, but we yet have an abundance for the use of our own people with a goodly amount of surplus to spare to the people of other countries. The internal commerce of our country has moved on a vast scale, steadily enlarging in volume. In our financial affairs we have maintained the highest degree of soundness. We have kept peace with all nations of the world and among ourselves, and upon the whole we have prospered as no other nation ever has.

And now we stand at the threshold of the new year 1882 with the voice of some of the prophets hard against us for the coming four years. According to these prophets we are to have under very unusual planetary influence for the two months of January and February, and then the two months following, storms, floods, storms, cyclones, plagues, famine and all the ills that humanity has ever suffered—these predictions having been made for every part of the earth. It affords us pleasure to thus give sombre hue and coloring to our review of the year just closed; but undoubtedly the remarkable and phenomenal events of the year 1881, as we have in the briefest manner herein recited them, will justify us in saying that we have now had a full presentation of the entire fulfillment of the predictions made and published to the world some seven years ago with regard to the disasters that were to fall upon the earth during the five years from 1881 to 1885 inclusive, and in what we have here said we have only been writing down the truth of history.

The Iowa State Register says: "We are all wondering what the next year will bring forth. Let it be whatever it may, in surprises, changes, calamities, and sorrows, it cannot possibly exceed the one which is just closing. And let us hope it will be far better, as easily it can be. This year has been enough in that respect to last the lifetime of all who have felt its great shocks and experienced its great sorrows."

Another exchange says of 1881: "This has been a year of horrors, and when the mortality from crime and accident and the losses by flame and flood have been summed up, it will be found that few years in the history of the world were filled with so much disaster, and so many private and public calamities."

OBITUARY.

DIED—Near Walkerton, Ind., Dec. 14, 1881, Lydia, wife of Simeon Tingly, aged 61 years, 10 months, and 22 days.

Brother and Sister Tingly were both members of Pine Creek Church. Sister Tingly fell asleep in hope of coming back to inherit the earth with the righteous. She leaves many friends to mourn her. Funeral at the Baptist Church. The writer spoke from Job xiv. 14. H. R. CARTER.

Change of Address.

Brother Daniel Howard has changed his address from Beaver Dam, Wis., to Orange City, Fla.

P. O. BOX 325.

Will brethren addressing me please be sure to write the above number of box, as there are three parties named Geo. Myers at Lanark. Any brother who has ordered books, and has not received them will please write again, and I will send them.

A FORTHCOMING BOOK.

A Treatise on the Covenants and Their Relationship.

This book discusses:

1. The immutability of God in his purposes.
2. His purposes in the creation of man, and Adam's failure as regal head.
3. The unfolding of the word SEED as announced to Adam and Eve, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
4. The terms and confirmation of the Abrahamic covenant.
5. The perpetuity of the covenant.
6. The lauded estate—its locality and boundary.
7. The non-possession of the heirs as yet. Who the heirs are and their inheritance yet future.
8. The addition of the Sinaitic. Its relation to the Abrahamic. Where given. To whom given. Its terms.
9. The unity of the law. The law of the Lord and the law of God contained in it more than the decalogue. The law of Moses and the law of God one. The decalogue was in the law of Moses.
10. The purposes of the Sabbath.
11. The limitation and the cessation of the law—Sinaitic covenant.
12. The new covenant. The covenantees. The mediatorship—who is it. Our relation to the new covenant—as prospective parts and parcels of the mediation body—to bless the covenantees and the nations.
13. Priesthood—order of Melchesidec—1. Upon the plane of flesh. 2. Upon the plane of spirit abideth eternally.
14. Royalty of Christ—Davidian covenant.
15. Twelve objections to our views upon the kingdom discussed and answered.

The manuscript for this book has been in a state of preparation for the past three years, and is now almost completed and will go into the hands of the printer in January, and ready for distribution in April or May. This will make a book of about 300 pages, and should be in the hands of every brother who is surrounded, or comes in contact with Sabbatarians, those who oppose the restoration of Israel, or probation in the ages to come.

The price of this book will be one dollar. We are now taking subscriptions to be paid when the book is delivered. We want 200 names to assist us in the expenses of the work. Send in your names to me immediately.

Poetry.

OUR FUTURE HOME.

In my Father's house are many mansions.—John xiv. 2.

But ye shall come to Mount Zion, and to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to ten thousands of angels.—Macknight's translation, Heb. xii. 22.

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. xxii. 14.

The following poetical effusion will find a response in many a sorrowing heart whose earthly home has been made desolate by the king of terrors. To us, who have seen the horrors and toil-an come for the "loved and lost," the poet sings sweet a heart-harp whose notes are weeping melodies.—Ed.

HOME.

"There is a magic in that little word,
It is a mystic circle that surrounds,
Comforts and virtues never known beyond
The hallowed limit."
—Spurtley.

There is a magic in that little word,
In that sweet little word, which we call Home.
Oh! how it soothes, like a weary bird,
In the warm hearts, and not a wing hath stirr'd
Since first it formed the purpose not to roam.

Ah, Yes, I feel the magic of its power,
Pass in an instant through my weary soul;
It presses a chord that brings me every hour,
Some thought of my dear Home, like like a flower;
Beneath the trees and shrubs on yonder knoll.

It was a sweet and quiet place of rest,
Filled like a casket with the choicest gems;
Wife, children, friends, and e'en a welcome guest,
All these were there, and all were greatly blest,
With wealth more precious still than diadems.

But the Destroyer came—and they were sent,
Slowly and singly to the silent tomb;
The old white mansion, where we all had spent,
So many days and years of calm content,
Was covered with a pall of deepest gloom.

I stood aghast, when I beheld the spot,
Which once contained all that I loved on earth;
Such perfect waste, such silence, name it not,
Such wish'ring thoughts, such memories were my lot,
That my poor bleeding heart forsook its hearth!

Oh! who could chide me if the fact were known,
That I had sought a dungeon or a cave!
And yet how vain, to hide me—I to roam!
When the world hath no such place for me, no Home,
And may be never shall, but in the grave!

But still I have a Home, not here, but there,
Amidst the haunts and marts of busy crowds!
But yonder in the high and distant sky,
Away from mortal ken, away from care,
My future home is reared above the clouds.

It is a holy place—a grand and gorgeous home!
A palace built by God Himself of old!
The gates are pearls, each gate one pearl alone,
The walls around are very precious stone,
The streets are gold—yes, all the city's gold!

No more is there, no eve, no long, dark night,
But day, day, day, beams ever on its ways
And tho' no sun, no moon, no stars give light,
To that fair home, so fair and wondrous bright,
"The Lamb is light," his glory makes the day!

O'er that bright blessed home, no cloud shall fly,
No gloom, no change, no rain o'er can it know!
There not as now, will loved ones droop and die,
There not, as now, will friends be doomed to cry
The bitter tears that from the heart-streams flow.

There we shall see, and set each other plain,
Just as we were in time, or days of yore;
There we shall greet each other, yet again,
And have no sickness, death or woe or pain,
To mar the joy, that we shall part no more.

There we shall live, and never, never know
Hunger, nor thirst, nor cold, nor nakedness;
There we shall put on garments white as snow,
There drink the living waters, all aglow,
And eat of fruits that their life's endlessness.

There we shall serve and never feel decay,
In life, or limb, or mind, or memory!
There we shall dwell, in bodies not of clay,
Nor yet in houses, made to waste away,
But in immortal forms immortal be.

There we shall rest, and resting always gaze
On things eternal, full of grace and love;
There we shall form one band of priests to raise
With golden harp, one glorious song of praise,
To him who fills the throne with God above.

Oh, clasp your hands, ye saints, at this one thought,
That there is such a home for thee and me;
Where we may meet at last, when we have fought
The fight, the victory won, and there is nought
But to rejoice, and sing eternally!

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter One.

J. H. COX.

2 Tim. ii. 15, 16.—"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness."—King James' Version.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. But shun profane babblings; for they will proceed further in ungodliness."—New Version.

"Be diligent to present thyself to God an approved workman, inreproachable, rightly treating the word of truth. But profane, empty declarations persist for they further promote impiety."—Diaglott.

These three translations all agree in sentiment, although differently worded. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ," was very careful to instruct Timothy his son in the faith, to "hold fast the form of sound words." Paul's desire was that Timothy should be a successful overseer in the Church of God at Ephesus, as well as an accomplished and worthy evangelist. Hence two epistles are written by Paul to Timothy, one at Laodicea, the other at Rome, to the end that he should fully understand how to build up and edify the Church of God, and to set it in order, in an acceptable manner before God. Appointing and instructing men to take oversight of the church, and deacons also to aid in this great work; men of a given standard of character, "holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayer." Titus i. 9.

Thus we see the importance of Paul's admonition to Timothy, that he should "study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly divining the word of truth."

Timothy was a young student, and like other young men, he was subject to be led astray, by "seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." So Paul says to him, "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. . . . . Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." 1 Tim. iv. 12–15.

"But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. xiv. 15.

It should be remembered that it is the Holy Scriptures known as the Old Testament, that Paul admonished Timothy so diligently to examine, that he might be a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The same Scriptures were referred to by Jesus when he said to the Jews, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." John v. 39.

Paul also commended the Jews at Berea, for comparing his statements with these Scriptures: "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." Acts xvii. 11.

And the Old Testament Scriptures were frequently quoted by both Jesus and his apostles. These Scriptures are the oracles of God, and can be referred to as the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms. They are written in poetry and prose, and convey to man the mind of God. Peter said, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts; knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation, for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (or Spirit.) 2 Pet. i. 19–21. "The words of the Lord are pure words." Psa. xii. 6. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Psa. cxix. 105.

The words of God are not vain words, "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Isa. lv. 10, 11.

"Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." New Version: 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

At the date of Paul's admonition to Timothy, the New Testament was not compiled, and much of it was not written; therefore, these Scriptures all have reference to the Old Testament. The New Testament is a continuation of the Old, but written at a later date, and gives us a brief history of Jesus our Redeemer, who is prophesied of in the Old. "They are they which testify of me." John v. 39.

They also give us an account of the acts or doings of the apostles, how they taught the kingdom of God, and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Thus the apostles built up the Church of the Living God, and their acts stand upon record as a model for the people of God through the Christian era.

Then follows the epistles written to the churches in different locations, and to individuals, as Paul says to Timothy "that thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." New Version. 1 Tim. iii. 15.

We read again: "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ; grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and the Lord Jesus Christ. According to his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And besides all this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. 2 Pet. i. 1–9.

And last, but not least, comes the Apocalypse, which is a large addition to the prophecies of the Old Testament Scriptures. The writer thereof, was not only a seer, but was also a personal friend of Jesus Christ. So when "in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." And being moved by the Holy Spirit, he wrote the following:

"The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave him to shew unto his servants, even the things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John; who bare witness of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, even of all things that he saw. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep the things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." Rev. i. ix. 1–3.—New Version.

Thus the canon of the Holy Scriptures are made complete, and the plans of God are fully made known to man, both the Old and New Testaments are of Divine origin, and "God, having of old times spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end these days spoken unto us in his Son. Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away." Heb. i. 1, 2; ii. 1.—New Version.

The word of the Lord is so complete that it is unsafe to add to it, or to take therefrom. For Moses said, "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." Deut. iv. 2. "The words of the Lord are pure words." Psa. xii. 6. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Psa. cxix. 105.

The words of God are not vain words, "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Isa. lv. 10, 11.

"Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." New Version: 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

At the date of Paul's admonition to Timothy, the New Testament was not compiled, and much of it was not written; therefore, these Scriptures all have reference to the Old Testament. We read again: "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ; grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and the Lord Jesus Christ. According to his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. The word of the Lord is so complete that it is unsafe to add to it, or to take therefrom. For Moses said, "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." Deut. iv. 2. "The words of the Lord are pure words." Psa. xii. 6. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Psa. cxix. 105.

The words of God are not vain words, "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Isa. lv. 10, 11.

"Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." New Version: 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

At the date of Paul's admonition to Timothy, the New Testament was not compiled, and much of it was not written; therefore, these Scriptures all have reference to the Old Testament. The New Testament is a continuation of the Old, but written at a later date, and gives us a brief history of Jesus our Redeemer, who is prophesied of in the Old. "They are they which testify of me." John v. 39.

They also give us an account of the acts or doings of the apostles, how they taught the kingdom of God, and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Thus the apostles built up the Church of the Living God, and their acts stand upon record as a model for the people of God through the Christian era.

Then follows the epistles written to the churches in different locations, and here we must warn, we must entreat, must strive to show them more clearly the way.

Look at the words—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind—and, thy neighbor as thyself."

Which is the prior command? Which is the more binding of the two? Do you love God? Is all your faculties linked to him in strong and undying affections? Is your strength put forth for him? Is your mind bent upon serving him?

The question is, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?"

The answer is emphatic, Love God and love your neighbor. "This do, and thou shalt live."

"Whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected."

"Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God—neither he that loveth not his brother."

God sent his Son into the world that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. The everlasting life is here made contingent upon faith in the Son.

It is God's commandment, that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ. If we love him we will keep his commandments. It is his command that we believe the truth, that we obey the form of doctrine delivered unto us, that we yield ourselves unto God as alive from the dead, that we contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that we may love the appearing of Jesus, that we assemble with those that love God to exhort and comfort them, that in meekness, we instruct others, so that they may repent and acknowledge the truth, and that we watch and be sober, knowing that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Ah, moralist, are you safe? In striving to do unto others as you would have them do unto you, that you may be approved of God, are you doing all that he commands you to do, that you may live?

It does not seem to me that you can love your fellow man as God wants you to love them, until you first love him enough to enlist in his service. I know you cannot. You do not love them enough to give up all you have to save them. You would not work all your life, that a few of your fellows might have a part in God's everlasting kingdom. If you are not worthy of Christ, you cannot be his disciple.

It is the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that bringeth salvation. "Justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him." They who go about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. Mark that word submitted. Jesus Christ has been made our righteousness. Submitting unto God's law of adoption—being baptised into Christ—our acts are accounted righteous—we have been led by the Spirit of God and shall live.

DRESS.

They who picture Queen Victoria in their mind's eye as clad in a robe of crimson, with a gold crown upon her head, will be shocked to learn that she takes her daily drive with a black straw bonnet upon her head, and with a large shawl of small check shepherd's upon her shoulders.

Local improvements are being actively pushed in Greece at this time. The canal across the Isthmus of Corinth is in progress, and railroads are projected in all directions, one of which will traverse the nymph and satyr haunted domain of Arcadia. The shriek of the locomotive will soon silence the pipings of Pan. If these enterprises are well carried out an immense stride will have been taken by the Grauk kingdom on the road to civilization. The history of the four-mile railroad between Athens and the Pirœus is encouraging to the projectors of the new lines. Constructed originally at a cost of $1,000,000, its present capital is estimated at $40,000,000.

France and England seem quite inclined to join hands to keeping Turkey out of Egypt in the present troubles in that country. They are both afraid that the presence of the Turk as a Suzerain, as he claims to be, may give him a prestige and a foothold that shall extend beyond Egypt. It is generally understood that there is a secret treaty between them to join in preventing the Turk from interfering. They both have selfish aims in thus heading off the Turk. England desires to control Egypt with a view, in the first place, of retaining the unobstructed passage to India by way of the Suez Canal, and then to obtain the payment of her claims by the management of the Egyptian finances. France has now immense interests in all Northern Africa, which are greatly involved with the Mohammedan question. If the leader of the faithful is allowed to concentrate an army in Egypt, he might be tempted, or even forced, by the Arabs, to lend them in driving the French out of Africa, for these have now quite as much as they can do to keep their hold on Tunis, and the excitement against them is on the increase in all Central Africa, where Moslemism is in full control, with all his hate and fanaticism.

THE POPE AND HIS PLANS.

The Pope has given a farewell audience to the Prelates who came to Rome to attend the recent canonization ceremony. He said: "Union is more necessary now than ever. God's church is being attacked despite its power of bridling human passions and restraining mass in revolt. The benefits conferred by the Holy See upon the population are denied with no less madness than audacity. May Italy one day understand what she might do in behalf of liberty and rights. The Pope will not bring her danger, but prosperity." The Paris clerical journals published the following intelligence from Rome: "The question of the Pope's departure from Rome is seriously mooted. It is said that His Holiness has consulted the Bishops who came to Rome to attend the canonization ceremony with reference to his quitting the city."

METEORIC STONES.

The most famous meteoric stone mentioned in the ancient records is that which fell near Ægos Potamos, in Thrace, about the year in which Socrates was born. It is described by Plutarch in the life of Lysander, and also by the elder Pliny (Book II.), who says that it was to be seen in his time, that is, about 500 years afterward; that it was of a burned color, and that its fall was accompanied by a meteor. It has been described as of the size of two millstones, and equal in weight to a full wagon-load. This stone is mentioned in the chronicle of the Parian Marbles. Livy states that a shower of stones fell on the Alban Mount, not far distant from Rome, in the reign of Tullus Hostilius (about 654 B. C.); but, as Humboldt has pointed out, the historian probably refers to pumice ejected from that mountain, which was a volcano, and not wholly extinguished at the time. At Pessinus, in Galatia, the mother of the gods was worshipped under the form of a stone which was said to have fallen from Heaven. In consequence of a treaty with Attalus, King of Pergamus, this stone was solemnly brought to Rome by Publius Scipio Nasica, about 204 B. C., and placed in the Temple of Cybile.

JEWISH SCRIPTURE MANUSCRIPTS.

In translating the Sacred Writings, it has been a constant rule with the Jews, that whatever is considered as corrupt shall never be used, but shall be burnt, or otherwise destroyed. A book of the law, wanting but one letter, with one letter too much, or with an error in one single letter, written with anything but ink, or written on parchment made of the hide of an unclean animal, or on parchment not purposely prepared for that use, or prepared by any but Israelites, or on skins of parchment tied together with unclean strings, shall be holden to be corrupt; that no word shall be written without a line first drawn on the parchment, no word written by hears, or without having been pronounced orally by the writer; that before he writes the name of God, he shall wash his pen; that no letter shall be joined to another; and that if the blank parchment cannot be seen all around each letter, the roll shall be

THE SUN.

New York, 1883.

The Sun for 1883 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and generous, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. The Sun's light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but its genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot shot comfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The Sun of 1883 was a newspaper of a new kind. It dismissed many of the forms and a multitude of the superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report, a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the Sun. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modelled after the Sun. Every important Journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the Sun's example.

The Sun of 1883 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

By a liberal use of the means which an abundant prosperity affords, we shall make it better than ever before.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Distance from Printing House Square is not the first consideration with the Sun. Whenever anything happens worth reporting, we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or in Bohtara.

In politics we have decided opinions, and express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the Sun's political course.

The Weekly Sun gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the Weekly Sun, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the Sunday Sun, each number of which is a Golconda of miscellany literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good-sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little!

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the Sun.

Our terms are as follows:

For the daily Sun, a forty-eight sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post paid, is 65 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or including the Sunday paper, an eight page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 85 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, post paid.

The Sunday edition of the Sun is also furnished separately at $1.30 a year post paid.

The price of the Weekly Sun, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year post paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Give your children a taste for reading matter, then they will be satisfied and not be anxious to read trash. The publisher of "The Youths' Examiner" will use every endeavor to make for the children and youth an interesting paper—not one they will partially read from a sense of duty,—but something they will read because they are interested.

EVERY NUMBER ILLUSTRATED

And printed on heavy book paper, and gotten up in an artistic manner. The following is placed at the head of the Editorial columns:

"The Youths' Examiner will be devoted to the instruction of our children, in those branches that will not only valorize their intellectual faculties but strengthen and build up their moral and spiritual powers. Its exposition of Bible topics will be based upon what is known as the literal view of the prophecies. The moral sentiments, the reign of Christ and his saints on the earth, etc., etc. The doctrine of the atonement. And life only through Christ will be plainly set forth, and every effort be made to bring these great Bible truths before them in language both simple and truthful. Easy lessons in science and other important branches will from time to time be given, so as to command the notable illustrations.

It contains some stories, but only those that contain practical truth and information.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay its cost and persuade it to impart to many readers."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 16, 1879.

"It evidences a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform contrary toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 30, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—not to say that you have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy the book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again, and I like next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Va.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a greater exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'"—E. E. B., Va.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 11, 1882. NO. 2.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR,
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the translantation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a clearly belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY.

Delay of the Seventh Angel. The Two Witnesses. Testimony from Zechariah Continued. Zech. vi. Examined. Commission from Babylon. Type of the Gathering of a People from the Nations. Other Prophecies of Zechariah Considered.

No. 97.

J. F. WEETHEE.

Having finished our preliminary review of terms and their interpretations, we propose to follow these thoughts and illustrations through Zechariah, since that prophet has the key to Rev. xi. relative to the witnesses.

In Zech. iv. 2, the lamp-stand is the theocracy, church, or, more properly, the Hebrew congregation. The oil that fed the lamps, that produced the light, was the Spirit's influence. The two olive branches—the oil channels—were the two anointed ones, or their orders, viz: the priestly and regal officers. These two orders of officers were anointed to stand before God in administering the affairs of the theocracy. To these two classes of officiary the entire charge of the Hebrew commonwealth was committed. Under the Jewish administration it required one person to each office, an ecclesiastical, or priest, and a civil officer, generally a king.

At the time when this dialogue took place Joshua was the priest, and Zerubbabel was the king. But as the temple service was to continue through generations, the orders of officers became the types, rather than the two persons. The new order of the priesthood, in its type, required but one person to fill both offices, Melchisedec, the type; Christ, the anti-type. Melchisedec was a priest-king; Christ, the anti-type, is a priest-king. Under the new priesthood, the true temple of the Lord was to be built. When Joshua had placed upon his head the regal crown, Zechariah is ordered to look at him, and it is said, Behold the man whose name is the Branch; he shall sprout up out of his own place; he one of his own order; and he shall build the temple of the Lord. Joshua and Zerubbabel are constructing a house which Zerubbabel will finish, and that temple service will continue through many centuries; but that is only the shadow thrown backward from the distant future; then under Messiah, the Branch, shall be gathered the living stones collected from all ages of the world, and fitted by the Spirit, for the building of the true temple of the Lord. The Jews, under their two classes of officers, built the temple of Solomon. But a greater than Solomon is preparing the materials for the temple on Mount Zion. Solomon's temple was for the God of Israel. It was a Jewish temple; the nations were excluded from their court (of the Gentiles) was without the proper temple. No national Gentile sacrifices were offered. By the Jews themselves the heathen were treated as dogs. But, in the new, the anti-typical temple, to be erected by the Branch, living stones are gathered from all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to be built into the structure. The commands to Zechariah should have a type for that peculiar feature. So they have, as will appear from a close attention to what was required of the prophet.

The commission from Babylonia appears to have been sent to visit the returned captives, and to learn their wants, and to supply them with silver and gold. From this deputation, the gold and silver for the crown were obtained. Since, then, all the other agents and actions are typical, this delegation should likewise be typical. Without such a type, the temple of Messiah, the Branch, would fail in its pattern. That this Branch is Messiah will appear from the following:

"And he shall bear the glory,"—properly translated, "He will bear majesty"—"kingly majesty," as the regal crown typifies. See Dan. xi. 25. It is the majesty of a crown on the head. Psa. xx. 6; viii. 6; see Num. xxvii. 20.

Joshua was a high-priest, and, therefore, carried the honors of that class of officers; and by the second diadem, he carries on his head the majesty of civil dominion, he is, consequently, a type of one having all authority. Such an officer is Messiah, the Branch. He will be a priest upon his throne.

"He sits and reigns upon his throne—his own throne. He now sits a priest upon his Father's throne; he will then sit and reign upon his own throne; for he will be clothed with his supreme majesty." Zech. vi 13.

"And the counsel of peace shall be between them both" (v. 13)—between both of his offices.

It was often the case, when the royal and priestly offices were exercised by two persons, there were envyings, and strife; here peace is the result of their union. This is further proof that the Branch is Messiah.

That verse 14 is to be understood in a typical sense, as denoting clearly the Gentile dispensation, receives additional confirmation from verse 15.

"And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord."

This is given as an interpretation of the visit of the delegation from those distant countries.

The conversion of the Gentiles is clearly shown by the prophets. Compare Isa. lx. 9, 10, with other predictions. The testimony is clear that Zechariah had been shown another temple than that which was being built on Mount Moriah, and quite another builder than that of Zerubbabel, or even Solomon.

In Zech. ix. 1–9, the Jewish church is seen passing the times of Alexander the Great. Hadrach is a symbolical term for Persia, as it existed before and after Alexander's conquests. The meaning of the word Hadrach is strong—weak; strong when the prophecy was given; weak after Alexander's invasion. A symbolic term is used to avoid giving offence to a then powerful and friendly nation.

Let the reader peruse the history of Alexander's conquests in Syria, and he will see the exactness of the prophecy. Israel is traced through that terrible invasion. See Zech. ix. 1–10.

While following Israel through these afflictions, he keeps his eye on their great protector, the Branch, who was finally to build the temple of the Lord. In verse 9, he is carried down to the scenes of his first manifestation:

"Rejoice greatly, thou daughter of Zion. Shout for joy, thou daughter of Jerusalem. Behold thy king comes to thee, he is just and protected of God, afflicted and riding upon an ass, and (even) upon a foal, the son of a she ass."

Christ's humiliation is presented here in the form of a climax, it shows great humiliation for him to ride on an ass instead of a horse, or a mule, still greater humiliation, to ride on the foal, the son of a she ass. His ride into Jerusalem was a humiliating contrast to the pomp and show of Zion's former kings, or of Mahomet's ride through the heavens. The prophet is carried from Christ's humiliation to his triumphant reign of peace. His universal dominion is expressed by the words, "from sea to sea, from the river (Euphrates) to the ends of the earth, his reign is one of peace." He speaks peace to the nations; he is the Prince of peace.

To understand prophetic visions, where extended landscapes open up their varied scenery, especially those which include a part of the Messianic reign, the order of time is seldom followed, unless the scenes succeed in chronological order, as in the image and in the vision of the four beasts of Daniel. The word after, in the vision of the beast, points out a chronological sequence. In the miscellaneous landscape visions time does not fix their order.

Stand, if you please, on Bunker Hill monument, where the ocean and the distant mountains limit your vision. Should you attempt to describe the principal objects, you would find it difficult to follow any order. Your eye might now rest upon Boston and its surroundings; when, by the clearing away of smoke or fog, the distant mountain scenery appears; while thus occupied, a steamer, passing in or out of port, might again change the order of narration.

It is thus with the prophets. The sufferings of Messiah, or of his people, are usually followed, as if immediately, by their happiness and glory. The prophets are especially drawn to the scenes which surround the Messiah. Zechariah is following his people through the conquests of Alexander, when his attention is called away to Christ's (the Branch) triumphant entry into Jerusalem and to their shouts. This being over, his mind reverts to the scenes following his regular narrative. This law is seen in the verse following, (Zech. ix. 11)—"Even thou—on account of thy covenant sealed with blood, I release thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." This is resuming the regular narrative, and expresses the protection of the covenant people under Alexander's successors, in the time of the Maccabees.

In Zech. x 8–12, the prophet's attention is again carried forward to the Messianic days when the ten tribes, represented by Ephraim, are about to return.

"I will hiss to them, and collect them, (as a bee-master, by his whistle, calls his bees out of, and into their hives—Lowth, on Isa. v. 26) for I have redeemed them; and they become numerous, as they were before. And he will lift up an ensign from far, and will hiss (whistle) unto them from the ends of the earth; and behold, they shall come with speed swiftly; none shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken." Isa. v. 26, 27.

This is a future return since the prophets always make the return of the ten tribes under the Messiah; and it is also closely connected with their conversion. The ten tribes continue to spread, still more extensively among the nations than they were in the days of Zechariah.

"And I will sow them among the nations, and in distant lands will they remember, and with their children live again and return." Verse 9. See Ezek. xxxvii. 14.

"And I will bring them back out of the land of Egypt, and out of Ashur will I collect them, and to the land of Gilead and Lebanon will I bring them, and they shall find no room." Verse 10.

Now, as Ephraim stands for the ten tribes, so it is said by some expositors that Egypt and Ashur represent all the lands into which the ten tribes had been scattered. Lebanon and Gilead were formerly their territory. We have two other suggestions:

1. In the last overthrow of Jerusalem. Zech. xiv. 1, 2. They may be captive in Egypt.

2. If the English nation is Ephraim, and they, by their representatives are to return, their course will be through Egypt via the Suez Canal and the Palestine Railroad. Present movements indicate such a return. See verses 11, 12.

The prophet is now directed from the glory of Israel (a remnant) to their dark national shame; to their base ingratitude towards their Messiah. A nearer view, and one sad in the extreme, occupies the prophet's attention.

"Thus saith the Lord my God: Feed the flock of slaughter." Zech. xi. 4.

Who is commanded?

Christ in his pastoral office.

This he understood. At his first advent this was attempted. He fed the flock of slaughter (the Jewish nation). He came to his own nation—the Jews, and as a people they rejected him; yet his sheep (the few) heard his voice and followed him. Christ's first advent, his work and treatment, is the present theme of the prophet. Christ's being sent to feed the flock (the Jews) is his last effort before the great dispersion:

"And last of all he sent his Son, saying, They will reverence my Son." Flock destined to slaughter, if his Son should be rejected.

"Whose buyers (Egyptians) slay them, and do not become guilty, and whose sellers (Romans) say, The Lord be praised; and their shepherds spare them not." Verse 5.

The shepherds are the civil and ecclesiastical leaders.

"I will no longer spare the inhabitants of the land, saith the Lord, and I will give one into the power of the other, and into the power of his King; and they lay waste the land, and I will not deliver out of their hand." Verse 6.

"He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out (his) vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons." Matt. xxi. 41.

In Zech. xi. 6, two sins and calamities are named; discord among the people, and foreign oppression. The Jews said, "We have no king but Cæsar.

"So fed I (Christ) the flock of slaughter, out of sympathy with their misery, and I made me two staves, the one I named Grace, the other I named the Allied, and I fed the flock." Verse 7.

The Father had ordered him to feed the flock; and, as he came to do his Father's will, he fed the flock under the deepest sympathy, and wept over their approaching doom. His whole public life was spent in feeding his miserably starved flock. The most miserable of the sheep he fed; the fat (rulers) were for slaughter. The two staves taken by the good shepherd to ward off the two kinds of dangers, internal discord and external enemies, while he is gathering and giving food to the poor of the flock.

"And I extirpated the three shepherds in one month, and I was disgusted with them; and also their soul rebelled against me." Verse 8.

Who are these three shepherds?

They were evidently three orders of officers appointed to take care of, and feed and instruct his people. Two orders were named by Zechariah in chap. iv. 12–14. These (the two olive branches) are the two oil children, who stand before the Lord of the whole earth.

At the heads of these two orders, then, stood Joshua and Zerubbabel. These two orders were anointed, and, as witnesses, stood before God. Zechariah, likewise, at time, stood at the head of the third order making the three classes. At Christ's first advent, the priests and the Sanhedrim were in full power, and there were some prophets.

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Two.

J. B. COX.

Having spoken of the Holy Scriptures as the word of God, and shown that that word is perfect, and makes manifest the designs of God in perfect order, I ask therefore to call the attention of the reader first, to God's order in creation. Second, to His order in redemption. First creation. The psalmist in the fulness of his heart, said, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, O Lord my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honor and majesty. Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment; who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain, who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters, who maketh the clouds his chariot, who walketh upon the wings of the wind, who maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire. Who laid the foundation of the earth, that it should not be moved forever." Psa. civ. 1–5. The prophet said, "He (God) hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his understanding." Jer. li. 15.

In Genesis First Chapter we read, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." How long this was before God made man, who can tell? But when God first created the earth, it was in a chaotic state, it "was without form and void," in that state it was out of shape and useless. Therefore, unfit for habitation, it was an extensive ball or rude mass, suspended in immensity of space, "and darkness covered the face of the deep." Even here the order of God is manifest. "The spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." The psalmist gives us the meaning of the word spirit in this place. He said, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them, by the breath of his mouth, he gathered the waters of the sea together as a heap, he layeth up the deep in the storehouses." Psa. xxxiii. 6–7. Yet darkness prevailed on God commenced the light to shine out of darkness." 2 Cor. iv. 6. "Let there be light and there was light." When he looked upon it he saw "that it was good," then he "divided the light from the darkness," and day and night is then declared.

When the first period of time had passed, and the second commenced, the Almighty established the firmament, and caused the clouds to balance, bearing forth the waters in or above the atmospheric heavens. Hence it is said, "His pavillion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies." Psa. xviii. 11. So the waters were separated as God commanded, and the second period of time passed away. God spake again, and the waters under the heavens were gathered together into the place prepared for them, "Fear ye not me, saith the Lord; will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it. Jer. v. 22.

This gathering together of the waters caused the dry land to appear, "And God called the dry land Earth, and the gathering together of the waters called he seas; and God saw that it was good.

Now, by the word of the Lord, the earth began to vegetate, grass, herbs, and trees grew, all yielding seed after their kind. And the third period of time passed away. God still saw that his work was good; so he continued by his discretion; and said, "Let there be light in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years." So after the Good God said to Noah, "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." Gen. viii. 22. Hence the sun and the moon were made "to rule over the day and over the night." God "made the stars also."

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for his good: for his mercy endureth forever. . . . To him that by wisdom made the heavens: for his mercy endureth forever. To him that stretched out the earth above the waters: for his mercy endureth forever. To him that made great lights: for his mercy endureth forever. The sun to rule by day: for his mercy endureth forever. The moon and stars to rule by night: for his mercy endureth forever." Psa. cxxxvi. 1–9.

This finishes the fourth period of time. When the fifth period of time was ushered in, animate creatures are introduced into the waters, and into the atmosphere.

"And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind, and God saw that it was good, and God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let the fowl multiply in the earth."

And on the sixth day, or period of time, the work of creation was continued.

"God spake again, and said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind, and it was so. And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and God saw that it was good."

Thus we have a strong manifestation of the order of God in creation. After the beginning, he called the earth into shape, then prepared it for vegetable life, and caused the sun, moon, and stars, to have their effect in warming and lighting the earth, and created the fish of the sea, the birds of the air, the quadrupeds of the earth, and every creeping thing that moveth upon the face of the earth, before he made "man in his own image," the crowned head of the creation of God. Here is infinite wisdom. All things are prepared for the use of man, before "God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over the cattle, and over the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."

So God created man to be ruler, and he received the governorship from the highest authority, even from God himself. Now God saw that it was not good for man to be alone, so he made him a helpmeet, and God called their name Adam, in the day when they were created."

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." We also read, "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air." Thus we see, that both man and beast originate from the earth, but of man we read, that God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." We also read, "both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died." Gen. vii. 21, 22. The wise man says, when speaking of both man and beast, "They all have one breath." Eccl. iii. 19.

This shows not only that God made man of the earth, but the fowls, and beasts, and reptiles, also, and that each and all breathe the same air. But as God ordained order in creation, so of all the subordinate creatures that God made, none of them were erect, although they possess all the five senses, as seeing, touching, hearing, smelling, and tasting. But when God made man, he made him erect, right up, thus giving him commanding power over all animal creation, so when God brought the works of his hands to Adam, he gave names to all, "and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof."

So God made man in his own likeness, the impress of his own substance (whether a man in full stature or whether an infant, and cherished by the angels). "And the Lord God planted a garden, eastward in Eden (Paradise—Douay Bible); and there he put the man whom he had formed." Here is a beautiful home of God's own architecture, man is placed there, not to be idle, but "to dress it and to keep it," and to him God gave power to people the earth. God breathed the breath of lives into him. Hence the whole human family were created in Adam. Eve was bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, and God commanded them, saying, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth," So the prophet said, "Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?" Mal. ii. 10.

When God put our first parents in Paradise, he gave them the fruit of the trees of the garden, except the one in the midst of the garden, that one God reserved for a test trial. Hence he commanded them not to touch it, under the penalty of death, yet Adam and Eve in all their glory could not wear the crown of victory. God created man to be elevated to the highest standard. Hence the necessity of a trial test. If man had been so constructed that he could not disobey the law of his Maker, he would have been nothing more than a living machine. But God endowed him with power to obey or to disobey. So when that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, (Rev. xx. 2) came and reasoned with the woman in such enticing language: "Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" then politely waited for the woman's reply, and then he said to her, "Ye shall not surely die: For God doth know that in the day that ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Thus her mind becomes active, and on examination she discovers "that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave to her husband with her, and he did eat." But they were soon convinced that they had disobeyed their Maker, and their countenances fallen, and they were ashamed, and tried to hide themselves, but their works followed them, and God cursed the serpent above all cattle, and "Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception, in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground: for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Thus the serpent was cursed because he tempted, and our first parents were cursed because they yielded to the tempter, and as they were the head of the animal creation, so the animals of the lower order were cursed with them, and the ground also for their sakes.

So a great change has taken place in the condition of things very early in the history of the world, and man became the subject of death.

But for all this, the designs of God in populating the earth are not abandoned, and though Adam became the subject of sorrow and death, and God drove him out from his beautiful habitation lest he should eat of the tree of life in the midst of the garden and live forever, for "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23.

Many people have formed an idea that death was necessary in the economy of God, for if death had not entered into the world, the earth would have been so overpeopled that it could not contain its inhabitants. But God said to Eve, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." We see by this there is perfect order in all of God's arrangements, for he had intended that sufficient people should be born into the world to replenish it, but as death entered into the world, more persons are born into it, hence the places of the dead are continually kept filled. But Satan has introduced sin and death into the world, and the representatives of the human family were victimized. So, "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Rom. iii. 23. But we are not left without hope.

My next will be God's order of redemption.

It is hard to personate and act a part long; for there truth is not at the bottom nature will always be endeavoring to return, and will peep out and betray itself one time or another.

SPECIAL NOTICE!

We have on hand a large stock of the following named tracts, and wishing to use the room they occupy for other purposes, we will

GIVE THEM AWAY

to any one who wishes them to distribute, if they will pay the postage and cost of wrapping paper. We will put them up in one, two, three, and four pound packages, and send them to any address for

TEN CENTS A POUND.

One pound will contain about 480 pages, so any one may determine how many of a given kind a pound will contain, viz: One pound of 12-page tracts will contain 40 copies; 16-page tracts 30; 24-page tracts 20, etc. The following is the list:

Human Government a Failure, 4 pages, A. B. Magruder.

Christian Union, 12 pages, by Joel A. Simonds.

Which is Right? 16 pages, by T. Wilson. Shows the Bible teaching as to whether Christ's kingdom will be on the earth or in heaven.

Hope for the World, 16 pages, by Joel A. Simonds.

The King in His Beauty, 16 pages, by H. V. Reed.

The Seed of Abraham, 16 pages, by Joel A. Simonds.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? 24 pages, by T. Wilson.

The Scriptures, 24 pages, by Joel A. Simonds.

The Restitution, 32 pages, by E. Miller.

The Rich Man and Lazarus, 36 pages, by T. Wilson.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

all will stand by the paper. We hope for an increase in the number of our subscribers for the year 1882.

THOSE who have become impatient on account of not receiving The Youths' Examiner promptly will, we trust, be satisfied when they learn the delay was caused by the sickness and death of a brother of Mr. Jones, the editor and publisher.

AS SOON as we can devote the time to the subject, so as to do it the justice its importance demands, we will try to write a long contemplated article on the force of the expressions in the name, and into the name as connected with the ordinance of baptism.

PROPHETICAL periods and the signs of the times alike proclaim an impending crisis at hand in human affairs. We shall watch developments with anxious interest. Careless though the world may be, still we are living in a grand and awful time. We are in the closing years of Gentile times. Those who drop papers devoted to the exposition of the fulfillment of prophecy will do themselves a great and perhaps an irreparable injury.

LETTER FROM ARKANSAS.

EMMET, Ark.,
Sunday Morning, and New Year's Day, 1882.

Without any preaching appointment, or assembling audience, here in Southwest Arkansas, nevertheless I recollect that the readers of THE RESTITUTION will form a pleasant assembly, and after a long silence, I will cheerfully speak to them by letter.

"The best of all is, that God is with us." While to escape his notice, and elude his Spirit is impossible, it is emphatically also, most undesirable—but on the contrary his love, and goodness, and attention, and protection, and presence, and blessing, are exceedingly blessed and precious. Here, I love to say, constantly—"My faith looks up to thee." Though one be comparatively alone—yet it is far from solitude or sorrow, to be alone with God. God's love is in the sun, in the air, the quiet of nature, the brick-hearth pine-wood fire—the simple content of health and faith—in the daily supply of ordinary wants, and in the heart of hope or spirit of hopefulness which he assists his praying saints to have within them—a present treasure.

O, may this new year be fragrant and radiant and opulent with Divine loving kindness! There may be perturbations abroad—may we rest in the riches of a glorious Father's consolation and goodness! God is everything to his loyal people, light, company—refreshment, guidance, invigoration, hope, safety, and all that is true and good and joy-inspiring.

Here in Arkansas—1300 miles from home—I recall the beautiful assurance of David—"God is a sun and shield." O, the world of wealth in sunshine! Milton exclaims—"Hail, holy light! offspring of heaven, first born!" Light, light—God is light!

How often they that are heart-sick, and sad, need a sun-bath of Divine light—light gentle, generous and powerful, waking up hope, and infusing good cheer—not merely, or only, the light of knowledge—but the light of affection and sympathy. There may be those who care little for sympathy, but very to many lonely and harassed human hearts sympathy is a blessed balm—a healing sunshine. Some are coldly intellectual, others, self-occupied, and largely self-contented—but there are thousands of aching hearts, hungry for sympathy. How slow and dull we are to apprehend and appreciate the sympathy of God! In our poverty of understanding, what alleviations we lose, what advantages we miss—what contentment and pleasure we sacrifice! It is New Year day—and what fit accompaniment and sequent of its risen sun, will be a new life, new hope, new joy, and new indwelling of God.

I am very sure of one thing, I seem to be accomplishing very little good to the glory of God—but yet am I perfectly certain that God will not use our intensely earnest and incessant prayers for some great unknown good?

I praise God in these Arkansas lanes and fields and woods—and does not praise glorify him?

"He that offereth praise glorifieth me."

Let me now deliberately ask—do not the secret offerings of unseen saints (but seen of heaven) so quicken, satisfy and, if I may use such a word, encourage the Almighty, as to the great worldly calculations of men—and conduct implying a life-right and a life certainty of many years. Hence I dread the Babylonishness of costly and imposing churches.

Does the Lord delight in them?

I gravely doubt it. And though some people would say the southern styles sometimes bordered almost on shabbiness—yet there is a relief to the burdened mind in the rude and primitive simplicity of things, which if a little in excess of convenience, is nevertheless better than costly pomp and pride, that are sickening and deadly to the mind filled with the recollections of the ways of Jesus and his apostles. I know it is easy to argue for stylish and expensive architecture, and things therewith corresponding—but is there not something almost daring and ungodly in the practical philosophy of modern civilization?

Thousands glorify the age, and glorify they know not what—but glorify themselves. Is it not so?

C. COLEGROVE.

"The Regions Beyond."

It is not to baptise only, that ministers are sent to far away places where there are but few of the faith. Bro. Measmore misapprehends the friends who so kindly seconded our efforts in making arrangements for the meeting at Elk Point. Of course, the first thing in view, was that an opportunity might be presented for Mrs. V——— to go forward in the obedience of faith; but there was and is, much more to be thought of.

Providence seemed pointing that way. Others must hear the truth. Those lonely ones must have help. To come into the Christ is a great step toward salvation, but the after life must be fed and strengthened, and made perfect. It is hard to walk alone. God decrees and commands the assembling of and exhorting one another. This is only possible where there is a body of believers. To have such a body there must be preaching of the word. I am glad to make any sacrifice that God calls upon me to make for him.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

The heart has reasons that reason does not understand.

"Did you never have some golden coin,
Dear grandmamma?" said he.
"And were you even a little girl
Upon your mother's knee?"

She drew the boy to her lonely heart,
While memories came and go;
She thought of a time when life was bright,
And her moonlit eyes drooped low.

"My child, I once had golden hair;
No wrinkles marred my brow;
But time has plowed deep furrows there,
And my hair is silver now."

And she dreams of the day when his father sat
So near the rose-lane gate;
And her mind goes back to many a year
That time cannot efface.

She almost feels the dying lips
Of her own boy pride and joy,
And hears him with a trembling voice
Say, "Mother, keep my boy."

And she [illegible] the cherry lips
Of the little orphan one;
Her three score years have passed away,
While his have just begun.

The Father's Will.

Several gentlemen were visiting a French school, in which was a boy both deaf and dumb. One of them asked him who made the world. The boy took his slate and wrote the first verse of the Bible:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

He was then asked, "How do you hope to be saved?"

The child wrote, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

The last question proposed was, "How is it that God has made you deaf and dumb, while those around you can hear and speak?"

The poor boy appeared puzzled for a moment, and a suggestion of unbelief seemed to pass through his mind; but quickly recovering himself, he wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

She Saw the Doxology.

A little girl, ten years old, went up Mount Washington on horseback. She was ten then; if she lives till next summer, she will be twenty. The ladies and gentlemen of our party dismounted upon the rugged summit, where the only vegetation that dared to make an attempt to grow was a little stunted, pale-green moss, and gazed, as those lifted up from the world, into limitless space. Below, stretching outward in all directions, lay a deep, silver sea of clouds, amid which lightnings were seen to part and writhe like gilded serpents, and from which the thunder came up to the ear, peal after peal. We knew that down there rain was descending in a torrent; while on us who were above the clouds shone the sun in unobstructive and awful splendor. The eye wandered away like the dove from Noah's ark, that found no place to rest her foot.

"Well, Lucy," said her father, breaking the silence, "there is nothing to be seen, is there?"

The child caught her breath, lifted her clasped hands, and responded reverently:

"Oh, papa, I see the doxology!"

Yes, everywhere nature speaks to us and says:

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

The Last Sleep.

An illustration of the unspeakable horrors that are connected with the use of strong drink, was witnessed by a policeman, in Brooklyn. On the 19th of July, 1881, he entered the rooms of a family in a tenement house, and found there six ragged, wretched looking children, whose father and mother lay helplessly drunk upon the floor.

The eldest boy, who seemed to have a care for the distressed little ones, was walking about the room with a baby in his arms. The limp form of the babe attracted the attention of the policeman, and led him to inquire what ailed the child. The boy said it was asleep. The policeman took the lifeless form in his hands, and told the boy the child was dead.

"Taint dead!" said the boy, "I know its 'sleep, 'cause I sung it to sleep."

When the lad discovered that the babe was really dead, and that he had sung it to sleep in its last slumber, he sat down in the corner and wept. Slowly the wretched parents recovered from their stupor, but seemed hardened and unconcerned when told that their child was dead.

This is but one of the scenes of horror which greet the eyes of those whose duties lead them where intemperance and its attendant evils are found.

younger brothers and sisters and saving to protect them from the maddened blows of those who should be their natural guardians and comforters, singing their lullabys to hush the last moan of the dying as they sink into their final slumber, and weeping in anguish and bitterness of soul when death has claimed his prey!

And all this while, the authors of this destruction, they who deal forth this damning beverage, gather their children round them in their comfortable homes, surrounded with every luxury which wealth can bestow, feasting on the bread which has been torn from the pale lips of hunger and snatched from the skinny hands of poverty; and consuming in riotous living that which should save the suffering from starvation and death.

But there is a God who takes notice, who keeps the dark record of human sin and human sorrow; and in due time, he who judges in righteousness shall reward the faithful and punish the ungodly. The drunkard may not see the handwriting upon the wall that tells his doom, but it may be well for him to ponder the fate of one who was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, while Lazarus laid at his gate covered with sores and licked by the dogs! There are strange compensations in the mysterious future, and there is a solemn meaning in that word of our Savior, "Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep." Luke vi. 25.

A Talk With the Boys.

Boys, I want to talk to you, and will you be kind enough to give attention to what I have to say?

You have gone but a little way on the journey of life. Two roads are before you: one is a good road, the other is a bad one. I know that if you ever traveled much on foot or on horseback, or in a wagon, you know the difference between a good road and a bad one, and show your good sense in making choice of the better one. You can give a good reason why you prefer the one to the other. You say you can reach the place to which you are going more easily, in less time, with less exposure to accident.

As to the two roads of life most of the boys do not act so wisely. I know this, because most of the men, who once were boys, are seen on the wrong road; but these grown-up boys thought they would not always travel in this way. They also thought the two roads lay close together, and that they could and would cross over before they had gone far. But the distance between the two grows wider and wider as you travel on, and, to speak under figure, great mountains with rocky sides and yawning chasms near their lofty peaks, making it very hard, if not next to impossible, to pass from one to the other; and what is worst, very few can be induced to try; and some, like men nearly frozen to death, do not know their danger.

Now, boys, I want you to ask your parents, who have seen more of the world than you have of it:

How many who swear, how many dishonest men, how many quarrelsome men, how many liars, how many tobacco-users, and how many drunkards leave off these things at forty, fifty, sixty, seventy, or eighty years of age? and learn how much danger there is of going clear through on the bad road.

I shall continue my talk with you from time to time. I have said this much to make you think.

As I flattered the brethren of Kentucky and Tennessee that I would be on a tour through their region of country last fall, and having received invitations from several of them to visit them, would say for their satisfaction that such has been the interest for the cause of truth in this part of the habitable, that there has been demands from time to time for my services, that it has now thrown us in the winter, but if the Lord will, just as soon as the weather will permit, I will beg off from the brethren here and pay them the contemplated visit. Will let them know in good time.

THE WORK OF THY FINGERS.

S. WHITE PAINE.

Come, go with me, O thou of doubting mind!
And scrutinize the wonders we shall find.
Note the designs that from our predicate—
Both of things living, things inanimate.

First scan the mysteries of the human face,
Diversity in cast of form and face;
Search them, through all the species of creation,
For further varying shade and conformation.

Go where the earth is dressed in robes of May,
And mark, with keenest glance, her flowery way:
The traits of all her blooms—whatever their name—
From noonday's rose hue to hue of lilting flame.

Noting, severely, with a critic's eye,
How blends the pale with tints of deeper dye:
Where ends the shadow, where begins the light
That tips the crimson with its fringe of white.

And what the form and texture of the bloom
So deftly wove in Nature's secret loom;
And gazing, marvel how one foot of earth
Can give such mingling shapes and colors birth.

Gather from fields of waving golden grain:
Pluck the wild grasses decking hill and plain:
With analytic scrutiny their structures learn,
And classify each specimen in turn.

Search the primeval wood in verdant dome,
Gather its leaves and with their forms commune;
Go where you will on earth, through air and seas,
Marking, the while, the strange economies.

Leave our fair earth, with telescopic eye
Wander among the countless spheres on high;
Survey, with wondering gaze, the stars of light
That sparkle in the coronal of night—

Flashing with speed of thought their orbits round,
Without a jar in all the depths profound.
Scan the innumerous forms of beauty there,
Through years on years of unrevolving care:

Measure, compare—with all your skill renowned,
What has been seen below, above, around,
And then come back and tell us if you can,
"There is no God!" O, miserable man!

REPORT OF QUARTERLY ASSEMBLY.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God met according to announcement, near Browntown, Va. We rejoice in saying that the meeting was all that could be expected, by the close student of prophecy in this day of small things. All the brethren and sisters in attendance being of one heart and of one soul, all speaking the same things, being perfectly joined together in the same mind and the same judgment, they manifested such love and union for each other, with an humble proclamation of the word, that there was an unusual interest manifested by the people in general, so much so that the prospect is good for quite a harvest of sheaves to be soon gathered in that part of the habitable, and stored away in the Master's barn, when he comes to gather his elect from the four winds, and say to the reapers "gather the wheat into my barn," but the chaff he will burn up with unquenchable fire. May it not be so with any in that region who have so long been blessed with the gospel pool, in which they can wash and be made whole, and be numbered with the blessed in the kingdom of God.

For the good of all, on Sunday, before breaking bread, we showed that there were certain steps to be taken, according to the gospel plan, before we are worthy to participate in that sacred institution by which we show forth the death of our crucified Lord until he come, which are as follows:

1. Faith in the things of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ.

2. Repentance, and baptism in the one all-saving name for the remission of sins.

We claimed to eat and drink without these prerequisites would be eating and drinking condemnation, providing the one thus eating knew that the things thus revealed for faith were not their faith when baptized, whether in the one or three names. As for three names there never was a baptism performed in any such a formula, for the Holy Ghost never had a name, for it is an influence.

There was a precious soul present, who started with us years ago when we thought we used three names, then when we come to believe it was right to use but the one only name given whereby man shall be saved, she went in the water again, but on duly considering that without faith it is impossible to please God, she could not conscientiously break bread with us as usual. As all in the school are left to decide for themselves, so that one may not lord it over another, we asked her why she did not break bread with us. She said she was not in the faith when she was baptized. So on Monday night while the brethren were singing the farewell greeting, she with tears in her eyes, said she did not want to part with us that way, and said "I know I was not in the faith when I was baptized," so by her consent we announced that we would administer the ordinance of baptism on Tuesday, and as the sister had been in the water twice in their midst, we would protract the meeting till over Tuesday night, and give satisfaction in the light of truth why she went in the third time.

So after the solemn transaction was witnessed by quite an assembly of people late in the evening, they moved right on from the water to the meeting house, where the dear sister voluntarily took her seat in a chair in front of the stand, in the presence of a gazing multitude. Truly to the humble writer a cheering scene, from the fact that I could present her, with many others, as a living sacrifice for the truth as it is in Jesus, and knowing her case to be identical with my own, I threw myself upon the altar with sister Cooper, by stating that as it was common to tell religious experiences, I would tell mine, which was as follows: I, like the dear sister, had been in the water three times, (and that Dr. Thomas, one of the most powerful defenders of the truth that has ever lived since the days of the apostles had done likewise, but that didn't make it right; the first time I was put in the water on an old Baptist experience, which was a sealwithout a knowledge. The second time was because I became convinced that it was the apostolic practice to baptize in the one single name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and the third time because like the faithful sister, I was not ashamed to confess that the things revealed for faith was not faith with me until after I went in the water the second time, and as it is written, Without faith it is impossible to please God, I was yet out of Christ, and as we must have the faith before we can perfect it in obedience, and as repentance and baptism in the name of Jesus Christ is the obedience required, according to the form of sound words which we must hold fast unto, that we not only save ourselves but them that hear us, I was planted again in the likeness of the death of our blessed Master, in his name only, that I may also be in the likeness of his resurrection.

To show beyond doubt that the one Abrahamic faith must precede baptism I read Rom. iv., and called special attention to the inspired apostles' very pointed question, When was the faith of the father of all that believe reckoned to him for righteousness? in circumcision or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision but in uncircumcision, and circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised, so it was made plain that baptism is a seal of the righteousness of the faith which all the true circumcision must have, yet being unbaptized, in order that they be the seed of Abraham and heirs according to the promise.

In conclusion we showed that all who have access to the faithful labors of the brethren who are promiscuously scattered over the habitable, need not go into the water but once, from the fact that they get the true light in the beginning. All now studying to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Thus the meeting closed, the brethren and sisters with hearts glowing with gratitude to God for another good time in the name of the Lord.

What must the Gentiles all believe
That they the promise may receive?
A resurrection from the dead,
And heir with Christ their living head.

Now in God's holy book we read
The promise was to Abraham's seed;
In him the nations shall be blessed,
In him they'll find eternal rest.

Now ought we not this promise know
Before we in the water go?
As this is what our Lord did teach,
And what he sent his apostles to preach?

THE PUNISHMENT OF SIN.

NUMBER TWO.

The third degree of death is what is called the death of the body. The death of the body is the loss, or extinction of life.

But how can the body be said to die which never had any life of itself?

Here then arises an important question, which, owing to the prejudice of divines in behalf of their preconceived opinions, has usually been dismissed without examination, instead of being treated with that attention it deserves.

Is it the whole man, or the body alone, that is deprived of vitality?

And as this is a subject which may be discussed without endangering our faith or devotion, which ever side of the controversy we espouse, I shall declare freely what seems to me the true doctrines, as collected from numberless passages of Scripture; without regarding the opinion of those who think that truth is to be sought in the schools of philosophy, rather than in the Sacred Writings. Inasmuch then as the whole man is uniformly said to consist of body, spirit, and soul, (what ever may be the distinct provinces severally assigned to these divisions,) I will show, that in death, first the whole man, and secondly, each component part suffers privation of life. It is to be observed first of all, that God denounced the punishment of death against the whole man that sinned, without excepting any part.

For what could be more just, than that he who sinned in his whole person, should die in his whole person? Or, on the other hand, what could be more absurd than that the mind, which is the part principally offending, should escape the threatened death: and that the body alone, to which immortality was equally allotted, before death came into the world by sin, should pay the penalty of sin by undergoing death, though not implicated in the transgression?

It is evident that the saints and believers of old, the patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, without exception, held this doctrine.

Jacob (Gen. xxxvii. 35): "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." xiii. 36. "Joseph is not." So also Job, iii. 12-118, "As an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light."

Compare x. 21; xiv. 10; "Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" v. 13: "So man lieth down, and riseth not, till the heavens be no more." xvii. 13: "If I wait, the grave is my house." v. 15, 16: "Where is now my hope? ....They shall go down to the bars of the pit." See also many other passages.

The belief of David was the same, as is evident from the reason so often given by him, for deprecating the approach of death. Psa. vi. 5: "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" See also lxxxviii. 11-13. cxv. 17: "The dead praise not Jehovah." xxxix. 13: "Before I go hence, and be no more." cxlvi. 2: "While I live will I praise Jehovah." Certainly if he had believed that his soul would survive, and be received immediately into heaven, he would have abstained from all such remonstrances, as one who was shortly to take his flight where he might praise God unceasingly. It appears that the belief of Peter respecting David was the same as David's belief respecting himself. Acts ii. 29, 34: "Let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day....for David is not ascended into the heavens."

Again, it is evident that Hezekiah fully believed that he should die entirely, where he laments that it is impossible to praise God in the grave. Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19: "For the grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth; the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."

God himself bears testimony to the same truth. Isa. lvii. 1, 2: "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart; and righteous men are taken away, none considereth that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come; he shall enter into peace; they shall rest in their beds." Jer. xxxi. 15, compared with Matt. ii. 18: "Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not."

Thus also Daniel, xii. 2: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." It is on the same principle that Christ himself proves God to be a God of the living, (Luke xx. 37, etc.,) arguing from their future resurrection; for if they were then living, it would not necessarily follow from his argument that there would be a resurrection of the body; hence he says (John ii. 25), "I am the resurrection and the life." Accordingly he declares expressly, that there is not even a place appointed for the abode of the saints in heaven, till the resurrection. John xiv. 2, 3: "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." There is no sufficient reason for interpreting this of the body; it is clear therefore that it was spoken, and should be understood, of the reception of the soul and spirit conjointly with the body into heaven, and that not until the coming of the Lord.

So likewise Luke xx. 35; Acts vii. 60: "When he had said this, he fell asleep." xxiii. 6: "The hope and resurrection of the dead;" that is, the hope of the resurrection, which was the only hope the apostle professed to entertain. Thus also xxiv. 21; xxvi. 6-8; 1 Cor. xv. 18-19: "If Christ be not raised, (which resurrection took place for the very purpose that mankind might likewise rise again) then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perished;" whence it appears that there were only two alternations, one of which must cease; either they must rise again, or perish; for "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" which again indicates that we must either believe in the resurrection, or have our hope in this life only. Verses 29, 30: "If the dead rise not at all, why stand we in jeopardy every hour?" Verse 32: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die;" that is, die altogether, for otherwise the argument would have no force. In the verses which follow, from verse 42 to ver. 50, the reasoning proceeds on the supposition that there are only two states, the mortal and the immortal, death and resurrection; not a word is said of any intermediate condition. Nay, Paul himself affirms that the crown of righteousness which was laid up for him was not to be received before the last day. 2 Tim. iv. 8: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." If a crown were laid up for the apostle, it follows that it was not to be received at death or immediately after death.

At what time then was it to be received?

At the same time when it was to be conferred on the rest of the saints, that is, not till the appearance of Christ in glory.

Phil. ii. 16: "That I may rejoice in the day of Christ." iii. 11: "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Verses 20, 21: "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

Our conversation therefore is in heaven, not where we are now dwelling, but in that place from whence we look for the coming of the Savior, who shall conduct us thither.

Luke xx. 35, 36: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, etc....for they are equal unto the angels....being the children of the resurrection"—that is, when they finally become such; whence it follows, that previous to the resurrection they are not admitted to that heavenly world.

Thus far proof has been given of the death of the whole man. But lest the resource should be had to the sophistical distinction, that although the whole man dies, it does not therefore follow that the whole of man should die, I proceed to give similar proof with regard to each of the parts, the body, the spirit, and the soul, according to the division before stated.—

FLIGHT OF TIME.

New Year's Day...1882.

J. CAMERON.

"We take no note of time but from its loss:" and it would be well that its loss should be noted to some purpose, —namely, to make the most of the time yet to come.

The rapid flight of time has been noted by thoughtful men in all ages. "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope." "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years; few and evil have the days of the years of my life been." "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." "We spend our years as a tale that is told." "Tempus fugit"—time flies—was the condensed expression of the same truth in ancient heathendom; and the apostolic dictum regarding the duration of human life is: "What is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth away." And the longer we live this becomes more apparent.

And if the comparatively good and thoughtful thus estimate life and time as so brief and unsatisfactory, much more the reckless and evil. One at the close of an ambitious and ill-spent life as a "walking shadow,—a poor player that struts and frets his hour upon the stage; and then is heard no more,—it is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." But Shakspeare was anticipated by the sacred writers, who tell us that "the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment." "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree. Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found." The value of time is greatly enhanced by the rapidity of its flight; for we can do nothing without time; and, if once allowed to pass, it is beyond recall. Money lost may be found again; but time, never. And the prayer of the Psalmist becomes exceedingly appropriate: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." And the wise man's advice: "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

Yes; "whatsoever" Have we to provide things honest in the sight of all men? Then we must be "not slothful in business." "Seest thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men." Have we to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling? Then we must "work while it is called to-day; for the night cometh in which no man can work." And yet how many are there who require to kill time! Chronicides!—ay, and, in too many cases, suicides!—depriving themselves both of present and future life.

But while we must work in the present for both present and future, the future is of surpassing importance; because it is everlasting. And the rapid flight of time is well fitted to impress us with the increasing nearness of that future. In working and preparing for that future, its increasing nearness should continually warn us of the necessity for diligence; seeing that the time of our probation may soon close. Is there a promise of sitting with Christ in His throne when He comes? It is to him that overcometh. Is there a promise of ruling over cities in that kingdom? It is to those who have been faithful.

Every new month, week, day, hour, minute, should have a lesson for us in this respect; and it is only because the year is a much longer period, that our attention is more forcibly arrested to the flight of time; and that, consequently, the lesson of the New Year becomes more impressive. We have made a long stride towards the approaching future, and the lessons it teaches us become intensified. "So much the more as we see the day approaching." "Brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not: and they that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away." "The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage." Relationships based on the present constitution of things, or on any religious affinities of our own selection, shall have no place in the future; so neither should they bulk too largely in our present thoughts and feelings. Disciples among whom there may exist very close affinity may be found unsuited for co-operation in the kingdom; while others who may now even be estranged in thought and feeling, may find themselves, to their surprise, in close combination in the future. Our relation to God as His children, and the resulting relation to one another as brethren in "the common faith," with the means by which these relationships may be best sustained and strengthened, are of infinite importance even to our individual perfection.

Steadfastness in the faith is one of the first elements of the Christian character. In this quality, the Lord has set a noble example. In the midst of many temptations to swerve from the path of duty, He did not merely go forward in it as an allotted task, but deemed it even "His meat and His drink to do His Father's will and to finish His work." And although in bearing our sins in His own body on the tree, He felt the burden to be no light one, and even at times shrank from the prospect of drinking the bitter cup, He yet found courage to express His willingness to drink it: "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Let our faith in Him as "the Lamb of God bearing the sin of the world" be as steadfast as His resolution to endure the death of the cross on our account. And let us rest assured that, as "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," He will yet vindicate Himself and His faithful ones from all the obloquy and reproach to which, in the past, they had been subjected.

It is worthy of note that the future has always contained an object of faith for the faithful to grasp. This will be conceded by all, so far as regards the faith which was revealed prior to the first appearing of the Messiah; but many will demur to the idea that there is now any object of faith in the future. But it is plainly declared that "Faith is the substance of things hoped for," and these must, of necessity, be future; "for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" But what things are these? Are they not "the things concerning the kingdom of God," preached by the apostles? And is not the coming of the Lord an absolute necessity, in order to their being realized? Is not His personal presence as necessary to the fulfilment of that part of His mission as the Christ which is yet future, as it was for the "decease which He accomplished at Jerusalem," as a sacrifice for sin? And does not this element of the faith tend to give substance and reality to all the others, bringing us by the influence of hope, both to look for and to love His appearing, as an event which is to bring us a long-expected blessing? And is not the rapid passing away of the present fitted to confirm our steadfastness in the faith, when an important element of that faith is being thereby brought nearer? "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand; for now is your salvation nearer than when you believed."

But it is also necessary "that they who have believed in God be careful to maintain good works." "Add to your faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity." With one exception, these are moral qualities; and the apostle's doctrine is, "If ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." There is, therefore, such a thing as a bare entrance into the kingdom: but who would be content with that? We must "lay aside every weight, and the sin which does most easily beset us." Do we pray, "Lead us not into temptation"? Should we not then be ready to "abstain from all appearance of evil"? What, then, should be our attitude towards the more flagrant vices so rampant in the world? How far can we tamper with the cause of drunkenness, for example, so rife at this season, and use the above petition, or follow the exhortation of the apostle? Let the flight of time admonish us of the duty of "exhorting one another daily, while it is called to-day, lest any of us be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin."

But a greater New Year is on the wing,—the acceptable year of the Lord,—the year of His redeemed,—announced by Jesus, but not yet arrived. The coming of that year is connected with the day of vengeance,—"the hour of judgment,"—to be yet proclaimed by an angel from heaven, saying, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." That New Year's Day will be a happy one to the saints,—"His redeemed,"—His bride; for it will be the day of her espousals. Then it will be said, "The marriage of the Lamb hath come, and His wife hath made herself ready." Freed from sin and death, she will take her place by the side of the King of kings and Lord of lords, and enter on the administration of that world to come, through which the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." But it will be a "day of vengeance" to the ungodly. May we all so use the present, that we shall be prepared for that future, come when it may.

Let me here briefly notice a matter which has received fuller treatment on former occasions, namely, that although many calculations have been made to determine the time when that day may be expected, it would appear that, even according to those calculations, the time is fulfilled, and that, therefore, the new dispensation may be upon us at any moment. On the other hand, many hold that its initial stage, indicated in 1 Thess. iv. 16, might have taken place long ere now, altogether irrespective of chronological periods or signs which are held to have an exclusive reference to Christ's glorious manifestation with His saints upon the earth. There is thus a practical agreement among believers as to the possible immediateness of the Lord's descent for the gathering of His saints; and this is really the point to which they stand most directly related.

But there are those who care for none of these things; and also many who, although not unconcerned, yet put off with the excuse of Felix, when Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. "Go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season I will send for thee." A more convenient season! The last utterance of Jesus to John, in Patmos, was, "Behold, I come quickly," and nearly eighteen hundred years have come and gone. And are such Felixes sure that 1882 shall not witness the fulfillment of the intimation? And are they sure, if that time overtake them in their present condition, they shall not be among those of whom are written the dreadful words, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and who obey not the gospel of His Son; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power, when He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all that believe." "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

Brevities.

During the past year the progress of discovery at Pompeii has been rapid. Several very important houses have been opened for the first time since their memorable closing up in the early years of imperial Rome; one is built and furnished on an entirely original plan. Some of the statues found are of bronze, and are said to be of exquisite workmanship. Furniture discovered is also of high excellency.

Again the officers of the Pope and the Vatican are giving out threats of the withdrawal of his Holiness, with his retinue, from the city of Rome if the Italian Government shall refuse to give up the "Holy City" to the Pope's exclusive occupancy. The latest manifesto to this effect has caused considerable excitement, but it remains to be seen whether the King of Italy will leave Rome to please the Pope, or, if not, whether the Pope will really take his departure—which he probably wouldn't under any circumstances.

The Mussulmans expect the world to end in 1882, which is the thirteenth hundredth year of the Hegira. They are now looking for Mahdi, or the Mussulman Messiah. The London Times says: "The present is a time of strong and general excitement throughout the Mussulman world. From the Atlantic Ocean to Bagdad, and even farther east, there is in the minds of millions a feeling that a critical time is upon them. The impression has spread with great rapidity throughout Islam."

The Lake of Galilee runs north and south; the Jordan runs into it at the north, and out of it at the south. It is about twelve miles long and six wide at the widest part. It is pear-shaped with the stem on the south, and the stem slightly bending to the west. Its water is beautifully clear, and reaches a depth of 165 feet. It abounds with fish; but its fishermen are few, and its fleet of boats are reduced to three. Upon a tongue of land that extended into the lake on the northwest, is the site of once beautiful Capernaum, now known as Tell Hum.

THE GEOLOGY OF CARROLL COUNTY ILLINOIS.

THOMSON, Ill., Jan. 8.—Mr. J. M. Williamson, the geologist of Carroll county, had his workman make excavations in the bluff mounds, near Thomson, the other day. As Mr. Williamson knows just where to dig, he came upon some very interesting relics much sooner than an ordinary person. The bodies buried in the mounds were of course those of the mound-builders, and were interred in earth as dry as powder in peculiar locations, where it is supposed a drop of water has never permeated, hence the finding of the bones in such a rare state of preservation. One skull and skeleton is very large, the femur being 22 inches long and the joints enormous. The skull is double as thick as common skulls, and by actual measurement is thirteen inches from ear to ear, showing a mighty perponderance of fighting qualities and animal passions. The forehead, or absence of forehead, is canine in its intensity, being literally no forehead at all, but a flat surface, the eyes near together and resembling the chimpanzee or gorilla; the jaws and teeth are in a good state of preservation, the teeth broad and solid like little anvils, though they are said to be 1,000 to 2,000 years old. One hundred and fifty bodies, it is supposed, were buried in one mound fifty feet long by twenty wide. A sacrificial mound was also opened where but one body reposed, which was cremated. Mr. W. brought away some pieces of charred bones that had been left, and some of the brick-like earth which looked as though it had been colored by human blood. It is as hard and dry and solid to-day as it was a thousand years ago, and whether the Indians offered up living sacrifices like the Druids, our forefathers, is not known. Shall the race that peoples Thomson 1,000 years to come, be as different from those of to-day as that of 1,000 years ago?

NEW YEAR HYMN.

CHAS. D. BELL, D. D.

Great God, thy people's dwelling-place
As roll the ages by,
Show us some tokens of thy grace.
Oh, listen to our cry!

Be with us through the opening year,
And all the dark to be;
We'll fear the future without fear,
Secure, if kept by thee.

We ask not for the fire by night,
That Israel had of yore:
That through the desert it might light
Their path to Canaan's shore,

Nor ask we for the cloud, O Lord,
To lead us day by day;
We take thy providence and word
As landmarks on our way.

For if thy Spirit's teaching be
Our great and constant guide,
Then shall we never stray from thee,
Or wander from thy side.

Only in mercy on us shine,
Send light from heaven above;
For thou art ours, and we are thine,
In bonds of changeless love.

Make rough things smooth, the crooked straight,
On thee we cast our care;
O love divine, on thee we wait;
Our Father, hear our prayer.

Give us the strength to do thy will,
To place in thee our trust;
And we life's duties shall fulfil,
Till dust return to dust.

Then death shall be the gate to life;
A valley on the way;
The end of sorrow, sin, and strife:
A night before the day.

A PLATFORM.

A Broad, Level, Even, Secure Platform, perfectly safe for the Believers of the one Abrahamic Faith to stand upon. We give it in a declaration of the things we must surely believe and teach.

NUMBER TWO.

NEWELL BOND.

In John xvii., our dear Savior gives utterance to a beautiful affectionate prayer that his dear disciples might be one, even as he and his Father were one. Dearly beloved in the Lord, read carefully the chapter referred to in connection with what we have written. We will name some of the doctrines and theories upon which we differ; we do not charge any one with dishonesty, or with a desire to distract or divide the church.

We begin with the man of sin, the lawless one. Some of our ablest and most talented brethren have entered the arena and locked horns, and I greatly fear the Master will come and find them engaged in a fearful conflict. If we are right in our understanding of events that are soon to take place, it is not essential to salvation whether the antichrist is the papacy, the Roman Catholic Church, the mother of harlots or an individual, as many believe, it will not affect us in the least, the saints will be translated to their secret chambers before the man of sin can do them harm. He is to be destroyed; or whom the Lord is to consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. Be patient; we shall soon have ocular demonstration who the man of sin is, and what will be his fearful doom.

Next is the non resurrection of the wicked dead. The most that can be said of them, they will not be raised till the end of the millennial age of 1000 years, so that a belief either way does not effect our salvation. So with the fair chance theory, which rests upon a negative argument, which amounts to no more than a rope of sand where there is positive law.

The Christadelphian belief of a simultaneous resurrection of just and unjust, of a great assize like our courts of jurisdiction for trial and judgment, is out of harmony with all Bible precedent, and we greatly wonder that intelligent men and women should have been led astray by the antipas of the last days.

Next and not least, is the one baptism. This, we had supposed, was a settled question, but alas, it is anything but settled. What will the infidel say? Just see how these intelligent believers of the one faith agree (disagree)? We have most surely believed baptism was, or is, essential to salvation, because it is a special command enjoined, both by precept and example by the Great Teacher himself. When we were baptized into the whole saving name we believed that was the end of the law, and we so still believe; but new revolutions or expositions, not the plural but the single, that is the all-saving name, that must be complied with, or our baptism is not valid. If this was the end of the chapter we would thank God and take courage, but we heave a heavy sigh and utter a fervent prayer—Lord give us patience to endure to the end.

A FEW REFLECTIONS.

There cannot be any doubt as to the truth of Divine Revelation, it is not yea and nay, but yea and amen to the glory of God. There has been and still are faults in our translation, but not of sufficient magnitude to warrant or support the differences that exist among us as a people. Are we not culpable before God for concocting theories and questions that gender strife, divide and distract the body, confuse and discourage the unregenerate or honest seekers after truth? Will God hold us guiltless who thus spend our time in preaching and writing upon side issues and crotchets? Will the Master say to such "well done, good and faithful servant?"

Excuses will be made; this is an imperfect age, we are not expected to see eye to eye; we only see in part, through a glass darkly; or through a riddle. We grant that such is our present condition, but are such excuses valid in relation to the things we have been writing about? Can any better plan be adopted and carried out that will more clearly place the Bible and the God of the Bible, and his Son Jesus Christ, and his humble and devoted followers before a perishing world? What a work there is before us, and how inadequate the means we use to perform it; the last sands are dropping from the old eventful year '81; in all probability most of us will live to see the commencement of the new year '82—further than that we dare not venture. Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, will be the order of the day, but we shall not indulge in these happy greetings only to a very limited extent. Coming events cast their shadows before them. I am admonished to watch and be sober, and hope to the end.

WHAT MORE, TOUCHING THE ANTI-CHRIST?

J. B. COOK.

The answer is, "Much every way." His name and his sphere of evil—his geography and chronology—his symbol and his relation to the fourth and last Gentile power are revealed and all mostly passed. He has been the opponent of "the Christ," whether in promise or person or people; and his answer is based on the most profound records of the past; and the most positive revelations of the future.

Let us notice briefly some of the fundamentals which the argument for his future coming omits, and the facts of prophecy and history which it ignores, denies or displaces.

1. Faith takes "the word of the Lord" as the solution of "the mystery of iniquity" (not as if left for our wits to argue out). We take the word as the very truth. We accept the origin of evil, as given; its course through the four great world powers, as opponents of Christ in type—in person or people. This outline ends every time in the "judgment on the fourth beast," and the kingdom of God. Dan. ii. and vii. This seems analogous to the judgment on Egypt, at the national birth of Israel—as the judgment on Jerusalem and the Jews and the opening of the gospel day and the conception of the body—bride of Christ. Hence, from these precedents and the plain word, we learn that the judgment on the central world-power—the last beast forbids the rise of a theoretic Anti-christ. Why then, they'll sing: "Alleluia; salvation and glory and honor and power unto the Lord our God—Alleluia!"

Even Moses was mightier than Pharaoh and all his magicians and martial hosts—and came off with Israel's deliverance and the song of triumph.

How much more gloriously then will Messiah triumph over "the man of sin;"—the Antichrist. He prevailed in his humiliation against Pilate and Herod—Jews and Gentiles—the devil, death and hell; and then in resurrection life gave his gospel, in Pentecostal power, to the world. Amen.

All these and all other analogous facts forecast his yet coming conquest in "the war of the great day." So far then from foreboding another Antichrist, Faith's strong arm reaches forth only for Christ's coming with unwavering assurance, and joy of victory.

The promise of God is always in advance to "put a hook in the nose, or a bridle in the jaws" of his Anti-christian foes. "The little horn" so much misplaced and magnified as "Antichrist" is only an appendage of "the fourth beast." It is identified in its very life and time with that symbol—beast that begat it, and bears it on to its burning doom. Dan. vii.

2. It is against all prophecy to argue (however adroitly) that it did not embrace Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome; with their relation to Israel, the first advent and gospel age. It was "a light in a dark place;" and it yet points on to "the 'day of God." Dan. ii. 31–45.

But the imagined rise of Antichrist would displace prophecy as already unfolded into history, so far; and then make up a more infernal humanity and a more infuriate devil to pass men; so that in 1260 days the woes of the world would transcend those of all Jewish and Gentile powers through near 2000 years. Surely it lacks (if I see) every element of truth.

3. The voice of mercy says, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be—sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof—and with the temptation (trial) he'll make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Now in this light of God's loving will there is no need for any expository extras—human or infernal.

4. "The time of wrath" is as the knell of Antichrist; for then the Lord Christ takes his great power to put down all (opposing) rule and power. 1 Cor. xv. 24; Rev. xi. 15–18.

The supremacy of Antichrist will then have passed into the loving hands of him "who is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Here then there is no room for forebodings.

5. "God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself;" of course this relation will not end short of the crowning consummation—when "that determined, shall be poured upon the desolator"—Rome. Dan. ix. 24–27. Do reflect. Pharaoh's overthrow was Israel's salvation; so now our greater than Moses says, "Lift up your heads and look up" for "the Deliverer and his deliverance." Another Antichrist would unhinge and derange the entire scheme of Providence for blessing the world. Christ's second coming belongs here. It is unto salvation. Heb. ix. 28.

Look here. The figure one and six ciphers, express 1,000,000; but reverse the order, 000,000,1, and you lose 999,999 out of the million. So all arguments are but ciphers out of their proper relation. "The little horn" for instance is but a dry bone; except as it belongs to, and is borne by, "the fourth beast"—to judgment.

To sum up, let us ask where the cause of God in Christ has failed.

Did the magicians, empowered by all Egypt, martyr Moses?

Did Goliah give David's flesh to the fowls?

Was the crucified Jesus kept in the tomb beyond the third day?

Did Herod and Pilate, the Antichrist power of that time, suppress the gospel?

Have such combinations ever availed further than to furnish occasions for displaying Divine wisdom and power as events lead on to Christ's kingdom and glory?

No, indeed.

The very power, symbolized by "the fourth beast," that crucified Christ Jesus himself, murdered his apostles, and desolated God's city and sanctuary, is now reserved unto fire at the day of judgment and perdition of the ungodly. No other can be responsible for those outrages on Jesus and humanity.

Please observe. Jesus gave his disciples dominion over "demons, and all the power of the enemy," and said he saw "Satan fall." Why? "Because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." Luke x. 17–20; 1 John iv. 4; ii. 18.

Thus, however mighty and manifold, he was there personified; but made subordinate. This diversity, in unity of opposition to Christ, is embraced in the symbol of Rome—its "ten horns," and its "little horn among them." Of course there can be no need of misapprehension, "only believe," and the truth is radiant.

Finally. The theory confounds and falsifies itself to intelligent faith.

1. It ignores "the powers of darkness"—the manifold—Antichrist of the apostolic age.

2. It overlooks the continuity and utility of all prophecy, symbolic and verbal, through the entire range of the fourth kingdom. Dan. ii.; Rev. xiii. 1–5; xvii. 1–14. Its geography and chronology, and history, should be noted, as on "the seven hills" of Rome.

3. It fills the near future with a more malignant foe, and more outrageous forms of agony and woe (by some thousand-fold) than that symbolized and taught through our entire dispensation.

But I forbear, though a tithe may not be told here against it. Nothing said here is personal against our amiable brother, C. T. H. This is penned under the infirmities of my 78th year. Many lack the primary facts of both the language and events of the subject to correct the false impression which the mistaken sound of some texts produces.

"In the love of the Spirit" to all concerned.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

The coming of the dear Savior is one of the most precious and glorious incentives to active and earnest work, to lead souls to him who has redeemed them, and who will soon come to take them to himself, for he has only gone to prepare a place for them who are looking and waiting for his second coming.

I, like many others, was taught that Christ would not come before the millennium, but by careful and thorough study have learned that, instead of the world getting better, Matthew and Luke say, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be when the Son of Man cometh."

To me the second coming of our blessed Redeemer is a subject full of joy and delight, I am looking for him hoping to see him soon, but wait with patience, knowing that he will appear without sin unto salvation to those who are looking for him.

A little while and the morning will dawn when those that sleep in Jesus God will bring with him. We are nourished in this far off land, the king's country, but we are not satisfied until we see the King in his beauty.

In this coming the unbelieving world feels no interest, and hence the shout of our descending Lord will not be joyful to them; but what joy to those who are watching and waiting.

For, according to his word, he will descend from heaven with a shout and with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.

Every thing, both in the church and the world, indicates that his coming is nigh.

2 Peter iii. 3 says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" And do we not hear this saying often in these days?

But let us, dear brethren and sisters, take heed to ourselves that the love of the world and the cares of this life be not a snare unto us; for as a snare shall that day come upon all that dwell on the earth.

To wait or look for the coming of Jesus is the duty of Christians. We find exhortations by the apostles to this effect scattered all through the epistles. Paul and all the apostles spoke often of the Lord's coming. They had a far better and more reasonable faith than most professors of religion of the present day, who are not waiting for his Son from heaven, but are waiting for death to transfer them from earth to the immediate presence of God and the Lamb. How different their faith and hopes.

The primitive Christians looked to the coming of their Lord for their reward.

The modern religionist looks upon death as the gate to endless joy, and treats with contempt and neglect the glorious doctrine of the Lord's return from the heavens.

But will Christ come?

Hear what an angel says:—"This same Jesus which is taken up into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven."

Hear also the declaration of Christ himself—"Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man as his work shall be."

Dear brethren and sisters, may we be found watching for his coming, and with John say, "Even so come Lord Jesus."

Yours in the faith.

Editor Restitution:

In my article on the Star of Bethlehem, which appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 14th, I am in error.

I said that John being born six months before Christ he would be 30 years old in A. D. 29.

The fact is that if he was born in April B. C. 1, he would only be one year old in April A. D. 1, and consequently only 29 in April A. D. 29.

Now taking it for granted that history is right in saying that Tiberius Cæsar commenced to reign A. D. 14 and as Luke says that John came baptizing in the 15th year of Tiberius Cæsar, and also that Jesus was about 30 years old at baptism, therefore John must have been born B. C. 2—say about April; and Jesus in the same year—say about October.

I would not dogmatize, but I should like to have this matter brought before all thinking brethren and sisters through THE RESTITUTION. It seems to me at present, judging from the above facts that instead of our A. D. being either correct or four years astray, that it is two years short and that this year should be 1883 instead of 1881.

Yours for the truth.

THE TIME OF THE END.

The Great Pyramid Indications.

THOS. CLARK WESTFIELD.

As the terminal period indicated by the time measures in the Grand Gallery is now rapidly approaching, it must be of the very highest importance that any misconceptions or erroneous conclusions which may be entertained respecting it, should as speedily as possible be put right.

Seeing to what extent opinions diverge as to the exact commencing period of the Grand Gallery, indicating the date of our Lord's birth, we should be very guarded in making any assertions as to its close. In point of fact, until the initial date of the present dispensation is conclusively ascertained, we are absolutely without any positive date which would enable us to fix the time of its probable ending. Is this designedly intended to be so? It may be. Or, does the Great Pyramid itself supply us with the date we require.

The question is, whether there is any point in the Great Pyramid from which all time measures should start? I think that there is, unquestionably, and the point is met with precisely where we should expect to find it—immediately on entering the building. I refer, of course, to the ruled lines on either side of the entrance passage, placed there by the master-hand, whoever that may have been! I contend that all time measures should commence at these lines, and that such was the builder's intention; because here, and here alone, an absolute chronological date appears to be indicated.

Piazzi Smyth, as most are aware, fixes the date of the erection of the Great Pyramid upon astronomical grounds alone, as "something very close to 2170 B. C." ("Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," 3rd Ed. p. 350).

Now, let us investigate the result of what has perhaps been the most laborious and exact set of measures coupled with the most wonderful outcome which Piazzi Smyth has given us, viz., the distance from those ruled lines in the entrance passage, to the beginning of the Grand Gallery; and given in the third edition of "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," 437 c. 44. We have there a double set of measures. Two witnesses I think to a great truth, one on the east side, and one on the west; and although every stone has been measured for the entire distance of over 2,170 inches, yet the one set differs from the other only to the extent of one-tenth of an inch thus—Distance from the east side 2,170.5 Pyramid inches, from the west side 2,170.4 Pyramid inches.

Here then is an extraordinary agreement with the independent astronomical indication, but fixing apparently the vernal equinox of the year 2171 B. C. as the date intended to be memorialized, the astronomical date being only approximate. If, therefore, the commencement of the Grand Gallery is to be taken as indicating the date of the Nativity of our Lord, 2170.5, reckoned from the vernal equinox 2171 B. C., would give us the autumnal equinox as the time of our Lord's birth, and consequently the true commencement of the year A. D. 1, and corresponding with the Jewish New Year. We shall see how entirely other facts corroborate this view. First in importance is the date of the crucifixion, for reckoning thirty-three and a half years, the universally admitted period of our Lord's life, from the autumnal equinox, would give us the vernal equinox and date of the Jewish Passover as the time of his death. Here is splendid testimony to the truth of Great Pyramid teaching. Inversely, therefore, it is perfectly obvious our Lord must have been born about the time of the autumnal equinox. It must be so, even apart from the Great Pyramid teaching. Thus, what immense significance is thereby given to the observance of the Feast of Tabernacles, which takes place at the same time of the year. Luke tells us (Luke ii. 8), that at the time of the Lord's birth, the shepherds were "keeping watch over the flock by night," which was not customary later than September, affording additional evidence to the fact.

Now assuming this fact established that the commencing period of the Grand Gallery should be the autumnal equinox, 21st September, B. C. 1, the terminal point of the Grand Gallery measuring through the step 1881.6, would bring us to about the end of April, 1882. Measuring up and over the step, however, would considerably extend the period. If my proposition is correct that the product of the height and breadth of the entrance passage represents time past, squared up so to speak, the following striking result is arrived at, viz:

|---|---|
| Min. H. Min. B. | |
| 36.39 × 21.87 gives approximately | A. M. 1882.5 |
| Pyramidic erection | |
| Pyramidic erection to birth of Christ | B. C. 2171.5 |
| Birth of Christ to.....? | A. D. 1881.0 |
| | 5884.6 |

This result would give us the autumnal equinox as the period of the creation of Adam; a time, it is important to remark, when the fruits of the earth are ripe. It would also appear to show that the sixth thousandth year of the history of man was completed at the autumnal equinox of the present year. As to what may be the significance of the remaining decimal yet unexpired of the Grand Gallery's time roll, I should hesitate to express any positive opinion, seeing what an important difference even the smallest possible error in measurement may entail. The commencement of the Grand Gallery, without doubt, symbolizes the birth of our Lord, and consequently the beginning of the present Christian dispensation. We can only conjecture what may be intended by its close. Apparently we have not long to wait for it to be made manifest to us; but it behooves us to remember the continuing passage beyond, cramped and oppressive though it appears to be. Let us therefore watch and pray that we may be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man; for at a time when ye think not the Son of Man cometh.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal—in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., Nov. 14, 1878.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 29, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1878.

"I have read it diligently again and again. * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'—R. ## A FORTHCOMING BOOK.

A Treatise on the Covenants and Their Relationship.

This book discusses:

1. The immutability of God in his purposes.
2. His purposes in the creation of man, and Adam's failure as regal head.
3. The unfolding of the word SEED as announced to Adam and Eve, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
4. The terms and confirmation of the Abrahamic covenant.
5. The perpetuity of the covenant.
6. The landed estate—its locality and boundary.
7. The non-possession of the heirs as yet. Who the heirs are and their inheritance yet future.
8. The addition of the Siniatic. Its relation to the Abrahamic. Where given. To whom given. Its terms.
9. The unity of the law. The law of the Lord and the law of God contained in it more than the decalogue. The law of Moses and the law of God one. The decalogue was in the law of Moses.
10. The purposes of the Sabbath.
11. The limitation and the cessation of the law—Siniatic covenant.
12. The new covenant. The covenantees. The mediatorship—who in it. Our relation to the new covenant—as prospective parts and parcels of the mediation body—to bless the covenantees and the nations.
13. Priesthood—order of Melchesidec—1. Upon the plane of flesh. 2. Upon the plane of spirit abideth eternally.
14. Royalty of Christ—Davidian covenant.
15. Twelve objections to our views upon the kingdom discussed and answered.

The manuscript for this book has been in a state of preparation for the past three years, and is now almost completed and will go into the hands of the printer in January, and ready for distribution in April or May. This will make a book of about 300 pages, and should be in the hands of every brother who is surrounded, or comes in contact with Sabbatarians, those who oppose the restoration of Israel, or probation in the ages to come.

The price of this book will be one dollar. We are now taking subscriptions to be paid when the book is delivered. We want 200 names to assist us in the expenses of the work. Send in your names to me immediately.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 18, 1882. NO. 3.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to eternal salvation.

No. 28.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Our plan, relative to the two witnesses, is to teach the reader to identify them by the inspired history which we are now giving. We selected the book of Zechariah for many reasons.

1. Because the angel that is giving John the tragic part of their history refers him to Zechariah for their personal identity.

2. Because, if we can trace their history through this book we shall be able to trace their entire history.

The Hebrew witnesses are clearly identified in Zech. iv. 12–14. The lamp-stand is there shown to be the Hebrew family—church, or congregation—the Hebrew commonwealth; in a word, the Theocracy—(God-rule). The olive branches are God's witnesses, or appointed order, civil and ecclesiastical, through which he operates to feed, instruct and govern his people.

It is said (Zech. xi. 8), "I (the good shepherd) exterpated (superceded) the three shepherds in one month."

How long a time is here intended?

The three shepherds (orders) were not put to death, but their offices were superceded by the mission of the good shepherd. It was not done by one act, as the atonement, but by many; to deliver the poor of the flock of slaughter from the three shepherds, required, in the faithful shepherd, some time and much faithful instruction. He was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. This disgust of the good shepherd towards the teachings and conduct of the three evil shepherds, caused him to expose their corruptions. He called them "blind guides," "thieves and robbers," "whited sepulchres," and such other epithets, as produced in them the deepest hatred. They followed him; excited the people against him, till aroused with indignation, he utters these words, "I will not feed you; that which dies, shall die, that which is destroyed, shall be destroyed, and those that remain, shall consume one another." Verse 9. See Jer. xv. 1, 2; xxxiv. 17; also Ezek. vi. 12—a three-fold destruction presented.

Having deposed the three shepherds from their pastoral office, he proposes to resign his also; not however till he had finished the work his Father had given him to do.

Verse 10. "And so I took my staff of Grace and brake it that I might abolish my covenant which I had concluded with all nations."

The covenant is the agreement made by the good shepherd with all the enemies of the flock (the Jews)—wild beasts (to keep up the figure) would have been used instead of the word "nations." See Isa. lvi. 9; Job v. 23; Hos. ii. 20; more particularly Ezek. xxxiv. 25.

Ezekiel reads, "And I conclude for them a covenant of peace, and make the evil beasts to cease out of the land, and they shall dwell in the wilderness securely, and sleep in the woods."

The good shepherd, in breaking his staff, Grace, symbolizes the resignation of his office and the annulling of the covenant entered into for the defence of the flock.

Verse 11. "And so was the covenant in that day abolished; and therefore the most miserable sheep, who adhered to me, experienced that this is the word of the Lord."

It seems that the good shepherd had gathered a few poor, miserable sheep into a little, obscure fold. After the enemies were let loose, the covenant being broken, his sheep recognize the truth of his prediction against the whole flock (Israel).

Having labored some years with the proud flock which still adhered to the three shepherds; and as they, through the instigation of their shepherds, had forced him to discontinue his labors among them, he solicits, through their shepherds and others whom the shepherds may employ to do their work, some compensation for his arduous services.

Verse 12. "And I said to them: If it seems good to you, give me my reward; if not, withhold it; and they weighed to me as my reward thirty pieces of silver."

The shepherds, with whom, as paymasters of the flock, the business is transacted, are here to be regarded as the officiary of the flock. Thirty pieces, or shekels ($20.00), the price of a slave. Exod. xxi. 32. The good shepherd said, "Rate my labors as a true shepherd." And they rated them contemptuously; thirty pieces of silver being the price of a slave.—Newcome.

Verse 13. "And the Lord said to me; Throw it to the potter, the glorious price at which I am estimated by them; and I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them into the house of the Lord, that they might be carried from there to the potter"—to pay for the field to be purchased from the potter as a cemetery for strangers. "And the Lord said to me (Zechariah here acting in the person of the good shepherd), The glorious price at which I am estimated by them (the Jews), since that is the price for which I was sold by the people to their rulers, by Judas. After all my labors with and for them that is, by them, my estimated value—thirty pieces of silver."

Matt. xxvii. 9, is thus rendered, "Of one who was sold, whom the children of Israel did sell at the shameful price of a slave"—also the yearly wages of an ordinary herdsman; the estimated price of myself and 33½ years' labor!! Carry it to the temple, the place of traffic, that it may be conveyed to the potter, that there in the valley of Hinnom, the mouth of Ghenna, it may be treasured up till my innocent blood shall be required of those murderers.

Why does Matthew (xxvii. 9) ascribe these words to Jeremiah?

We answer—

1. Zechariah's prophecies stand to those of Jeremiah as the Apocalyptic visions of John to those of Daniel and Ezekiel.

2. Jeremiah prophesies about the 70 years' captivity in Babylon, as the punishment of their previous national sins; Zechariah sees a far greater captivity for the murder of the Messiah, the Son of God.

3. Jeremiah records the first act of retribution; Zechariah the second;—Zechariah is, therefore, a supplementary Jeremiah.

4. Both have much to do with Hinnom, the potter's field, and heavy judgments upon the Jews for shedding innocent blood.

5. In some manuscripts the word "Jeremy" is committed; and, perhaps, correctly.

6. The Revised Version (margin), "Spoken through Jeremiah." The idea, then, would be that it came from Zechariah through Jeremiah.

Verse 14. "Then I broke my second staff, the Allied, to abolish the brotherhood between Judah and Israel."

Up to the time of the taking of Jerusalem by Titus the twelve tribes were known to each other, and a kind of brotherhood existed. Christ's labors included all. When his apostles were sent forth, his commission was, "Go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." But when their long captivity was commenced, their brotherhood utterly ceased.

Verses 15, 16, 17. These verses continue the history of those domestic spoliations and domestic discord which took place between the rejection of the good shepherd and the overthrow of the nation under Titus. They neglected the indigent, and robbed the wealthy, and courted the smiles of the honorable.

The eye of the prophet continually rests upon extremes. From the deep humiliation, a consequent of the rejection of the good shepherd by the covenant people, it vibrates towards conquests in the protecting smiles of Jehovah.

When are these prophecies fulfilled? Is their accomplishment still future?

The 12th, and part of the 13th, stand out in bold contrast to chap. xi. They show events in the history of Israel, which transpire under the Messiah.

Did they take place at the first advent? If not what is their probable epoch?

We cannot find sufficient proof of their entire fulfillment at the first advent. Such victories over all nations as are described in chap. xii. do not belong to that period: neither was there then such a national mourning. It is true that John (xix. 37) says, "And again another Scripture saith, They shall look on him whom they pierced." Still there is another period of sorrow in which the Jews will take a part: Behold, he cometh with the clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they which pierced him. Rev. i. 7.

The first included a few persons which might be a type of the other which is national.

In Zech. xxi. and xxiii. we have a passing sketch of the long, Hebrew captivity, a return and a siege of Jerusalem; and a mourning and a national conversion; these three items will now demand our attention.

Christ said of the Jewish nation, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. He also refers to a future conversion: "Ye shall see me no more, till ye shall say, Blessed (is) he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 39.

Since the fall of Jerusalem by Titus (A. D. 70) the Gentile tread has been upon the place of God's sanctuary. The world is full of "outcasts," and the "dispersed." Their tears have saturated every soil, and their wailings, floating over nature's wilds, have penetrated her deepest solitudes. The following has been in process of accomplishment for eighteen centuries. Christ's blood has been upon the children of his murderers through generations.

"Behold! I make Jerusalem for a threshold to all nations round about, and also upon Judah will it be, in the siege against Jerusalem." xii. 2.

Verse 3. "And it shall come to pass the same day, that I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all nations; all who lift it up (hold possession of it) shall bruise and cut themselves; and there shall be gathered together against her all the nations of the earth."

What nation, which has attempted to carry Jerusalem, since the expulsion of the Jews, that has not found it a burdensome stone?

What nations have not bruised and cut themselves?

The Romans, the Saracens, the Egyptians, the Mogul Tartars, and the Turks.

What cuts and bruises were inflicted upon the European Crusaders?

It has been like the captive ark among the heathen. The prophet, passing along the line of their sad history, comes to a siege. How Judah got to that land from his long captivity, is not stated by Zechariah. At Jerusalem are gathered all the nations of the earth. The time for a noted revelation begins to dawn. God Jehovah smites the nations with blindness, but light shines upon the Jews: "Upon the house of Judah God first opens his eyes."

Verses 5, 6. "And the princes of Judah say in their hearts; Strong for me are the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the Lord, the Almighty, their God." The poor of Judah first aided by Jerusalem; this is unexpected by Judah. Messiah now remembers his own tribe (Judah) first, and makes its princes as a fire from under wood, and as a torch of fire under sheaves; and they devour, on the right hand and on the left, all nations round about, and Jerusalem continues to sit on her throne at Jerusalem. It is not taken.

Verse 7. God still favors his own tribe. "The Lord helps the tents of Judah first: that the splendor of the house of David, and the splendor of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, may not exalt itself above Judah."

Verse 8. "In that day the Lord defends the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that stumbleth among them is as David, and the house of David like God, as the angel of the Lord before them."

As the angel of the Lord went before the Israelites in the wilderness, so now, the house of David will conduct them; for David is their prince. Ezek. xxxvii. 25.

Verse 9. "It will be in that day that I (God) will seek to destroy all nations who come against Jerusalem."

God here fights for Israel. In no other siege has he done it. He fought against Jerusalem in its overthrow by the king of Babylon; and also by Titus. The time to redeem his covenant people has at length come, and he fights for Jerusalem.

Verse 10. "And I pour out upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of gracious supplication, and they look on me whom they have pierced, and they lament for him (me) as the lamentations for an only son, and mourn for him as the mourning for the first-born."

What a remarkable change in their views! "They look on me!!" on me whom their nation put to death, formerly, on the cross!! Now mourn!! mourn affectionately! as one for an only son! as one for his first-born!! Divine grace has melted their obdurate hearts. They now see that Jesus of Nazareth is their long expected Messiah, whom their nation crucified.

The great national mourning now fully commences.

Verse 11. "At that time there shall be a great lamentation in Jerusalem, like the lamentations of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon."

The act of their fathers was theirs, since they had sanctioned it for eighteen centuries, the guilt oppresses them, and they give vent in loud lamentations. There had not been like it since the death of Josiah. 2 Chron. xxxv. 24, 25.

This lamentation was by families, and real. It was by the nation and not simply by a few of the miserable of the flock as at his crucifixion.

The royal and priestly families are described first, since they were the representatives of the Jewish nation, and the orders of God, and selected by him to serve and guide the nation; and, therefore, to be witnesses for and against them. They are God's two witnesses that have filled, since the establishment of the Jewish service, the offices of king and priest; during the continuance of the Aaronic priesthood, they are the two classes, or orders that stand before the God of the whole earth.

This mourning is at the conversion of Judah; and also, it is at this time that the family of the priesthood becomes convinced that Jesus of Nazareth was Messiah Ben David. God first opens his eyes upon the house of Judah—he removes their blindness—takes the vail from their hearts, and they see the crucified Messiah in the despised Nazarene.

PREACHING AND TEACHING.

J. CAMERON.

The subject of the preaching of apostolic times is summed up in one word—"Christ." "Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ to them." Possibly modern preachers describe their preaching in the same way; but in the vast majority of instances it would be exceedingly inappropriate. Not because of a difference in doctrine merely, but owing to the nature of the preaching. Modern preaching is applied to elaborated discourses, in which morals and sentiment form the staple. Ancient preaching was rigidly limited to what was in its true nature a proclamation—that is, a public announcement, as that by a herald, confined to a given subject, embracing a very few simple matters. Thus, we find the term applied to the brief and simple utterance of John the Baptist: "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand," as well as the same thing by Jesus and His apostles. What is known as the Sermon on the Mount is not so designated, but another term is employed, which we find also applied to similar discourses throughout the New Testament. This is the word "teach," "He opened his mouth and taught them, saying, Blessed are the poor in spirit," etc. This distinction is observed in the commission Jesus gave to his apostles on the eve of his departure to heaven: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." In Matthew's account this part of the commission is varied in expression, and in the common version the word "teach" is employed, which seems to conflict with the view I am taking; but the marginal reading explains the apparent anomaly: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples." And then, in the next verse, we have the word "teach"—a totally different word in the Greek—"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The two terms seem to be employed in the same way in describing Paul's labors in Rome; "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xxviii. 31. There is an apparent exception in Acts xx. 7: "Paul preached unto them, and continued his speech until midnight." This was to the disciples at Troas; but the word rendered "preach" is a different word, and rather means to discourse, to reason, etc. And again, in all the allusions to, and directions for, church edification, we invariably find such words as "exhortation," "instruction," "teaching," etc.—The word "preach" being confined to the announcement of that elementary truth by which sinners were introduced into Christ.

These things have an important bearing on the simplicity of the gospel faith as originally delivered to the saints, and contrasted with the elaborated confessions of faith current in these modern times. And not only so, but they point to a practical departure from primitive usage in our modern church organization, in which the assembly of the saints is made an arena of gospel preaching, instead of being appropriated to the duty and privilege of "speaking to edification, exhortation, and comfort." I do not mean to say that this is neglected; but it has almost invariably been confined to one who has been specially educated as a "minister, or preacher of the gospel," whose public services are monopolized by those who attend church, instead of being carried to those who are outside, and who are perishing for lack of knowledge of those simple elementary truths which gospel preaching of the primitive sort would provide.

The duty and privilege of mutual edification is also set aside by this modern arrangement. The apostles addressed the disciples in such terms as these: "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." This was teaching in the church. But at one time "there arose a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad. . . . They went everywhere preaching the word." Acts viii. 1–4. "Preaching" here is evangelizing—literally, gospelizing, or making known the glad tidings. This is equivalent to proclaiming or preaching Christ, mentioned in verse 5; for in verse 12 we read of Philip "preaching (evangelizing) the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." It is plain from this that preaching Christ and making known the Gospel are one and the same thing, and also that the scattered members of the church were not deemed incompetent to the task.

It must be evident from this, and from Heb. v. 12, 13 already quoted, that the qualifications for both preaching and teaching were of a much humbler order than are deemed necessary in the present day. This was doubtless due to the fact that the subjects of both were much more simple than modern theology. They were loyal to the apprehension of the "common people," who were the major portion of the early church. Philip "preached Christ," or rather the Christ, for our translators have here omitted the article which stands in the Greek text (ton Christon, the Anointed One, embracing "the things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ."). Verse 12. Peter's address on the day of Pentecost is a fair sample of the simplicity of the gospel preaching of that time; and the success which attended it was due to the facility of apprehending the things spoken, as much as to the marvellous display of Divine power by which their truth was demonstrated. Let us seek to aim at a return to the "simplicity that is in Christ."

Rules for Understanding Any Writer, and Especially the Sense of the Sacred Writings.

DR. WATTS.

1. Be well acquainted with the language wherein the author's mind is expressed. Learn not only the true meaning of each word, but the sense which those words obtain when placed in such a particular situation and order. Acquaint yourself with the peculiar power and emphasis of the several modes of speech: and the various idioms of the tongue. The secondary ideas which custom has superadded to many words should also be known, as well as the particular primary meaning of them, if we would understand any writer.

2. Consider the signification of those words and phrases more especially in the same nation, or near the same age, in which that writer lived; and in what sense they are used by authors of the same nation, opinion, sect, party, etc.

3. Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author with the same or kindred words and phrases used in other places of the same author, generally called parallel places; and as one expression explains another which is like it, so sometimes a contrary expression will explain its contrary. Remember always that a writer best interprets himself. Hence the theological rule arises, that Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture.

4. Consider the subject of which the author is treating, and by comparing other places where he treats of the same subject you may learn his sense in the place where you are reading, though some of the terms which he uses in those two places may be very different. And on the other hand, if the author uses the same words where the subject of which he treats is not just the same, you cannot learn his sense by comparing those two places, though the mere words may seem to agree; for some authors, when they are treating of a quite different subject may use perhaps the same words in a very different sense, as Paul does the word "faith" and "law" and "righteousness."

5. Observe the scope and design of the writer; inquire into his aim and end in the book, or section, or paragraph, which will help to explain particular sentences: for we suppose a just and judicious writer directs his expressions generally toward his designed end.

6. When an author speaks of any subject occasionally, let his sense be explained by those places where he treats of it distinctly and professedly; where he speaks of any subject in mystical or metaphorical terms, explain them by other places where he treats of the same subject in terms that are plain and literal; where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal or instructive way; where the author speaks more strictly and particularly on any theme, it will explain the more loose and general expressions: where he treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations; and wheresoever he writes more obscurely, search out some more perspicuous passages in the same writer, by which to determine the sense of that obscure language.

7. Consider not only the person who is introduced speaking, but the persons to whom the speech is directed, the circumstances of time and place, the temper and spirit of the speaker, as well as the temper and spirit of the hearers. In order to interpret Scripture well, there needs a good acquaintance with the Jewish customs, some knowledge of the ancient Roman and Greek times and manners, which sometimes strike a strange and surprising light on passages which were before very obscure.

8. In particular propositions the sense of an author may be sometimes known by the inferences which he draws from them; and all those senses may be excluded which will not allow of that inference. Yet even here we must take heed we do not mistake an allusion for an inference, which is many times introduced almost in the same manner.

9. If it be a matter of controversy, the true sense of the author is sometimes known by the objections that are brought against it.

10. In matters of dispute, take heed of warping the sense of the writer to your own opinion, by any latent prejudice of self-love and party spirit. It is this reigning principle of prejudice and party that has given such a variety of senses both to the sacred writers and others, which would never have come into the mind of the reader if he had not labored under some such prepossession.

11. For the same reason take heed of the prejudices of passion, malice, envy, pride, or opposition to an author, whereby you may be easily tempted to put a false and invidious sense upon his words. Lay aside, therefore, a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with attention and diligence, with an honest design to find out his true meaning; do not snatch at little lapses and appearances of mistake in opposition to his declared and avowed meaning, nor impute any sense or opinion to him which he denies to be his opinion, unless it be proved by the most plain and express language.

Lastly, remember that you treat every author, writer, or speaker, just as you yourselves would be willing to be treated by others who are searching out the meaning of what you write or speak; and maintain upon your spirit an awful sense of the presence of God, who is the judge of hearts, and will punish those who, by a base and dishonest turn of mind, wilfully pervert the meaning of the sacred writers, or even of common authors, under the influence of culpable prejudices.

The True Christian Hope.

If we compare the language of modern teachers with the declarations of the Word, and especially with the apostolic epistles, we shall be struck with the contrast. In the one case, men are reminded of their short stay upon earth; they are called to dwell on the subject of death, as if it were the great subject of contemplation; they are urged to prepare for the hour of dissolution, as if there were no prospect more affecting, none more calculated to win the thoughts and desires to heavenly things. Not so the Scriptures of truth. There we find death held out in all its solemn aspect. It is described as an enemy whose triumph we must prepare to conquer by the grace of God—a monster, whose sting can only be made harmless by the cross of Emmanuel. But it is not, it cannot be the object of hope—of solicitude longing expectation. None can occupy this place in the eye of hope, but the adorable Saviour who once appeared amongst us in suffering flesh, and will yet return to this world in our glorified humanity. How interesting, in this view, is the described position of the church—looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God.' They are the people who wait for the Son from heaven; they are the wise virgins who have long ago trimmed their lamps, and whom the first note of approach shall wake up, and, behold, they shall go forth to meet the Bridegroom; they are servants who are steadily occupied in their allotted duties during the absence of the great Master, but wait with intense desire for the time when his friendly voice shall demand admittance, and his friendly feet once more stand on the sphere of our sorrows and pilgrimage.—Rev. W. Dalton, A. M.—Lectures for Lent, 1848.

Christian character is not an act, but a process; not a sudden creation, but a development. It grows and bears fruit like a tree, and like a tree it requires patient care and unwearied cultivation.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 18, 1882.

THANKS to Brother H. Hoyes for late London papers. We have taken an article from the Standard, on the Exploration of Palestine, for this RESTITUTION.

WHEN sending postage stamps for fractional parts of a dollar, we would prefer the one-cent stamps as we have a better chance to dispose of them than those of a larger denomination. Ten cent pieces carefully inclosed come safely.

WE have received a supply of the Eclectic Hymn book arranged and published by G. M. Myers and John Arnold. They write that it is selling rapidly, and send us a number of testimonials from different brethren who speak highly of the work. Something from these hereafter. Address either this office—or G. M. Myers, Box 325, Lanark, Ill. Price 25 cts.

FROM present indications we are led to conclude that nearly all our subscribers on the list will renew for the year 1882. Some are paying for extra copies for the poor and for friends. For the almost universal expression of sympathy and approbation we feel to thank our kind friends, and, above all, to bless God who hitherto has helped us. Some new subscribers are making a trial of our paper.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION.

A very important work has just been undertaken at the expense of the Palestine Exploration Fund, namely, the survey of the country east of the Jordan Notwithstanding the intense interest which attaches to the Holy Land and the incalculable number of works which have been written upon it and its history, little has been known until quite recently about its topography and geography. The Exploration Fund have supplied this deficiency, so far as Western Palestine is concerned, by the large map which they have just completed and the splendid volumes of memoirs which supplement and explain it; but the Eastern portion has been hitherto comparatively neglected. Yet no part of the country is likely to yield so rich a harvest to the explorer as the fertile table-land east and northeast of the Dead Sea, and we may confidently expect that the exploration which has now been begun will produce results of the highest importance, not only to Biblical criticism but to archæological science generally. Unlike the western side, where a continuous population and the changes wrought by frequent immigrations and inversions have made it so difficult to recover the vestiges of the past, Eastern Palestine has remained almost in statu quo, and without settled inhabitants since the Persian destroyer, Chosroes, swept over it nearly thirteen hundred years ago. The country has been visited by many travelers, but although some of these, like the Count de Vogue and M. Waddington, have given us a large and important collection of inscriptions, and others, like Canon Tristram, have made a careful study of its natural history, no systematic exploration of the region has as yet been made. An American Society was started for the exploration of Palestine to work in harmony with the English one, and an expedition was actually sent out from the United States for the purpose of making the survey of the districts under consideration, but the maps which they produced are little more than reconnaissance charts, and the work will have to be begun de novo. The English surveying party has already commenced operations upon the spot; it is in charge of the same officer under whose direction the greater part of the map of Western Palestine was produced; and his experience and proved ability are sufficient guarantees that the work will be well and conscientiously done. The map is intended to be on the same scale and plan as that of the western side of the Jordan, which in the extent and accuracy of its information would compare favorably with any Government Survey that has ever been made. The two together will form the most important contribution towards the intelligent study of the Bible which has been made since its translation into English.

The country to be surveyed comprises the lands of Bashan, Gilead, and Moab. Bashan is the level tract of country which extends from the southern slopes of Mount Hermon to Gilead on the south. Here was the district of Iturea, of which Philip was Tetrarch, and the Argab or Trachonitis, which formed part of the dominions of Og, King of Bashan, and have too awaiting more careful investigation are the "giant cities" described by Porter, which were at first supposed to have been the abodes of that "remnant of the Giants" of whom Og was the last representative, but they have been since ascertained to belong to an early Christian date.

Gilead, famous in early Bible history, is one of the grandest and most picturesque parts of Palestine, and with its luxuriant corn-fields, its grassy prairies, thick forests, and well-watered valleys, it is at the present day much what Western Palestine must have been in the time of Abraham.

Moab, the third district, is an extensive table-land on the east of the Dead Sea, and about three thousand feet above its level. Around the country to the east of Jordan cluster a host of sacred and historic memories; it was the scene of the destruction of "the Cities of the Plain," the meeting of Jacob and Laban, the conquest of Sihon by Moses, the pursuit of Gideon, the revolt and victories of Jephthah, the wars of David and Ammon, the wars with Moab, the invasion of Tiglath Pileser, and the captivity of the Tribes. Here still stand the ruins of Aroer, the mysterious city "in the midst of the River Arnon," of Heshbon, Rabboth-Ammon, and Ramoth-Gilead, not to mention Dibon, the capital of Mesha, King of Moab, whose deeds are recorded on the now celebrated Moabite stone which was found upon the spot. Here, too, the explorers will survey the country of the Gadarenes, whose modern inhabitants, like the demoniacs of the miracle associated with the name, still dwell in the ancient tombs. On the same side of the river are the scarcely less interesting sites of Machærus, where John the Baptist was beheaded; the great Palace of Hyrcanus at Arak el Emir, and the magnificent vanished Palace of Chosroes II. at Mashita. It must also be remembered that it was on this side of Jordan that the early Christian Church found a refuge during the troubled times of the siege of Jerusalem by Titus. Many parts of the country are thickly covered with ruins, "and these," as Canon Tristram tells us, "are not desolate heaps or grass-grown mounds. Pillars, arches, churches, streets, remain only partially damaged," and he adds, "I have often scrambled over the vaulting which still covers the ancient streets."

In such a country there is plenty to repay the cost and trouble of exploration; indeed, we may look for a continued series of archæological surprises from such a thorough and scientific investigation of the ancient sites as necessarily accompanies a survey made by skilled Government officers like those to whom the work has been entrusted by the Palestine Exploration Fund. Prehistoric remains, large dolmens and stone circles, just such as one sees on the mountains in Wales, are scattered all over the country, and an examination of them cannot fail to prove interesting. We may also look for the discovery of some remains at least of Phœnician architecture of which we have at present no examples. There are, it is true, plenty of inscriptions and a few ornamented sarcophagi, but of the elaborate architectural designs which made Solomon's Temple so glorious no trace remains. Another set of discoveries that will be looked forward to with anxiety and interest by scholars and laymen alike, will be the inscriptions which must exist in the country, if only proper means can be taken to bring them to light. It may be remembered with what excitement the discovery of the "Moabite Stone" was received at the time, and how important it proved as a means of confirming and illustrating Bible history, to say nothing of the light which it threw upon questions of Hebrew philology. The monument of Mesha can scarcely be a solitary instance. There is every reason to believe that other Kings caused their victories to be recorded upon similar tablets; and as these were no doubt likewise constructed out of the hard black basalt of the country, some of them must have escaped destruction. The language and nomenclature of the country will also necessarily prove fruitful in discoveries; we have already instances of old Moabitish words being preserved in the dialects of the local tribes, and it is a well ascertained fact that Semitic races have habitually shown a tendency to perpetuate their ancient heroes in their geographical names. Thus the name of the modern Belka is identical with that of Balak, King of Moab; Shihan, where De Vogue found a magnificent bas-relief of a King, is identical with Sihon, King of the Amorites; and the name of Lot is perpetuated in that of Bahr Lut, now given to the Dead Sea.

Again, among the Arab tribes whose ancestors have lived longest in the country, many family names are met with which strongly illustrate the Scripture records. For instance, the ruling branch of the Sheikhs of the Adwan Arabs is called Deab, which is exactly equivalent in meaning and orthography to the Hebrew Zeeb. Gherab, too, a common Arab tribal name, is the same as Oreb; so that the names of the two Princes of Midian mentioned in the Book of Judges are preserved in the country to the present day. The fresh task with the performance of which the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund have charged themselves is, as we have shown, so full of promise that we sincerely hope they will be enabled to carry it out with the completeness that characterized their admirable survey of Western Palestine. Like all works of public interest and utility it cannot be done without public support, and this we feel sure will be freely given to it.

A PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

Four Propositions.

1. Do the Scriptures teach that man has within him a spirit in man that lives in a conscious state between death and the resurrection? Affirmative, A. H. Scott, Garnett, Kansas. Negative, John Poore, Galesburgh, Kansas.

2. Do the Scriptures teach that the punishment of the finally impenitent will consist in the extinction of their being as man? Affirmative, John Poore; negative, A. H. Scott.

3. The Baptist church to which I, A. H. Scott, belong is the original church that Christ built. Affirmative, A. H. Scott; negative, John Poore.

4. Do the Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God, spoken of by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles, is yet in the future, and that it will be set up at the second coming of Jesus Christ? Affirmative John Poore; negative, A. H. Scott.

I will give a brief synopsis of the fourth proposition, viz: The kingdom. The kingdom of God—the kingdom of heaven—the kingdom of God's dear Son, being synonymous.

Bible subjects must be explained by Bible words. In Daniel's prophecy we have two kingdoms brought to view—a kingdom which the God of heaven sets up, and the kingdom of men. Dan. ii. 44; iv. 17.

Now let us look for the kingdom of God's dear son. In Col. i. 13, we read, "Who delivered us from the authority of darkness, and caused a change of sides for the kingdom of the Son of his love."—Diaglott.

Elder Scott introduced the Diaglott, and said it it was one among the best translations out—that is when it suited his case. So we used it too. The elder could only go back on this translation by using his peculiar rule that allows him either to translate, or annihilate, it himself to suit his theory; and this is new in debate. "Who hath changed us"—Paul and his brethren—"for the son of his love." In this discussion it matters not what Elder Scott was changed for, or what his brethren were changed for.

In Rev. i. 5, 6, we read, "To him who loves his own blood; and made us a kingdom—priests for his God and Father—to him be the glory and the might for the ages of the ages. Amen."

In v. 5, we also find these words, "I John your brother and co-partner in the affliction, and kingdom, waiting for Christ."—Diaglott.

John a co-partner with his brethren in what?—answer, in the affliction first, and, second, in the kingdom.

This was Paul's order—the tribulation first, and afterwards the kingdom—the reign of glory and triumph. Hear him: "It is through much tribulation that we must enter the kingdom." The expression we includes all the saints of God. Acts xiv. 22.

When the fifth seal is opened, we hear it said to those who had been slain, that they must rest yet a little season, till their brethren should be killed as they had been. Each one of the saints has his portion of the affliction, and each one will receive his portion in the kingdom at the appointed time. "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. If we deny him, he will also deny us." 2 Tim. ii. 12.

If the Baptist church is the kingdom, then the kingdom is literal, and if Elder Scott reigns, it is a literal reign over his brethren. This I would dispute.

The kingdom of God's dear Son, First his throne. Inspiration connects his throne inseparably with his kingdom and his reign. "And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest. And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." Luke i. 31, 32. Also, Isa. vii. 6, 7, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Elder Scott said, when speaking of his increase of government, that it was by conversion—regeneration—and that of this increase there will be no end. He made the increase as endless as the peace.

Would it not be better to allow Jesus himself to fix the time when the reign begins?

Hear him as he speaks to the apostles: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28. And "Ye are they who have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxii. 28, 29.

When will the Son of Man sit upon his throne of glory, or glorious throne?

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31.

Then the twelve apostles will sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel—then will they eat and drink at his table in his kingdom. (Will not Elder S. allow the Son of Man to fix his own time for the setting up of his own kingdom?) If this be true it is abortive for the Baptist church or for any other church to claim to be the kingdom.

But what will take place when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory?

Hear him: "Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Matt. xxv. 32.

Where will this gathering of all nations be?

Let Inspiration answer: "At that time shall they call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart."

What else takes place when God's throne is in Jerusalem?

"In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance to your fathers." Jer. iii. 17, 18.

The house of Judah and the house of Israel embrace the twelve tribes, and then shall the apostles sit upon twelve thrones judging them. But if Elder S. asks where the twelve tribes are, let him remember that he does not know where the patriarchs and the apostles are. Neither could he find the origin of his spirit entity in all the efforts he made to explain it. But God knows where his saints are, and he also knows where the tribes are. "For he that scattered Israel will gather him." "Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and I will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one King shall be King to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22.

"I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Acts xv. 16.

This will be done after he has visited the Gentiles, and taken out a people for his name. Hence the kingdom is yet in the future. The kingdom will not come until God's dear Son shall return after having obtained royalty.

Christ spoke a parable because he was near Jerusalem, and because they thought the kingdom of God was about to appear. He said, "A certain man of noble birth went into a distant country to procure for himself royalty, and to return. And he called ten of his servants and gave them ten minas; and said unto them, Trade till I come. But his citizens hated him, and sent an embassy after him, saying, We are not willing for this man to reign over us. And it occurred, that at his return, having received the royalty, he ordered those servants to be called to him, to whom he gave the silver, that he might know what they had gained by traffic." Luke xix. 12.—Diaglott.

They supposed that the kingdom was then to be be set up, and Elder S. thinks it was then set up. And he is in the fog as much as they were.

Returned after having obtained royalty. Royalty—Kingship—the character, state, or office of a king.

Then he will come in regal state and power; then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory. Thus his chosen witnesses testify for him.

"The Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy messengers with him: and then shall he set upon the throne of his glory."

All that have eyes to see, and ears to hear, can discern who are for Christ and who are against him; whether those who contend for his coming and his kingdom, or those who oppose his coming. I say, settle this matter for yourselves.

But when did the negative of this proposition first originate?

Answer: With her who reigns over the kings of the earth. Rev. xvii. 18.

All who want a kingdom in the absence of the King better go to headquarters. All that is necessary for me to do is to prove that the kingdom of God is yet future, and to be established at the second coming of Jesus Christ, and this is done.

These apostles to whom he made the promise that they should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, are resting in the dust of the earth. But they will awake to share in that reign of power and glory in the age, or world, to come. He will swallow up death in victory. And the Lord God will wipe away all tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day: Lo this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will come and save us. This is the Lord; we have waited for him; we will be glad, and rejoice in his salvation. Isa. xxv. 8, 9.

Our God saves his people from the death state by a resurrection. We wait for our God who has promised the earth—"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." "For evil doers shall be cut off. But those that wait upon the Lord shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5; Psa. xxvii. 9.

God said to Jacob: "The land on which thou liest, to thee will I give it. And in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxviii. 13, 14.

"And the Lord said unto Abraham, after that Lot was separated from him: Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Gen. xiii. 14, 15.

"And he gave him none inheritance in it; not to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when he had no child." Acts vii. 5.

He promised, said Stephen, that he would give it to him. I will do it. Stephen declares the Lord said so—what says Elder S.?

"Lo this is our God, we have waited for him; he will come and save us."

Would it not be better for you, Elder, to wait till you are sent for?

When God sends for me to appear in his presence, he will not send the grim monster death—but the glorious resurrection power. Amen and amen.

JOHN POORE.

ON THE FIELD.

It was my pleasure on 1st of December last to visit Bro. C. P. Graham in Dewitt county, Illinois, and to remain ten days. We made nine discourses to good, attentive and uniform audiences, and immersed one into the Christ. Good can be done there by remaining in meeting two or three weeks. We met there with Bro. Samuel Sloan, who lives near Peoria, and who is an earnest and energetic worker in the truth. While there we sold forty-three hymn books.

December 26, in company with Bro. David Gans, of Lanark, and Bro. J. S. Arnold, of Plum River, we visited Morseville, Jo Davis county, Illinois, and remained till January 3rd. Bro. Gans and myself spoke every night in a commodious Union meeting-house to fair audiences considering the condition of the roads. At the close of the meeting we had the pleasure of immersing Bro. Richard Chown into the Christ body, who is well known and highly spoken of in the community. While there we sold twenty-three hymn books. Fraternally,

G. M. MYERS.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS.

GENEVA, Jan. 16.—The recent landslips in Switzerland are ascribed to frequent slight shocks of earthquake. No less than twenty-one shocks have been observed since December.

DESTROYED BY A FALL OF ROCK.

GENEVA, Jan. 14.—An enormous mass of rock, 1,000 feet high, has fallen from Rothrisa Mountain, near the town of Glarus, destroying orchards, roads and meadows. No lives were lost.

The situation is very much disturbed in Egypt, the people being apparently unwilling to submit to the joint protectorate arrangement recently consummated with the Khedive by England and France. A general and bloody revolt is not impossible.

By one passenger train running into the rear of another, which was standing on the track at Spuyten Duyvil Station, on the Hudson River Railroad, Friday evening Jan. 13, two parlor cars were telescoped, eight of the passengers being killed, and others more or less injured. Among the killed were a newly-married young couple from Vermont, named Valentine, and Senator Wiester Wagner, of New York, the inventor of the Wagner sleeping and parlor cars. The horrors of the disaster were aggravated by the wreck taking fire and burning before the victims could be rescued.

Brevities.

The marble foundations of the Pantheon, at Rome, were until the last year covered up under thirty feet of ground, level with the street; they have now been laid bare, and present a wonderfully beautiful appearance, owing to the artistic fineness with which they are sculptured. The wine shops that desecrated the building's walls have been removed also.

There has been much curiosity naturally felt about the great Ben Ameur, chief of the revolt in Algeria. The rebel general is of mixed parentage—half Arab, half Moor—possessing the keenness and agility of the one race, with the pride and hatred of foreign domination peculiar to the other. He is the offspring of an Arab mother and a Moorish Mohammedan father.

A very curious thing is a salt quarry just discovered in Wyoming county, south of Rochester, N. Y., near Gainesville. They were boring for oil and struck a ledge twelve feet thick of pure crystal salt. It lies in the ground like a gigantic cake of ice, and can be taken out so clear and transparent that you can see through the cakes as if they were pure glass. It will be much cheaper to quarry out this salt and grind it up, than it is to boil down the Syracuse, Saginaw, or Turk's Island salt. The mine is a source of infinite wealth to Wyoming county, and one of the geological curiosities of the world.

THE DISCOVERY OF ROYAL MUMMIES IN EGYPT.—Our readers will be interested to know that, after all the doubts, it has turned out that it is really Rameses II., the great Rameses of history, the Rameses of the Israelitish oppression, whose mummy was lately discovered in Egypt. The doubt came from the fact that the effigy on the coffin did not present his features and that the writing on the coverings were of a later style; but on unrolling, the wrappings it was found that on an inner one was placed a memorandum to the effect that the ancient coffin had been destroyed, and was replaced when the body was removed, in the time of the twentieth dynasty. By going to Boulag to-day can be seen the face of the very man who is believed to have refused the Hebrews straw in the making of their bricks, and to have ordered their firstborn to be slain—Christian World.

The Rev. George O. Barnes is conducting, in Louisville, a religious revival which in most respects is not uncommon; but he introduces a novelty by carrying a bottle of oil as he goes among the penitents and anointing them on their foreheads. He claims Scriptural authority for this ceremony. Although harshly criticised for his oddities, he is said to be sincere in his work—so sincere that he will take no pay except food and lodging—and his converts are numerous. He is a seceder from the Presbyterians.

Measures have been taken by Rustem Pasha, Governor-General of Mount Lebanon, for the preservation of the cedars. The Governor-General has caused to be built round the trees a walled enclosure in charge of a custodian whose duty it will be to see that the regulations are carried out. Visitors of all nationalities will be allowed as heretofore access to the cedars, but will only be permitted to set up tents outside the enclosure, at places specially designed for the purpose. Fires will not be allowed near the trees, the necessity of this rule having within the last few years been demonstrated by the fact that three of the largest cedars have been partially destroyed by fires owing to the carelessness of travellers' servants. It is further "absolutely forbidden to cut a branch or bough of any single tree." No animals belonging to travellers are to be permitted within the enclosure.

News from Accra has confirmed the report which at first seemed too atrocious for belief, of the massacre of 200 young girls by the King of Ashantee. The dusky monarch who has been guilty of this crime is the brother of King Koffee Kalkalli, who was defeated by Sir Garnet Wolseley, and afterward dethroned. When the present sovereign seemed to be threatening Cape Coast Castle, last summer, re-enforcements were forwarded to the British Governor from Sierra Leone; whereupon the Ashantee King replied by preventing to Queen Victoria his royal golden axe. This was at first understood by some hasty commentators as an insult, or as a sign of his strong desire to cut off her head. But it was soon known to be as pacific an implement as Koffee Kalkalli's royal umbrella, which is also among the Queen's knick-knacks. The Ashantee King's raid turned out to be directed against his neighbors, the Fantis, for building material. He needed to repair one of the red clay walls in his palace at Coomassie, and accordingly he ordered to be captured 200 girls, who should be murdered in order that their maiden blood might moisten the clay and mix the mortar. This ferocious mandate has been carried out. It had seemed a story too horrible for credence until its present confirmation.

In his sermon in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last Sunday, Mr. Beecher made a marked sensation by denying the existence of eternal punishment. He said:

"I believe in a future state of retribution, but I believe it is remedial. What the end will be I do not know, for I can't see the beginning; but that punishment will continue after it can no longer do good, or that it will be made everlasting, I do not believe. God do so to me, and more, if ever I preach that or countenance it in any way whatever. For God's own sake, for the sake of everything that reasons, conscience and benevolence justifies, I would clear God's skirts of every such aspersion. Punishment, so long as it continues to do good; then annihilation, if you believe it; but eternal punishment never."

Send for any more tracts at 10cts. per pound, as the supply is exhausted. All orders received up to Monday evening, Jan. 16, have been filled. We will next week publish a list of parties whose orders reach us too late, and they will confer a favor by sending a card to us stating what disposition to make of money sent. Some have sent for special kinds; if they do not receive the exact number of each kind ordered, they will understand that that particular sort was exhausted at the time of receiving their order. In sending these tracts out free to our brethren we have observed the rule—"First come, first served."

KEY-WORDS

ON THE ENGLISHMAN'S

Hebrew & Greek Concordance

To certain words which throw important light on great doctrines; a reference manual which, at a glance, affords to the plainest English reader some of the precious privileges acquired by others after a long study of Hebrew and Greek.

—BY WILEY JONES.—

The above is the title of a book which every Bible student ought to have. I hope to be able to deliver it to purchasers in a few weeks, the Lord willing. It will probably contain about 160 pages, in flexible cloth binding, price $1.00, carry.

The occurrences of the Hebrew words have been copied from "The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance;" those of the Greek words from "The Englishman's Greek Concordance." But with all the accuracy that two such learned names might be thought to guarantee I was unwilling to let this work go to the press before personally verifying each quotation. There is urgent need of complete accuracy and reliability in such matters, for I have before me a work the title-page of which says that it has "reached its 29th thousand," and yet, under "Proposition XXIV." it contains four glaring errors in saying that sweet occurs where it does not.

I have endeavored to make this pocket manual a "multum in parvo," condensing much research and instruction in a small compass, and shedding light of inestimable value on the following doctrinal and practical subjects:—preaching, exhorting, faith, hope, repentance, baptism, conversion, adoption, the covenant or testament, righteousness, justification, the church, the soul, the spirit, the act of dying, the dead, the grave, the pit, hades, hell, finite and infinite duration, second advent, resurrection, regeneration, immortality, incorruptibility, paradise, the kingdom of God.

Please send orders for the work to

NEARER HOME.

When the year has lived its number
And the birds have ceased their notes,
And full ripe for the keen sickle
Bends the hoary-bearded grain,
All my feelings gather softly,
Like sweet comforters, and say,
Summer time has gone, but autumn
Brings a calmer, fruitful day.

When I, wandering where the summer
Lingered fondly to the last,
See the fairest flowers withered
By the first chill autumn blast,
Naught of sadness fills my spirit,
That my joys long have blown,
For each leaf that flutters earthward
Tells me I am nearer home.

And when sunset fades out coldly
And the barren fields look gray,
The last golden fruits all gathered,
The b[illegible]-sweet gone away,
Wea[illegible]dly loitering,
Eve[illegible]own softly come,
To[illegible]ose feet with healing,
As they whisper nearer home.

And my heart puts off all sadness,
Though the barren fields are gray,
Though the golden fruits are gathered,
And the birds have flown away;
For I'm going where the flowers,
Bloom in a deeper sunshine,
Where the buds no more are fickle,
But remain to every thing.

Where no frost hath ever blighted
The bright verdure of the clime,
And the fairest fruits are ripened
Where the sun knows no decline;
And my wasted spirit sighs to
In a soft and hopeful tone
Till the stars shine down to light me
On and onward to my home.

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Three.

J. B. COX.

Having spoken of the word of God, which Paul admonished Timothy to study, and shown that that word taught the perfection of God, and his order in the great work of creation, I ask now to speak of the order of God in the work of redemption.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 21-23. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave: I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues, O grave, I will be thy destruction." Hos. xiii. 14. This last quotation is spoken concerning the children of Israel, and may have reference to their political death, and grave; if so, it shows the redemption of that people, from their fallen condition to the land promised to their fathers, but the first quotation refers positively to a coming forth from the earth, the receptacle of the dead.

Man forfeited his life by transgression, and if God had left him in that state, when he died, he must remain dead to all eternity. But God in his wisdom and mercy promised a redeemer. The first promise on record is, what God said to the serpent, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. iii. 15. Here we have two seeds, the seed of the serpent, and the seed of the woman. Paul says, "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." Rom. xvi. 20. Jesus said to the Pharisees, "Ye are of your father the devil." John viii. 44. We see by these quotations, that the serpent spoken of by Moses, is the devil or Satan, so as Satan was an evil being, the fruit, the out growth of his seed, is evil also, and therefore, is antagonistic to the seed of the woman which God promised should bruise the serpent's head.

The Scriptures are very explicit in regard to the seed of the woman, "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Isa. vii. 14. And when the angel Gabriel came unto Mary, He said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among woman,—And the angel said unto her, Fear not Mary: for thou hast found favor with God, And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest, . . . The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee: and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Luke i. 28-35. These Scriptures show, First, that the seed of the woman is called Immanuel, or, "God with us." Second, his name is called "Jesus" or "Savior, for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. i. 21. So God did not leave man without hope, even in the dark days of transgression. He promised a redeemer in the seed of the woman, who should redeem all that was lost in Adam.

Now God designed an orderly course in redeeming man, and bringing him back to his primitive state, so in the fullness of time, the Lord God called out Abram, through whom this seed should be developed, if he obeyed the commands of God. When God called out Abram from his father's house, to go out to a land that he would show him, he (God) not only promised to make him a great nation, and to give him a great name, but, he also said, "and thou shalt be a blessing. So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto Him:" He taking with him his wife, and his nephew and all their substance, "and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came," and when Abram has passed through the land, "The Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land." (Is this not the land wherein the garden of Eden was located?) Now after Lot was separated from Abram, The Lord said unto him, "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the earth then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee." After this we read, "The Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Gen. xii. 2, 4, 5, 7, 13, 14, 17, 15, 18. Paul in his letter to the Galatians, says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, he saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. So it is plain, that the seed that is to bruise the serpent's head, was ordained to come through Abraham, and this promise was made to him when as yet he had no child. So after a son was born unto him, and his name was called Isaac, Abraham was put under a severe trial, even the offering up of his own son. He obeyed God, therefore, being proved, he was a fit subject to introduce the promised redeemer into the world. So this promise was repeated to Isaac, and again to Jacob, who was the father of twelve sons, among whom was one named Judah, through whose genealogy came David whose house was kept in memory until the fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." Isa. ix. 6. Here is the development of the seed of the woman. "The angel said unto them, (the shepherds,) Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. . . . And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. Luke ii. 10-14.

Now as the child Jesus grew, he made his mark in the world, and as early in life as twelve years, he astonished the doctors of the Law, by his wisdom and understanding. And when he arrived to years of maturity, he entered upon the great work that God had sent him to do, and when John saw "Jesus coming unto him, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John i. 29.

He saith not sins, as of many, but the sin. What is this sin? did not our first parents commit one transgression, which brought death into the world? and was not the promise of the seed of the woman made before another transgression is refered to?

But before Jesus entered his great mission, he was baptized by John, he said, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." Matt. iii. 15. And as he came up out of the water, a voice from heaven was heard, saying, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased." Ver. 17. Now according to the order of God, Jesus must be proved. God tried Adam when he entered upon the governorship of the creation of God. He also tried Abraham whereby he proved his faith. So now, "was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted (tried) of the devil." Matt. iv. 1. After he was thus proved, "the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him." Ver. 11. So Paul says, "For in that he (Jesus) himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. ii. 18, iv. 15. During the ministry of Jesus our redeemer he was continually persecuted by the seed of the serpent. When the Jews who said they were Abraham's seed, but now sought to kill Jesus, were for a time kept back by the powerful words of him who spake as never man spake, so Jesus asked them, "Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word. Ye are of your father the devil, and the lust of your father it is ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning and stood not in the truth, because there is no truth in him, when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father thereof." (New version) viii. 13-44. "He (Jesus) was despised and rejected of men a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; . . . But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, . . . He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth, he was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment, and who can declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgressions of my people was he stricken." Isa. liii. 3-8.

Herein we see that the seed of the serpent bruised the heel of the seed of the woman. But in accordance with the divine order he soon arose triumphantly from the tomb, and became the victor over death. Then he commissions his disciples to "teach all nations," Matt. xxviii. 19. He also endowed them with power, in his name to cast out devils, to speak with new tongues, to take up serpents, to drink any deadly thing, and it shall not hurt them; and also to heal the sick, these things were also to be done by them that believed. Thus the serpent's head is bruised by his victory over death, "For this purpose the son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 John iii. 8.

When Jesus had spoken to his disciples concerning their work, even "while they beheld, he was taken up: and a cloud received him out of their sight." Acts i. 9. Thus he ascended into heaven, and "sat down with his Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. But the time of Jesus is limited in heaven. For we read, that God shall "send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began." (New version) Acts iii. 20-21. So Paul said, "Our citizenship is in heaven: from whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself." (New Version) Phil. iii. 20-21. So when this time shall arrive, (which is not far distant,) this same Jesus will return to this earth, and shall restore all things according to the plans of God, which are made known to us in his holy word. The kingdom of God will then be established, the saints will be made rulers over the nations with king Jesus, and shall bring all things into subjection, "Unto me (God) every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." Isa. xlv. 23. "Every tongue shall confess to God." Rom. xiv. 11. The curse will be removed and Paradise restored, and the whole creation of God shall be obedient to his will. "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed: their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand upon the cockatrice den. They shall not hurt, nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isa. xi. 6-9. And when Jesus shall have restored all things, Then will he deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and authority and power, for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 24-26. Then "the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Psa. xxxvii. 11.

Such is God's order in the work of redemption as set forth in the Holy Scriptures.

In my next I wish to refer to the false teachers, and the perversion of the Holy Scriptures.

Youths' Column.

Babe of Bethlehem.

Pillowed was the infant head
On a borrowed manger-bed.
He around whose throne above
Angels hymn their songs of love,
Once was wrapt by virgin hands
In earth's meanest swaddling bands:
He, adored by seraphim,
Was a Babe of Bethlehem.

Eastern sages from afar,
Guided by a mystic star,
Followed, till its center mild
Brought them to the heavenly child.
May each providence we see
Like a guiding meteor be,
Bringing nearer unto him,
Once the Babe of Bethlehem.

A Mother's Advice.

A good mother, when her son was leaving the home of his childhood and going out into the broad world, knowing that he was ambitious, gave him this parting injunction:

"My son, remember that though it is a good thing to be a great man, it is a great thing to be a good man."

No wonder, no truer words were ever spoken. A great man may dazzle, but a good man is a beacon shining afar, by whose beneficent light a multitude are enabled to walk in safety. The best success is often achieved by the humblest, and an obscure life, well spent, is better than a wicked renown.

Lord Macaulay says:

"Children, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, notice the feeling of even a single touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand! Make much of it while yet you have that most precious of all good gifts, a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes; the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after-life you may have friends, fond, dear, kind friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard uncaring world, for the sweet, deep security I felt when, of an evening, nestling in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender and untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep, never her kiss of peace at night. Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the old church-yard; yet still her voice whispers from the grave and her eye watches over me, as I visit the spot long since hallowed to the memory of my mother."—Rev. B. Bousfield, B. D.

The New Year.

A place where two ways met. Mark xi. 4.

Have the children come to such a place at this New Year?

Are some little ones standing wondering which way to take—whether to go on the old way and the broad way, or to turn into the new way and narrow way?

Very quietly but surely the days and the weeks have brought them to this spot where the two ways seem to meet, and bright eyes search in vain for any sign-post plainly marking the road to life or the road to death; and perhaps even to-day the prayer is trembling on some youthful lip, "Show me the way in which I should go."

One day last summer a father, mother, brothers and sisters, started for a long country ramble; but Fanny, the eldest girl, was not ready to start off with them, and was to follow. Directions were left with her which road to take. At last she started, and for a time there was no difficulty in following the others; but after a little she came to a place where two roads met. She had now to stand and think; but the more she thought, the more difficult it seemed to be to decide. Both roads stretched out into the sunshine; both led into the country; but which was the right way?—which would lead to the father's side?

As she stood puzzled and wondering, her eye rested on the sandy path, and there, written in round, childish hand, were these words, "Fanny, this is the way." All doubt was at an end; she simply believed the written message, obeyed, and followed, and soon had the joy of reaching those "gone before," and learned that her little sister had lingered behind to write those words on the dusty road.

Oh! children, does not the story remind you—as it did me—of the pierced hand that long ago traced on the narrow path to heaven the words, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me?" and reading the message to-day, will you not start at once for heaven, singing the glad song:

"I will follow Jesus,
I will follow Jesus,
I will follow Jesus all the way!"

And following him you will find he is also the Truth. Fanny never thought of doubting the truth of her little sister's writing, and shall we doubt the writing of Jesus?

He is the Life also; and not only our life eternal, but the very life we should live in this world.

You, girls, know what it is to match the beautiful shades of wools and silks, so as to copy a piece of work exactly, and just in the same way we should try to copy every shade of Christ's life and character. There is a text in the Bible that seems just a help for boys and girls in matching the colors; it is this:

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Had you not better learn the text, so that you may know just the right colors to ask for? It is in Philippians iv. 8.

Has not the little story a beautiful lesson in it for any who are walking on the safe way to heaven?

Perhaps a brother, or sister, or friend is following you, and they have come to the place where you turned into the narrow way, but they do not know which road to take.

Won't you try to make the writing clear for them, and won't you so live that they may read in your lives the words, "This is the way," and, following you, may soon rejoice in the loving embrace of the Heavenly Father?

The Possibilities of Childhood.

We speak of the reverence due to old age: do we not sometimes forget the reverence due infancy?

Old age brings us to the conclusion of a life which may have been a success or a failure. If he has walked worthy of God, the old man's past is secure; if he has walked in the way of evil, opportunity is past, and it is too late to restore or repair the wreck of a wasted life. But infancy has all its vast possibilities yet in hand, for all the kingliness of manhood is wrapped up within the compass of a little child.

We do not wonder that God commits the care of the little ones, not to messengers who dwell obscurely or at a distance from his throne, but to those mighty angels who are so honored that "they do always behold the face" of the Heavenly Father. And as God thus honors infancy and childhood, so God's servants should, with the utmost solicitude, watch over the ways of the little ones. When one great man was asked why he saluted the children with such reverence, he said he saw in them the future rulers and princes, and great ones of the earth. The Christian sees all this and more;—he sees in them the heirs of the world to come, inheritors of an eternal kingdom, the partners with the Lord Jesus Christ in his everlasting reign.

With many of us our earthly course is run. Our path has been chosen, wisely or unwisely, or we have drifted along, driven by the force of circumstances, till it is now too late to materially change our character or course. Sometimes we sadly muse on what "might have been;" sometimes we quicken our pace to redeem the time, because the days are evil and our life is fast passing away; and sometimes we sink down and say, "There is no hope! life is gone, and nothing but death remains."

But childhood, with its buds and flowers, with its playthings and toys, is master of the situation. The child stands at the parting of the ways. Like some spring bursting forth at the top of a mountain ridge, where a simple mark in the soil determines its course, and determines whether it shall flow east or west, whether it shall find its outlet to the ocean in the frozen north or the sunny south, so childhood stands at the beginning of a career, and an hour may give direction to a life-long course.

The pressure of a gentle hand can change the life of a little child. On the one side is the path of virtue, on the other the path of vice. Once started it is not easy to return; and step by step taken becomes more and more assured. On the one hand we have the frank and studious boy; on the other hand the lad too wise and wicked for his years. On the one hand intelligence, industry and sobriety; on the other hand recklessness, hilarity, and dissipation. On the one hand firmness, integrity and strength; on the other hand weakness, irresolution and vicious indulgence. On the one hand prosperity, calmness, dignity and honor; on the other hand wickedness, worthlessness, degredation, poverty and distress. On the one hand a steady step on a firm foundation; on the other hand a dangerous way, trodden by uncertain and staggering feet. On the one hand the aged pilgrim, bowed with years, yet strong and trustful, passing through the shadows that are illuminated by the light and radiance of immortal hope; on the other hand guilty and godless old age, plunging downward into the blackness of darkness forever and ever.

These are among the possibilities that wait on childhood. It is true that few who live a life of sin and vice ever see old age. They go down to their graves in their brown hair; wrecked, ruined, lost. But it is also true that the few brief years of childhood go very far to determine the whole course and outcome of a human life.

Need we say anything to emphasize the reverence that is due to infancy and childhood?

Need we say anything to encourage the mother in her unrestitting toil and constant care?

Surely, when the possibilities of childhood are considered, every mother's heart must feel oppressed with a sense of mighty responsibility, and filled with the determination to accomplish the solemn work that is entrusted to her hands.

In such a work as this, wisdom from above is needed, and will not be sought in vain; for "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed." James i. 5.

Oh, fathers and mothers, guard your little ones. Cares may harass you, burdens may oppress you, and your days may seem full of burdens and toils, but do not neglect the children. While you reverence the hoary head which is a crown of glory if found in the way of righteousness, do not forget that infancy has all of life before it. Many a millionaire would give his wealth to be put back again to the sunny days of childhood. Many a man, crowned with fame and honor, would sacrifice it all if he could renew his wasted youth, and have before him the possibilities which every child possesses.

Parents, to you is committed a priceless treasure, a most important trust. Guard it well, and strive by the assistance of the Lord, to so direct the course of your little ones, that they shall reach their journey's end in safety and to life's latest hour shall bless the hands that led them in the way of peace, and pointed them, even in childhood's days, to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

Sententious.

The fact that all around is darkness but proves the day is yet to come.

A truly religious life is a crystal glass wherein Christ sees his own image.

If ever we would be lovely like Christ, we must be holy like Christ. Holiness is a Christian's comeliness.

Our Savior's parting word to his disciples was not, Go, write; it was "Go, teach!" This word they obeyed. They went forth as heralds of their new joy.

Those are the best Christians who are more careful to reform themselves than to censure others.—Fuller.

For ye who hope to wear the victor's laurel,
From loyal service there is no release;
No recreant warrior shall ever enter
Into the Kingdom of the Prince of Peace.

It is from our hearts, and not from an outward source, that we draw the lines which color the web of our existence.

Eternal life and happiness—two pearls of inestimable value! Gold cannot buy them; and yet the poorest of God's children may possess them for the asking.

I've found a joy in sorrow,
A sweet balm for pain,
A beautiful to-morrow
Of sunshine after rain:
I've found a branch of healing
Near every bitter spring,
A whispered promise stealing
O'er every broken string.

One trade is respectable above another only in consequence of the superior respectability of the class of men engaging in it.

Lost patience is never found again. You may be patient next time, but the spoken word cannot be called back again—not with prayers and tears.

The highest and perhaps the only claim to dignity that man possesses is the fact that in the Bible he hears a voice above and beyond nature telling him of his connection with Almighty God.

O Watchman, standing on the walls of Zion,
Sound forth a joyous and triumphant strain;
The King of Kings, the Lord of Lords, Christ Jesus,
Replenish soon his never-ending reign.

There is ever this difference between the wise and the unwise; the latter wonders at what is unusual; the wise man wonders at the usual.—R. W. Emerson.

Things that will wear are not to be had cheap. Whether it be a fabric or a principle, if it is to endure, it must cost something. Glitter, tinsel, brilliant coloring, may all be had without much expense; but if we would have strength, firmness, permanence, we must pay for them.

Be what thou seemest; live thy creed;
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure,
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Plant sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find a harvest home of light.

—Bowar.

To walk in Christ, or to walk by faith, is to have the life regulated by an habitual, prevailing regard to those doctrines and invisible realities revealed to us in Scripture. A person may be said to be walking by faith, when the influence of invisible, spiritual objects prevails in regulating his judgment, his affections, and his entire conduct.

Perfect moral and religious winnowedness exists in the Bible, and in no other book in the world. Is there any other book the ages could absorb into their views as they have the Bible, and feel nothing but health as the result?—J. Cook.

RECONCILIATION.

If thou wert lying, cold and still and white,
In death's embrace, O mine enemy!
I think that if I came and looked on thee,
I should forgive, that something in the sight
Of that still face would conquer me, by right
Of death's sad impotence, and I should see
How pitiful a thing it is to be
At feud with aught that's mortal.
So, to-night,
My soul, unfurling her white flag of peace—
Foretelling that dread hour when we may meet,
The dead face and the living—fain would cry
Across the years: "Oh, let our warfare cease!
Life is so short, and hatred is not sweet.
Let there be peace between us ere we die."

A FORTHCOMING BOOK.

A Treatise on the Covenants and Their Relationship.

This book discusses:

1. The immutability of God in his purposes.
2. His purposes in the creation of man, and Adam's failure as regal head.
3. The unfolding of the word SEED as announced to Adam and Eve, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
4. The terms and confirmation of the Abrahamic covenant.
5. The perpetuity of the covenant.
6. The landed estate—its locality and boundary.
7. The non-possession of the heirs as yet. Who the heirs are and their inheritance yet future.
8. The addition of the Sinaitic. Its relation to the Abrahamic. Where given. To whom given. Its terms.
9. The unity of the law. The law of the Lord and its law of God contained in it more than the decalogue. The law of Moses and the law of God one. The decalogue was in the law of Moses.
10. The purposes of the Sabbath.
11. The [illegible] and the cessation of the law—Sinaitic covenant.
12. The new covenant. The covenantees. The mediatorship—who is it. Our relation to the new covenant—as prospective parts and parcels of the mediation body—to bless the covenantees and the nations.
13. Priesthood—order of Melchesidec—1. Upon the plane of flesh. 2. Upon the plane of spirit abideth eternally.
14. Royalty of Christ—Davidian covenant.
15. Twelve objections to our views upon the kingdom discussed and answered.

The manuscript for this book has been in a state of preparation for the past three years, and is now almost completed and will go into the hands of the printer in January, and ready for distribution in April or May. This will make a book of about 300 pages, and should be in the hands of every brother who is surrounded, or comes in contact with Sabbatarians, those who oppose the restoration of Israel, or probation in the ages to come.

The price of this book will be one dollar. We are now taking subscriptions to be paid when the book is delivered. We want 200 names to assist us in the expenses of the work. Send in your names to me immediately.

"ALL THINGS NEW."

"And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new."

There's a shadow on earth's fairest light,
Of human guilt and human tears:
She gropes her way through realms of night,
That once rang with the spheres.
But now the spirit of blinded chance,
The heavenly record standeth true:
She waits a full deliverance
When God makes all things new.

The world is cold with centuries,
But not for those she bears her head;
Close to her heart the storms she has
She holds so many dead:
Sad discords mingle in her song,
Tears fall upon her with the dew,
The whole creation groans—How long
Ere all shall be made new?

Yet brightly on her smiles the sun,
A beauteous heaven delights to bless;
Oh, what shall be that fairer one
When in dwells righteousness!
O, happy earth! Oh, holy time!
When wrong shall die and strife shall cease,
And all the bells of heaven chime
With melodies of peace.

No place shall be in that new earth
For sin that blights this universe;
No evil taint the second birth—
"There shall be no more curse."
To broken hearted, cease your moan;
The day of promise dawns for you,
For He who sits upon the throne
Says, "I make all things new."

We mourn the dead, but they shall wake;
The lost, but they shall be restored;
Oh, well our human hearts might break
Without that sacred word!
Dim eyes look up, sad hearts rejoice,
Seeing God's bow of promise through,
At sound of that prophetic voice—
"I will make all things new."

How long? The ages follow, numb,
As on the threshold of new birth!
The nations pray, "Thy kingdom come"—
"The new heavens and new earth."
North turning, turning, nears that day,
When all the angels hail the new
Shall sing, "Old things are passed away"—
God hath made "all things new."

"THE ATONEMENT."

J. CAMERON.

This term occurs in the New Testament only in one passage, Rom. v. 11. In the margin our translators have inserted the word "reconciliation," which is the exact equivalent of the term atonement as used at the time the common translation was made. The composition of the word shows this; for it is simply at-one-ment, and signifies a making at one two parties who were formerly at variance; that is, reconciling them. Shakespeare, who wrote about the same period, uses the word atonement in this sense. Thus, in Richard III, he makes the Duke of Buckingham say to Elizabeth, Queen of Edward IV.—

"Ay, madam; he desires to make atonement
Between the Duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain."

He also uses the verb atone in the sense of reconcile. Thus in Othello, Lodovico asks Desdemona—

"Is there division 'twixt thy lord and Cassio?"

To which Desdemona replies—

"A most unhappy one; I would do much
To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio."

The word rendered "atonement" in Rom. v. 11 occurs in three other places; namely, 2 Cor. v. 18, 19; and Rom. xi. 15. In the former passage it is rendered "reconciliation," in the latter "reconciling." There are also six occurrences of the corresponding verb, which is in every case rendered "reconcile."

In theological controversy, and in general religious speech, however, the term atonement is applied to what may be called the ground of reconciliation; namely, the sacrifice of the Christ. Hence we read of "limited atonement" and "universal atonement," when it is not reconciliation that is meant, but simply the extent of the provision made for reconciliation in the death of Christ.

It were well that a little more discrimination were exercised in the use of terms; and I shall therefore try to treat of the sacrifice of Christ in what follows, without making use of the term atonement, and if necessary to refer to what is the result of sacrifice to those who are in Christ, shall use the term reconciliation.

On this subject of the sacrifice of Christ two extreme views are held. That most commonly received seems to be based on the idea that justice is the only attribute of Jehovah, and that he is an exacting despot, who demands the uttermost farthing of the sinner's debt to be paid by him or a substitute. The other views is, that the death of Christ was purely exemplary, and the means of his own personal perfection.

Taking the latter of these views first, I shall endeavor to show that neither of them is what the Scriptures teach.

"Without shedding of blood is no remission," is the apostolic dictum regarding the sacrifices under the law in relation to forgiveness. True, the apostle does not say remission of sins; but nothing can be plainer than that this is his meaning. From chapter viii. to chapter x. he is contrasting the old covenant with the new; and this again in connection with the priesthood of Aaron and Christ. Speaking of these he says (chap. vii. 26, 27). "Such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled; and separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up a sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this He did once when he offered up himself."

Thus remission, or forgiveness of sins was a prominent feature of the Jewish sacrifices, though constant repetition and remembrance of sins was necessary. The fact that the blood of sacrifice was also used for the purgation or consecration of the tabernacle and its vessels, etc., must not allow us to lose sight of that more important use of blood, the forgiveness of sins. Neither can we sympathise with the theory that makes remission in Heb. ix. 22 apply to the abrogation of the first covenant. Though blood was used in making covenants, there is no ground for supposing that it is necessary for the annulling of them. The word is used by the apostle throughout this passage in reference to the remission of sins. Thus in chapter x. 15, 18, he applies it to the forgiveness of the sins of Judah and Israel under the new covenant spoken of in chapter viii. When the apostle speaks of the passing away of the first covenant he uses a different term, such as in viii. 13, where he says, "that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."

Another view taken of the term remission here is that it relates to the books, vessels, etc., connected with the tabernacle. It is said that "even inanimate things, the books, the tabernacle, the vessels, etc., are represented as in a sinful state till they obtain remission by the shedding of blood; i. e., they are ceremonially impure and unholy till they are ceremonially consecrated" (Note to Improved Version). But there is no such use of remission in the law. The idea is evidently consecration, or setting apart from a common to a sacred use. The apostle's meaning may be seen from his use of another word in this very passage (ver. 18): "Whereupon neither the first testament (or covenant) was dedicated without blood." The translators insert the word "purified" in the margin, showing that they viewed the term rendered "dedicated" equivalent to the terms "purged," and "purified," in verses 22 and 23. They have rendered the same term in chapter x. 20 "consecrated," giving in the margin the literal meaning "new-made." This may afford an explanation for understanding that some particular thing referred to has been applied to a new use, that is, dedicated or consecrated.

The term "remission," therefore, cannot be confounded with consecration or setting apart, although blood is the agency employed in both cases. The former is applied to transgressions of law, while the latter is applied to persons, places, and things, apart altogether from forgiveness of sins.

At the institution of the supper, Jesus referring to the cup, said,—"This is my blood of the New Covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." This is in brief compass what the apostle teaches at length in his letter to the Hebrews.

An intelligent, well educated, and well disposed man, who claimed to be a disciple of Christ, but who stumbled at what he understood to be the popular doctrine of the atonement, told me he would acknowledge no authority in regard to this doctrine but the words of Christ himself. His principal objection was to the necessity for the death of Christ as a sacrifice for sin. But he did not seem to be aware how distinctly the Master he professed to serve had spoken on this subject. He forgot that the Lord had said,—"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have eternal life." And again, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." And Yet again,—"Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, beginning at Jerusalem." Truly does Jesus say,—Thus it is written; for we read in the prophets: "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors: and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."—Isaiah liii. 5-12.

That the Just should die for the unjust is incomprehensible to many; and they affect great regard for the Divine justice. But they seem to forget that there is also an attribute of love. Nay, more, they seem to be unaware of the grand truth in a remedial point of view, where the morals of the beneficiaries is an important desideratum, the exercise of generosity is far more influential than the exercise of justice. So that even in a rational point of view the Divine plan is well fitted to secure the ends in view.

The plain fact is, that one who was perfectly free from transgression was allowed to suffer and die on behalf of others. "He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." In the prophecy quoted from Isaiah, Israel is represented as saying. "He had done no violence, neither was deceit in his mouth: yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief." "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." This latter clause is evidently derived from the usage in Israel regarding the sin-offering of two goats. Lots were to be cast upon the two goats: one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat. The first was to be slain, and the other presented alive before the Lord. It is then directed that "Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness: and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited; and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness. . . . And he that let go the goat for the scapegoat shall wash his clothes, and bath his flesh in water, and afterward come into the camp." The priest was also considered to be unclean after contact with the scapegoat. —Lev. xvi. 5-25.

It is plain from this appointment that the two goats were considered as one sin-offering, and that although the live goat is represented as bearing away the sins of the people, and is allowed to live, the other goat is slain, and, according to the direction given, his blood is brought within the veil, and sprinkled before the mercy-seat. Thus was exhibited remission of sins through the shedding of blood; and at the same time illustrated the laying of the sins of the world upon the Lamb of God, who in his own person discharges the functions of both goats,—in being put to death for our sins, and in bearing them away, so as to be remembered no more. The importance attached to blood by Jehovah is shown in the prohibition against eating it; the reason being that it was the life, and that which maketh atonement. Thus,—"Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood, I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood."—Lev. xvii. 10-12.

The necessity of the death of the Messiah as a sacrifice for sin is thus rendered apparent. We may not be able to ascertain the reason of such a necessity; but of the fact there can be no doubt in the mind of any one who receives the Scriptures.

But it is highly probable that the doctrine commonly held on this subject has much to do with the objection referred to,—so much suffering endured by the substitute for so much sin committed by the sinners. The following extract from "Christ is All," by the Dean of Gloucester, is a fair sample of what is held and taught:—

"What then occurs? See Jesus crushed to the earth beneath the load of anguish! Each bleeding pore proclaims that more cannot be borne!

"But whence is the God-man's mighty agony? The fire of heaven's wrath has fallen on him. Vengeance has seized its prey. He undergoes the very pang which would have tortured his redeemed if they had tossed in hottest flames for ever. The fire burns, the anger rages, until each sin has infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned. No fuel then remains. All is consumed. The fire dies. The wrath expires. Hark! Jesus utters the wonderous word. 'It is finished!'"

One article in Dean Law's creed is, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," but it is difficult to see how, if he considers himself one of "his redeemed," whose "every pang" has been "undergone" by Jesus, he can believe in the forgiveness of his sins. If God's "anger raged" against Jesus "until each sin infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned," where is there any room for forgiveness? Is not forgiveness a free gift bestowed without any mercantile equivalent being exacted in exchange? Does a creditor, who has been paid in full by a surety, imagine for a moment that he forgives the debtor? And again, to whom is the sinner's gratitude due? He may feel grateful to his substitute but how can this feeling be evoked towards that relentless being who made "the fire of heaven's wrath to fall upon Jesus," and whose "anger raged until each sin infinitely suffered what it infinitely earned"? Is it surprising that intelligent minds, whose ideas of Christian atonement are derived from such pictures of divine justice as this extract presents, should seek relief in partial or entire scepticism in regard to the Bible?

The true idea of substitution is not suffering for suffering, but death for death and that not the death of a separate substitute for each sinner, but the death of one for all: "Christ died for our sins." "The wages of sin is death;" but the death of the entire human race would not constitute an infinite idea. But Dean Law holds that Christ suffered infinitely, and possibly he also holds that he might have suffered infinitely even though he had not died; for that which rendered his sufferings infinite, though of temporary duration, and followed by death, namely his divinity, would render them infinite, although they should cease and he continue to live. But how could his divinity render his sufferings infinite, when, in the nature of things, it was exempt from any participation in suffering or death? If infinity were an element of the sacrifice, necessitated by eternal torment as the penalty of sin, it is difficult to see why the Dean of Gloucester should not go the length of holding the necessity of eternal suffering on the part of the sinner's substitute!

These remarks may serve to show the worthlessness of such abstract speculations as infinite sin and infinite suffering; and also the value of those plain statements of Scripture concerning the penalty of sin. From Genesis to Revelation, it is death, literal death, a returning to the ground whence man was taken. The ancient sacrifices were well fitted to impress the offerer with the fact that his life was inherited from an ancestor who had come under the sentence of death; and that God required a continual acknowledgment of this, not in mere word, but by the act of sacrifice. Much more the "one offering" of the Christ; "for if one died for all, then were all dead." And the true believer feels that it is not future happiness only that he needs from Christ, but actual existence, absolute life, without which all other blessings are impossible. This is true evangelical doctrine; for it strips the sinner of every possession, and makes him dependent on the Savior for everything.

The Apostle Paul sets this truth in a clear light in his letter to the Romans. He says—"For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. And not only so, but we also joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement (or reconciliation)." Then, at the close of this part of his argument, he says—"Now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

Here, through Christ dying for the ungodly, they are "justified by his blood," and "saved by his life." In the present life they "have their fruit unto holiness, and the end in the world to come, everlasting life."

The Lord himself taught the same truth. "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

The reconciliation spoken of in these passages is not the reconciling of God to us, but the reconciling of us to God. Paul makes this very plain in the following passage.—"All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

In one of the verses above quoted, Paul says, "Much more, being reconciled (by the death of Christ) we shall be saved by his life." It is worthy of notice, that the life of Jesus, restored by resurrection from the dead, was a necessity to our deliverance as his death was. He not only "ever liveth to make intercession for us;" but in the passage quoted, Paul says, "We shall also live with him, knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." He has triumphed over death and the grave in his own person; but he has been empowered to deliver all who are his. He says,—"Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." And again,—"I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen: and have the keys of hell (hades) and of death."

So deeply does the sacrifice of Christ enter into the glad tidings that the preaching of the apostles is termed the "preaching of the Cross." Paul says, "We preach Christ crucified;" and in the same letter (1 Cor.) he tells the disciples of Corinth, "I declare unto you the Gospel: . . . how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures."

But it is a remarkable fact that the cross was not preached till its victim had been restored to life again. What a deep significancy is here! It is hardly conceivable that any power in heaven or earth could have induced the apostles to preach a dead Christ to Israel or to the world. Nay more, they were not even required to preach a living Christ, while he lived "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." They preached the coming kingdom; and while doing so they were charged by their master "to tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ." And as to the cross, although they were plainly told that it should be the instrument of his death, "this saying was hid from them." But after the event, and after his resurrection from the dead, his receiving all power in heaven and in earth, his exaltation to the heavens, the angelic assurance of his return, and, above all, the descent of the Holy Spirit according to his promise, they boldly proclaimed his death, resurrection, and Christship. "This same Jesus whom ye have crucified, God hath made both Lord and Christ." Thus it was after that "by his own blood he entered into the holy place" that "the blood of the Cross" became a subject of public preaching, and was thus superadded as a new element of that "gospel of the kingdom" which had been made known by Jesus and his apostles in "the days of his flesh."

The Gospel has not escaped the corruption which has overspread other truths of Christianity. The current doctrine is that this latter element, the blood of the Cross, constitutes the entire gospel of Christ. The peculiar glory of Jesus as the Messiah, the Lord's Anointed, and that kingdom of his Father David, promised to him of old, are almost universally ignored as Bible truths; and even where thus recognized, are in the majority of cases denied a gospel character. How hard it is to come to the knowledge of the truth; and often harder still to estimate truth at its true value, even when we have found it. True, it is "precious blood;" yet it is "the precious blood of Christ," who is himself precious; as Peter testifies: "Unto you, therefore, who believe, he is precious." And in whatever aspects of his character and offices his preciousness appears, surely no one will deny it to that official Messiahship of which the apostle says, "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." Here the most momentous results are suspended on the belief that "Jesus is the Christ," even "having life through his name." He must indeed be precious to them who believe. But what is he to the unbelieving? "But unto them who are disobedient," continues Peter, "the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner; and a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence even to them who stumble at the word, being disobedient." May we all be persuaded to give ourselves no rest until Christ to us is precious, and so avoid the stumbling of those who are disobedient; for "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

* "This he did once" is limited to the intermediate object of his sacrifice and that for two reasons. He had no "sins" of his own as the Priest under the law has. And the present tense being in the singular number, has for its antecedent the immediately preceding actions; namely, "offered up sacrifice . . . for the sins of the people" (or comparing Lev. xvi. 5, 11, with verse 15 & 16)—even that the priest had to offer a separate sacrifice for himself before he offered that for the people. That he did actually, and the particular point of contrast here is, that Christ's once offering perfected for ever them that are sanctified.—Heb. x. 14.

THE IMPORTANCE OF RIGHT RELATIONS.

The mutual dependence of the parts of an argument briefly illustrated. In a carriage, for instance, the lack of a linchpin may derange the most august governmental procession.

Thus in a thousand things, in everyday life, we may show the importance of each item, though small in itself, to the perfection of the whole. If the purchase of an estate, the recording and seal of authority are essential to ownership, as really as the payment of its price.

So in national and governmental affairs, the throne, the crown, the sovereignty, the prerogatives and rights of Queen Victoria are all related and mutually dependent in the make-up of her royalty. Hence if the Prince of Wales should reach the throne he would wear the crown and assume all the dignities of English majesty. This all may see and know. But eminent and venerable clergymen—with the largest following—fail to see connect "the throne of David, Zion, Jerusalem, Land, Israel, and the kingdom to come." They admit the relation of these terms to the kingdom of Israel in type: for "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king in the place of David his father." 1 Chron. xxix. 23.

Can the type be more real than the anti-type?

No indeed. As Jesus is the Messiah—great David's greater Son—so he must take "the throne of his father David." Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 32, 33; Acts ii. 30-36.

That throne must be "in Zion—the holy hill of Zion; Zion is in Jerusalem; the city of the great King; and that city is the capital of the land of Israel and of promise." Psa. ii.; xlviii.; cii.; cxxxii.; Isa. xvi. 5; lix. 20; Rom. xi. 6; Rev. xiv. 1.

Now, any one who knows the importance of a linchpin to a carriage; or "the seal" to a deed, should know this relation of "Zion" to the throne; and the throne to Israel, the land and the kingdom of Christ. When taken in their mutual relation, as parts of the whole gospel they demonstrate its absolute reality, as to the geography, nationality and Abrahamic and Davidic promise. Psa. lxxxix.; Rom. iv.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 21, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 29, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 31, 1878.

"I have read it diligently again and again, * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'—R. K. B., Va.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 25, 1882. NO. 4.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Apostolic restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Four.

J. H. COX.

In the Holy Scriptures enjoined upon Timothy for meditation, we not only see God's perfection, and order in the great work of creation and redemption, but we also observe many examples of departures from the word of God.

In Eccl. vii. 29, we read, "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."

So very early in the history of man, while they were yet in the full enjoyment of all the blessings of their Maker, the old serpent came to Mrs. Adam and introduced a new idea to her, by adding one little word to the words of God. Now God had given them the privilege of eating of the fruit of all the trees of the garden, except the tree of knowledge; of that, God said they should not eat, if they did eat of it, the penalty reads, "Thou shalt surely die." But the Devil added the little word "not." He said to the woman, "Thou shalt not surely die."

What word added to the word of God, throughout the whole Bible has caused more trouble and misery in the history of the world, than this little word "not?"

So when Satan tempted our first parents, there was a lust created in them, and they were enticed. "Then the lust, when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sin: and the sin, when it is full-grown, bringeth forth death." James i. 15.—New Version.

Therefore the little word "not" added to the word of God, brought sin, sorrow, and death into the world. Hence, the serpent (Devil) was the first being who perverted the word of God.

The next thing which attracts our attention is the worship of Cain and Abel. Here is a difference in religious views; both of these persons proposed to worship God, but Abel offered his sacrifice by faith.

Paul says, "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, through which he had witness borne to him that he was righteous." Heb. xi. 4.—New Version.

So then Cain must have been one of those persons, who proposed to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. But Abel offered his sacrifice upon the principle that "without faith it is impossible to please him (God)."

Such are the inventions sought out by man, very early in his history. But passing by the idolatrous worship between this time and the time of the history of the children of Israel, I therefore observe some things spoken by the holy prophets concerning many of their leaders.

For Peter says, "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you." 2 Peter ii. 1.

What is said of them?

"Like people like priest." Hos. iv. 9. "For the leaders of this people cause them to err." Isa. ix. 16.

"For both prophet and priest are profane.... They prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.... Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets, that prophesy unto you: they make you vain; they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. They say still unto them that despise me, The Lord hath said: Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you." Jer. xxiii. 11-17.

The people of Israel were well pleased with such teaching.

Proof. "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." Jer. v. 31.

These priests were very ignorant and greedy. For we read, "His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant: they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark, sleeping lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs, which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." Isa. lvi. 10, 11.

"For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest, every one dealeth falsely." Jer. vi. 13.

"The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? None evil can come upon us." Micah iii. 11.

"That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh a reward, and the great man uttereth his mischievous desire, so they wrap it up." Micah vii. 3.

"O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name? Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; And ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? in that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible." Mal. i. 6, 7.

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me, But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? in tithes and offerings." Mal. iii. 8.

Thus we see that false teachers were very common among the Israelites; and they perverted the word of God, and led the people astray, and inculcated strange doctrines into their minds, so the people were very ignorant of the true teaching of God's word. But God was not well pleased with these things. For he spoke through the holy prophets, and said:

"The pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord, therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered." Jer. x. 21.

"Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture; saith the Lord. Therefore thus saith the God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people; Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them; Behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord. And I will gather the remnant of my flock, out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them: and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 1-4.

"And the word of the Lord came unto me (Ezekiel), saying, Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel; prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds, Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves: should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed, but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. .... As I live saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock, ... Behold I am against my shepherds, and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed any more: for I will deliver my flock from their mouth that they may not be meat for them." Ezek. xxxiv. 2-10.

Those Scriptures are not very complimentary upon the shepherds of Israel, nevertheless they are facts that cannot be denied, for they have a prominent place in the Book of Truth, and are great examples of the perversion of God's holy word. The knowledge of those priests is circumscribed within narrow limits, their errors and follies are glaring and innumerable; still, with all the powerful inducements to exercise humility, they dare to be proud and arrogant.

"Man, proud man,
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As make the angels weep."

If we come down to the time of John the Baptist, and of Jesus our Redeemer we find that the Pharisees and Sadducees were as proud and arrogant, and also as erroneous, as were the priests and false prophets in the days before.

When John saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance." Matt. iii. 7, 8.

And when Jesus, the "teacher from God," was instructing the people, and wrought miracles among them, the Pharisees heard of it, and they came to him, and accused him of casting out devils by Beelzebub the prince of devils. And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation.... O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Matt. xii. 24-25, 34.

And when the Pharisees and Sadducees came to Jesus, and desired a visible sign from heaven, "He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, it will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye discern the signs of the times? A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign: and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas, and he left them." Matt. xvi. 2-4.

After this, the Pharisees "took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk, .... saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth..... Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not? But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? .... The same day came to him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection, and asked him, ... In the resurrection whose wife (woman in controversy) shall she be of the seven? for they all had her. Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." Matt. xxii. 15-29.

"Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples, saying, The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: .... They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders: but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers. But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments. .... But woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites: for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites: for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence made long prayers, therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; .... Woe unto you, blind guides, .... ye fools and blind; .... ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel..... Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites: for ye are like whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanliness. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity. .... Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Matt. xxiii. 2-28.

It was these religious sects that caused Jesus the Redeemer to be put to death.

"All the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death. And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate." Matt. xxvii. 1, 2.

Then they derided him, and crucified him, in the midst of fanatic cheers of mockery.

The same bigoted principles abated not in the days of Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. When he spake the word of God with boldness unto them. "Then said the high priest, Are these things so? And he said, Men, brethren and fathers, hearken; (then he delivered unto them a true gospel sermon). And when they heard these things they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth..... And they cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul."

This bright young man was then a Pharisee, and he consented to the death of Stephen, he also persecuted the Church of God at Jerusalem, so that they were all scattered abroad

And he, "Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priests, and desired letters to Damascus to the synagogue, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem." Acts ix. 1, 2.

Such are the many examples of the departures from the word of God, which Paul admonished Timothy to study, and rightly divide.

So in my next I will continue the importance of Paul's admonition to our own time.

[To be Continued.]

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST JESUS.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."

Brethren and sisters, do we duly appreciate this very high calling? Are we preparing ourselves for the work of the future age, for which the father has seen fit to choose us?

Paul says, "Watch you, stand firm in the faith; be manly; be strong." Of course he has reference here to the church. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures. Now if we are a kind of first-fruits, it proves there is more to follow: for there is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself for all to be testified in due time.

O what glorious news: the angel said to the shepherds, Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. Blessed promise; how we long for the time, when all the ends of the shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him, for the kingdom is the Lord's and he is the Governor among the nations; the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. Let the people praise thee, O God; O let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth: Yea all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him; his name shall endure forever, his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed. Blessed be his name forever and ever. My meditation of him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the Lord, for thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come; when the Lord shall build up Zion he shall appear in his glory, for he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth, to hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death. For we know, says Paul, that the whole creation groans together, and travails in pain together. And not only it, but ourselves also possessing the first-fruit of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves waiting for sonship—the redemption of our body.

We long to see Jesus our living head, for we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together, for I reckon that the suffering of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. How these truths impell us to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Know ye not that they which run in a race run all; but one receiveth the prize; so let us run that we may obtain, for we run not as uncertainly, not as one beating the air, for whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith. Love not the world, neither the things of the world; if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him.

We have been called (or invited) for a purpose, for a great work, a work which was planned from the beginning by the Father; and will be carried out by the Christ head and body complete. May God give us wisdom and strength to fit ourselves for the glorious work of the ages. And may the Lord make us to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men. To the end he may establish our hearts unblameable in holiness before God even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

I would ask: Have we put our ears unstopped, and are our hearts ready to receive and believe the sound of the trump and the voice of the archangel? If so, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together (in the same condition) with them in the cloud to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord; wherefore comfort one another with these words.

Yes, those are words that sound sweet to the believer's ear; the world don't hear these sounds, they are intoxicated with the pleasures of life, they are the children of the night and of darkness; but the time will come when they will be made to hear; for it is written every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess to God; for the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly but by reason of him (God) who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Therefore let us while we are in this condition continue to do good to all men; knowing they are all God's creatures, and remember he first loved us. For by grace we are saved through faith; and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast.

Dear brethren and sisters, we must consecrate all we have and are, to the Father, not simply our goods and our money, but our wills, and our liberty. Paul says, And I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord. They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit; let us not be desirous of vain glory. Are we able to drink of the cup that he drank of? and are we able to be baptized with the baptism that he was baptized with (death)? Dying daily, crucifying the flesh, keeping this body under subjection; this body of death; but though our outward man perish the inward man is renewed day by day.

Now if we be dead with Christ we believe that we shall also live with him. And what a beautiful type is the water baptism, of our being dead to sin, dead to the flesh. We are buried with him into death, that like as he was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life, therefore we reckon ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through our Lord Jesus Christ; for he that is dead is freed from sin.

Thanks be to God for this good news. Therefore, brethren and sisters, let us stand fast and hold the traditions which we have received and direct our hearts unto the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ, is the prayer of your humble sister in the Anointed.

MRS. M. A. PINK.

A collection of great interest to Oriental scholars, consisting of 5,400 cuneiform tablets, is now on its way to England. These were discovered by Mr. Rassam at Sippara, near Babylon. It is supposed that they are the library mentioned by Berosus, which contained antediluvian records copied from earlier documents by King Sargon I., who lived 1,800 B. C.

Selections.

THE MOHAMMEDAN MESSIAH.

It is a well-known fact that the great prophet of Arabia was indebted for many of his ideas to the Jews. This is apparent to all readers of the Koran. As the central idea of the Jewish faith was a coming Messiah, we might expect to find something of the same kind in Mohammedanism. We might suppose that the prophet, familiar with Jewish history, would look forward to times of corruption, unbelief, and captivity for his own people, and that he would teach them to look for a great deliverer, a Messiah, who should restore the faith and lead them to the conquest of the world.

We may, then, accept as probably genuine the famous tradition, which is received by all sects of Mohammedans, that, on a certain Friday, in the mosque at Medina, the prophet himself said: "When there shall remain but one day of the days of the earth, God shall prolong that day, and shall send forth from my house a man bearing my name and the name of my father, and he shall purify the earth from injustice and fill it with that which is right."

Other traditions say that this man, whose name is to be Mohammed, the son of Abdallah, is to be called the Mahdy (guide), that he is to appear suddenly in some distant place, from which he will at once march toward Mecca, destroying all unfaithful Moslems, as well as Christians, on his way. The streets of Mecca itself will run with blood. He is to overcome all opposition, and reign over the world until the second coming of Jesus and Mohammed for the final judgment.

Still another tradition predicts the coming of the Mahdy, and the final overthrow of the Turkish power and caliphate of Constantinople, in the year of the Hegira 1300, which is 1882 of our era. It is a curious fact that there is now in Tripoli a man who answers in every way to the demands of the traditions. He is the son of a famous sheik of the family of the prophet whose name is Abdallah. His own name is Mohammed. The tradition says that his vicegerent is to be named Abd-ul-Mutalleb, and this is the name of the present Schorif of Mecca, who is supposed to be conspiring against the Sultan. A telegram reached Constantinople a few weeks since from Mecca that this man, Mohammed-ibn-Abdallah, had actually started from Tripoli to fulfill his mission; but it proved to be a false alarm.

The Mohammedan world seems to be in a state of expectation, as was the Jewish world at the time of the coming of Christ. Its promised Messiah is to come like a true Moslem, sword in hand, and his kingdom is to be of this world. He is to rule as an autocrat, and restore the primitive faith of Islam. All nations will be forced to submit to his rule, and the predicted time is at hand. So far as Mohammedans believe is this prediction, they must be excited by it. It is, of course, impossible to say how far it is believed; but it is certain that it is thought of and talked about in all parts of the Turkish dominions. As the prediction foretells the overthrow of the Turkish power, it excites very different feelings at Constantinople and among the Arabs. The latter would welcome such a leader and rally around him, while the Sultan would find him his most dangerous foe.

The facts must be kept in mind by any one who would follow and understand the course of events in the east. While the Arabs are waiting for the Mahdy who is to overthrow the Turk and unite the world under his sway, the Sultan is trying to assert his right as Caliph to command the support of the faithful. The newspapers of Constantinople, especially those published in the Arabic language, for circulation in India and Africa, are filled week after week, with violent appeals to Mohammedans everywhere to rally around the Caliph and unite against Christendom. The last mail brings the leading Turkish papers, which declare that Turkey has made an alliance with Germany against France, and appeals to the Mohammedans of Africa to unite their forces to exterminate the Christians. They denounce England, and call on the Mohammedans of India to rise and throw off her yoke. It is well known, also, that the Sultan has sent a large army to Tripoli. It is believed that he has furnished the Arabs with arms and ammunition to enable them to resist the French in Tunis.

Many persons have been alarmed by these demonstrations, especially by the articles in the official Turkish papers; but it is probable that they have far more to do with the conflicting claims of the Caliph and the Mahdy than with any anticipated attack upon Christendom. The Sultan is simply struggling to regain the power of the old Caliphs over the Mohammedan world, while the Arabs who hate the Turks, are using this prediction of a coming Messiah, or Mahdy, to unite the people against the Sultan.

The rumor of the escape of Mithad Pacha from his prison in Arabia grew out of the report telegraphed from Mecca that Mohammed-ibn-Abdallah had started from Tipoli with an army, and that the Arabs had revolted and set Mithad Pacha at liberty. So far as is known, there was no truth in either of these reports; but they caused great alarm in Constantinople and led to the recall of the governor-general. It appears also that the revolt of Arabi Bey in Egypt had something to do with this coming Mahdy, and that it is directed against Turkish influence in Egypt quite as much as against Europeans.

A generally accepted prophecy of this kind, of course, tends to fulfill itself. It suggests to ambitious men the possibility of taking advantage of it to secure power. We may expect that this Mohammed of Tripoli or some other Mohammed-ibn-Abdallah will rise about this time and attempt to unite and reform the Mohammedan world. The whole power of the Sultan will be used to put him down; but he will have the sympathy of the Arabs and probably of the Mohammedans of India. Christendom does not know enough of the present feelings of the Mohammedans to predict the result; but should either party attempt to gain favor by an attack upon Christians, the result would not be doubtful. It may be possible for a Mahdy to reform Islam and bring it back to its primitive simplicity, although the Wahabi movement in this direction was a failure; but the time has passed when it is possible to draw the sword successfully against Christian Europe. The Sultan must be fully aware of this, and, in spite of the violent articles in the Turkish papers, there is no reason to fear that he will court destruction by uniting the Christian powers against him. If he were driven from Constantinople, he would not only lose his empire, but would at the same time lose the last remnants of his influence as Caliph.—George Washburn, D. D., President of Robert College, Constantinople, in Independent.

Prophecy Fulfilled.

A singular treatment of the ruins of Babylon, and one which might be readily overlooked in its bearing upon the predictions of Scripture in minute detail respecting this city, has not escaped the observation of Mr. Rassam, a thorough explorer of the site. "There is one fact connected with the destruction of Babylon and the marvellous fulfillment of prophecy which struck me more than anything else, which that seems never to have been noticed by any other traveler, and that is the non-existence in the several modern buildings in the neighborhood of Babylon, of any sign of stone which had been dug up from its ancient ruins, because it seems that in digging for old materials, the Arabs used the bricks for building purposes, but always burnt the stone thus discovered for lime, which fact wonderfully fulfills the divine words of Jeremiah—namely, 'And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor for foundations; but thou shalt be desolations forever, saith the Lord.'" (ch. li. 26.)

Life is but a journey, of which the passage of Jacob from Beersheba to to Haran is a type. Happy are they who find or make for themselves a Bethel by the way. For if this be found in the journey, the end will be blessed, though the way be wild and rough.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Jan. 24, 1882.

WE have received a Chart of History—but too late for examination and adequate notice in this number of our paper. It is an elaborate scheme for the adjustment of the prophetic numbers to the events of history.

WE abound and superabound in manuscript communications. All are received with thanks whether we ever find room for all or not. And we also tender thanks for the multiplied expressions of approbation that daily reach us.

OUR old subscribers are renewing week by week. We are gratified to say that discontinuances are but very few indeed, while new names are being added to our list. With a proper effort on the part of all our friends, THE RESTITUTION might soon be elevated to a self-sustaining position. Nearing a crisis in history, as we most certainly are, let us all be true and faithful. Deliverance draws near.

AS SOME of our brethren hold the futurist views with regard to the book of Revelations, we insert an article in this number, from a brother who advocates that side of the question. Fairness demands this, although we are not in accord with this system of interpretation. We thought of suggesting some difficulties that stand in our way in the current issue, but have not the time at our disposal. Let us kindly prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

THE trial of Guiteau, for the murder of President Garfield, is now nearing its close. As our paper goes to press Judge Porter is mercilessly tearing off the thin and false gauze of insanity that the assassin's defenders have been so industriously trying to weave round the vindictive homicide The withering, slaughtering invectives of the Judge, too, are falling like thunderbolts on the horribly and absurdly blasphemous claims to inspiration plead by the criminal. Murder, with malice aforethought, is too deeply branded into the poor miscreant's forehead to be veiled with any amount of legal chicanery.

THE irrepressible Oriental Question is not permitted to slumber long at a time. The joint action of England and France is almost certain to lead to an armed intervention in the affairs of Egypt. The real power in Egypt is now said to be in the hands, not of the Khedive, but in the hands of Arabi Bey, who controls the army, and who is a zealous Mohammedan. He has denounced the Anglo-French note and the Anglo-French controllers. He says the army must govern until popular abuses are redressed. The little cloud rising on the shores of the Mediterranean may soon overspread the Eastern world.

SEALS, TRUMPETS, WOES, AND VIALS.

O. T. BOBBS.

When the book with seven seals is given to the Lamb, a proclamation goes forth, covering all the events of seals, trumpets, woes, and vials, unto the restitution of all things spoken by the holy prophets. The seals are then opened in consecutive order: the trumpets sound, the woes are inflicted and the vials poured out. They are events of the judgment of the great day.

When the first seal is opened, "The Prince of the covenant" comes forth riding upon a white horse, carrying a bow, and wearing a crown! The white horse symbolizes peace, the bow conquest, and the crown universal empire, "He shall enter peaceably upon the fattest provinces," "and by peace shall destroy many."

The covenant with death, and agreement with hell is "confirmed" "for one week" "the King shall do according to his will," and "shall prosper, till the indignation be past."

When the second seal is opened he goes forth upon a red horse, and with his great sword he takes peace from the earth. Persecution, tribulation, and death follow.

When the third seal is opened he is seated upon a black horse and the proclamation goes forth, "A measure of wheat (one quart) for a penny" (14 cents), and there is famine.

When the fourth seal is opened "The Lion is come out of his thicket, the Destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place (palace) to lay the land desolate," and one-fourth of all the earth are slain.

When the 5th seal is opened, they who had been slain by peace, by war, by persecution, by captivity, by flames, by famine, cry "How long!" They "rest," a little season, till their brethren are slain, for it is but a thousand two hundred and ninety days from the time the daily sacrifice is taken away "in the midst of the week," and the abomination that maketh desolate set up till the sanctuary shall be cleansed; till the seventh trump shall sound, and the sleepers in the dust awake, and stand in their lot at the end of the days.

When the sixth seal is opened, "His voice which once shook the earth," amid thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, tempestuous darkness, and the trump of God, now shakes not earth only but heaven also. Mountains and islands remove, the heavens roll back, and "pass away with a great noise," and the affrighted world hide in caves, and dens, calling on rocks and mountains to fall, and hide them from the presence of God. The "great day of his wrath is come," the edicts of the "King of fierce countenance" are proclaimed, and whilst the angel seals the hundred and forty-four thousand of Israel, unto the day of redemption, he seals his servants unto perdition.

In those days men seek death but cannot die. A measure of wheat for a penny, to those who have the mark of the beast or the number of his name. None other can buy or sell. The abomination that maketh desolate is "standing where it ought not." In the Holy Place, the "Man of Sin" is sitting in the Temple of God at Jerusalem, and they that are in Judea flee to the mountains for there is great tribulation."

The seventh seal is opened, and there is silence in heaven! Fire from the Altar is cast into the earth, and there follows voices, thunderings, lightnings, and earthquake.

The seven angels who stand before God prepare to sound.

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion. Sound an alarm in my holy mountain."

"Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble. The harvest of the field is perished, the fire hath devoured the pasture of the wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field. The beasts groan, the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture."

The first angel sounds, and hail, fire, and blood are cast upon the earth, and the third part of the earth was burned up, and the third part of the trees were burned up, and all green grass was burned up.

The seven trumpets of Revelation synchronize with the seven trumpets of the prophets. "Salvation is of the Jews," and so are the trumpets. They sound by Jews, and for the Jews, when in national capacity, by virtue of the "covenant for one week," and not otherwise. They sound when the daily sacrifice is taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, "in the midst of the week." They sound in and for the "day of wrath." They sound in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and nowhere else.

The anti-typical plagues on Egypt now fall upon a Godless world. The trumpets sound, the woes are inflicted, and the vials are poured out. The "two witnesses" who stand before God as Moses stood on the Mount, come down and prophecy against the beast and false prophet, a thousand and two hundred and sixty days, breathing fire against fire; and they smite the earth with plagues as often as they will, and there is no rain on the earth in the days of their prophecy.

The drouth foretold by Joel, and by the angel of the first trumpet, in synchrony, dries up the great river Euphrates, that the Assyrian kings may pass over to engage in the battle of the great day. "Behold! I gather all nations to Jerusalem to battle," and all who burden themselves with Jerusalem shall utterly perish. The cavalry of Apollyon are there, and their number is two hundred millions. "I heard the number of them."

Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision. The day of the Lord is a day of terror and alarm. The sun shall be darkened, black as sackcloth of hair, the moon turned to blood, the stars fall, and the shekinal cloud is seen in heaven.

The slain of the Lord covers the earth. "The violence done to me and to my flesh, be upon Babylon, shall the inhabitants of Zion say, and my blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say; and as Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall; so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth. The thousand two hundred and ninety days have an end. The armies of the ten kings make war with the Lamb. The voice of the archangel, and the trump of God shakes heaven and earth. The beast and false prophet are cast into the lake of fire, and they who are Christ's at his coming shall be caught away to join the innumerable hosts of angels, and the general assembly of the church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven.

Editor Restitution:

It is a common expression—"how time flies," and so it is, and so it is not! for are we not the objects of rapid flight? do not we spend our days as a tale that is told, and as a watch in the night! are not our days as a weavers shuttle? and oh how oft I am reminded of this; living in Brooklyn, and engaged in the busy affairs of busy life in the driving city of New York, I think of this as I hasten thereto in the morning, refreshed from the night's rest, and cheered thither by a sense of duty, for the good of my family, and those who employ me; I think of this as I homeward plod in the evening, quite weary, and desiring home, not simply and solely as a place of rest, but to greet and be greeted by those who cheerily say—papa, we are glad to see you, and I in turn to say, dear ones, it does me good once more to see you! "Home, sweet home," the place on earth nearest akin to that we seek in the world to come.

The thought that came to me first, on sitting down to write you this evening was: Well, here is another year; and it is about twelve months since I wrote Brother Chaplin, and it seemed to me I would write you oftener, were it not I so often hear from you through THE RESTITUTION: and most gladly does the paper come to me, bearing very interesting matter on its pages. I do not weary in reading much therein, and I am grateful to those who show so great ability as some do, in setting forth old things in new dress. There is very little that may be called new, unless it is the ventures some put forth in determining the time; and this to the uninitiated, has much the appearance of new, and many catch at it and adopt it, and think it strange—more than "passing strange," if you do not with them, see the complete argument, the most complete argument, ever presented, for the establishment of what to them, I doubt not, has more than a semblance of truth therein. My brother, I have an unchanged mind on those matters, so far as the "time" question is, and while I never questioned the fact, that there are "times and season" in the Book, I never saw enough evidence to prove to me, that the time had yet come for "The wise shall understand;" this has been too much of a catch word, and the wise (in their own conceits) have clearly demonstrated this fact. On this question I have had but one mind, not that I can truly say that I have lived up to the command, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour, etc;" the true position of the devout believer is, as it always has been, a waiting one. My prayer is, that I may have my loins girt with truth ready to defend it against the attacks of those who, not knowing the truth, are more zealous to defend error than desire to know the truth that makes free, and has no bondage about it. "Therefore, being justified by faith (the faith,) we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Patience has given us experience; experience has developed hope (the hope); and this hope maketh not ashamed; and I am free to say,—Glory be to God!

I said I was grateful to those who write so ably and interestingly for the RESTITUTION. I repeat it; I am free to confess I have gathered many a pleasant thought which has proved profitable to me, from its pages. I think, with many years experience, I have learned, to some extent, how to analyze, so as to select that kind of reading, which to me is meat. Paul advised Timothy, "Till I come, give attendance to reading." Some will say, Paul meant he was to read the "Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation;" and I do not wish to question this, but that Paul meant this, and only this, I am not prepared to allow. Would it were so, that there was less storring of the sayings and doings of men, and more earnest and devout relish for the Word of God! we should have here, as elsewhere, a church that might boast (if boasting were allowed,) that could say it was as a city set on a hill, a light dispensor—holding forth the word of life, which always has light in it, to those who vorily set in darkness, and who say, they have no desire for the "presence" of Christ, and who only see the "day of judgment" as a future matter to be dreaded. Not so, those who are enlightened; they see in this day, blessing, not only for the dead resurrected,—the living changed—but an era of blessing for the heathen, or nations during the time when the Lord Christ shall be King.

To me, the day of the Lord is a desire; that it may soon come, a prayer; that the righteous may be exalted to inherit the land, and dwell therein; not for a few short years, and then drop into the pit, a putrefying mass of corruption; but as inheritors, with immortal natures, share with the Son of God, that inheritance promised him; and all who shall then have a nature like unto his. The world to come is his, it is also ours! "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." "He that hath an ear, let him hear."

THE KINGDOM AND DOMINION.

Down east preachers and people talk of a kingdom under the whole heaven. The Bible says Kingdom and Dominion. All dominions shall serve and obey him. If the new earth is to be all Canaan, Abraham might as well have gone to Egypt or Persia or any other country and walked through it as through Canaan, if it is to be all Canaan.

The Kingdom of good Queen Victoria was set up before she had a dominion. Her dominion might be taken away and she would have a kingdom.

In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem. For as the new heaven and the new earth shall remain, so shall your seed and your name remain.

Editor Restitution:

I am at my own quiet home after an absence of more than eight weeks in the Province of Ontario—enjoying good health for a man in his 73d year, and the 67th year of his pilgrimage—a pilgrimage through trying scenes, for which I am, with mine, thankful to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

My theme has been the kingdom of God and the things concerning Jesus the Christ, and a strict obedience to all of God's commandments. Also the evidence that Gentile times are soon to close, and the Christian and gospel age soon to commence.

I spent four Sundays with the loved ones in South Gower, Kemptville, and Ventnor. In the latter place I gave three discourses to attentive audiences. At the close of the Sunday afternoon sermon we ate the memorial supper, and it was a heavenly season to all. I had the honor, after opening the ice, of immersing one into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Visited them all at their own homes, where I had sweet conversation upon Bible subjects.

Gave eleven sermons in South Gower, had a good turnout and good attention. All of us enjoyed a feast; ate the memorial supper on three different occasions, and precious seasons they were to all.

Preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Wm. McKeene, who had fallen asleep. He was one of the excellent of the earth. He was immersed by the writer some years ago; he was amiable and lovely from his childhood, and subsequent to his immersion an honor to Jesus in his life and death. A young wife and child, fond parents, brothers and sister, neighbors, and the church of God are left to mourn their loss; but he rests in the dust waiting the coming of Jesus to take him out of the cold grave into the saint's Eden home—the earth in its restored state. The text on the occasion was "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." The audience was large, and it was truly a solemn, yet joyful time.

I visited all the loved ones at their own homes, talking upon things new and old. Some of the brethren in each of these places keep the Sabbath of the Lord instead of Sunday, and others are convinced that it is the one to be kept. But no division or unkind feeling has ever risen among them. It is over thirty years since I commenced to labor in those places, and I record this as the most delightful visit of all.

Dec. 12, I bid adieu to those loved ones, and amid falling tears, started for Matilda, being conveyed by my faithful Bro. Forester where I met my wife at her mother's; spent three days most happily with her relatives. Then I took my leave of them and started for Bowmanville, stopped over night at Nappanee with Bro. Crankhite. Preached at B. on Friday, where my true yoke-fellow, D. Hogarth, met me and took me back to Selina, where I stopped over three Sundays, preaching twice each Sunday in their chapel, to good congregations. The memorial supper was eaten. My wife met me at this place, and in company with her I visited all the loved ones at their own homes. A more hearty welcome and kind treatment ought not to be expected in this age by any one than that bestowed upon us.

Brother and Sister Hogarth have fourteen children, all of them I believe are in sympathy with the truth. I have immersed ten of this family. For a number of years I have spent Dec. 25 with this family. Truly it has always been a joyful gathering and greeting.

I commenced my labors in this place about twenty-three years ago. Never have I enjoyed a visit with them better. Many of them have visited us at our own home. But I expect a more joyful meeting with most of them, if not all, when Jesus comes. The Lord grant that all of them have a desire to be saved.

We spent four days at Bowmanville, with Bro. Lent and daughters. On Sunday I gave an exposition of Dan. iii. vii. at his house. It was a season of refreshing from the Lord.

On the 10th inst. we took our leave of this dear family for Toronto, where we spent three days most happily with the loved ones. Reached home Jan. 13, found all right.

Fraternally,

R. V. LYON.

SIGNS IN THE EAST.

The premonitory signals of stupendous changes are showing themselves in the old world. Let us take a brief glance at several of these.

1. The effete and imbecile condition of Papery. Without doubt Rev. 18, had its accomplishment in 1870 and great Babylon fell—not into rottenness or impurity, for she was rotten at heart all the while previously, not finally, for she still exists, but fell from the backs of the beasts that bore her to her "judgment." Rev. xvii. 1, fell from the support of the civil powers, so that she is now only upheld by the "people," v. 15,—fell in just such a way as never before, and fell, I think, to rise to kingly domination and temporal sovereignty no more. It was the passing of an important milestone. It was the striking loud and strong of the clock of time. Since eleven years ago we have witnessed the dividing of the great city and heard the divine call come out of her. I can only see at present her final plagues impending when the system will disappear like a millstone hurled into the sea. Meanwhile, there are signs that the present Pope will not long survive, and that Papery itself will vacate the eternal city.

2. The tendency to a vast political union of all the millions of Mohammedan nations in Europe, Asia, and Africa. The Moslem newspapers say they must unite for the purpose of resisting the encroachments and beating back the armies of Christendom. It is boldly proposed to lift on high the sacred banner of the Prophet, and the Sultan as Caliphat and successor to Mohammed, is looked to as leader and commander in the sanguinary onset. The pressure upon the people of Islam by the six powers, and more recently by France in Tunis, is provoking and precipitating this mighty movement. Should this come to pass the Orient would be drenched with blood and the great powers would have their hands full of battle and war. Without doubt it would fulfil Dan. xi. 44, Europe would rid her soil of the Turk, who would plant himself on the sacred hills of Palestine as a last stand; and in his desperate madness "go forth with great fury to utterly destroy and make away many," but a sudden interposition of angels with Michael at their head leading on the Lord in his advent, will cut short the fray and bring the "end." We can only hope it will soon come.

3. The armed posture of Europe, and her gigantic preparations for some awful strife is startling. The gross population of but five of the great powers is 238 millions, and their armies on a peace footing amount to 2,100,000, but on a war footing to 7,000,000 men, with reserve amounting to 14,000,000 of men. Ashibaki Forbes, the celebrated English war correspondent, says, "the continent of Europe is one vast arsenal and camp of standing armies." It maintains the "immense armies and navies of Europe; the expenses every year reaches the sum of $600,000,000. All over Europe, wherever you go you meet with the inevitable and eternal soldier. It is idle to say all this means nothing. This military madness is prophetic, It is terribly significant; it is ominous of astounding scenes not far in the future. It fulfills Joel iii. 9-10 to the letter. It is the harbinger of the judgment day. It agrees with the prophetic word that says, the "nations were angry" at the very time when the last trump sounds. Rev. xi. 1-8, and at the epoch of the end there is to be a period of unparalleled national trouble. Dan. xii. 1.

With these things before us—here but imperfectly sketched—and with a thousand signs and omens in earth and sea and sky, I must still look for the Bridegroom's appearing as a grand miracle close at hand. And I think we had better drop all controversies, bury all differences, hush all discord, and cease all antagonism, and unitedly continuing our great mission, in warning an evil world, and comforting a weary church, with the loud, far reaching proclamation of the dear Master's immediate coming. Oh for more love and heart purity!

A RUSSIAN NIHILIST TO BE HANGED.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 20.—Nicholai Sankowsky, who attempted to kill Gen. Tchecevine at the Interior Department, has been sentenced to be hanged, and his accomplice, Meinikoff, has been sentenced to twenty years' hard labor. They both pleaded extenuating circumstances, and have appealed.

It is said that the "Holy League," which was recently formed to counteract Nihilism, will be officially recognized as a branch of the police. This will be, perhaps, even more unpopular than a reconstruction of the famous "Third Section."

ANTI-GERMAN RIOTS IN RUSSIA.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Berlin correspondent of the Morning Post says: "Anti-German disorders have broken out at Riga, Russia. The authorities are apparently unwilling to suppress the riots."

VIENNA NEWSPAPERS CONFISCATED.

VIENNA, Jan. 20.—Evening newspapers to-day were confiscated for reporting a speech of the president of the United Left, in which he denounced the attempts to drag the Crowd into the political arena.

AUSTRIAN SOLDIERS SLAUGHTERED.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—Advices have been received that the insurgents near Bobar, in Herzegovina, have slaughtered a detachment of ten Austrian soldiers and burned their quarters. The insurgents have also defeated a number of Austrians near Bladagora. Telegraphic communication with the disturbed districts is prohibited. Gen. Jovanovics, the Austrian commander, establishes his headquarters at Ragusa.

REPORTED REVOLUTION IN BOLIVIA.

LISBON, Jan. 20.—Advices by mail from Buenos Ayres to Dec. 20, have been received. It was reported that a revolution had broken out in Bolivia, and that ex-president Pierola of Peru had sailed for Europe. The attitude of the United States with reference to the affairs of Chili and Peru was viewed with dissatisfaction by all the South American republics.

Brevities.

Dr Laws, of the Livingstonia Mission, writing from Lake Nyassa, announces that the New Testament is being translated into Chinyanja and Chitonga. These two translations are additions to the thirty-two African languages into which portions of the Bible have been rendered. The whole Bible has, as yet, been published in only eight of the many hundred languages of Africa.

True believers are greatly agitated over the expected coming of the Mehdi or Mohammedan Messiah. The prophet himself foresaw this event, and prophesied that he would be an Arab and a descendant of his own house. El Mehdi is expected to unite the faithful, restore Islam, and rule over the Mohammedans throughout the world. According to a prophecy that has for several years been carefully circulated among the Moorish Musselmans, he will make his appearance on the first day of the month Moharram in the year 1,300. (Nov. 12, 1882). He will be 40 years of age and of noble appearance, and one of his arms will be longer than the other. A religious devotee of great sanctity in North Africa is already known as El Mehdi (literally; the teacher), and in personal appearance corresponds exactly with the description in the prophecy. He will probably attempt to play the part of the Messiah, and, aided by a fanatical following, may seriously threaten European influence in India, Egypt, and Algeria.

THE RAIN TREE.

Some travelers in South America, in traversing an arid and desolate tract of country, were struck (says "Land and Water"), with a strange contrast. One side was a barren desert, and on the other, a rich luxuriant vegetation. The French Consul at Loreto, Mexico, says that this remarkable contrast is due to the presence of the tarumo caupi, or the rain-tree. This tree grows to the height of sixty feet with a diameter of three feet at its base, and possesses the power of strongly attracting, absorbing and condensing the humidity of the atmosphere. Water is always to be seen dripping from its trunk in such quantity as to convert the surrounding soil into a veritable marsh. It is in summer especially, when the rivers are nearly dried up, that the tree is most active. If this admirable quality of the rain-tree were utilized in the arid regions near the equator, the people living there, living in misery on account of the unproductive soil, would derive great advantages from its introduction, as well as the people of more favored countries where the climate is dry and droughts frequent.—Am. Rural Home.

Of all the calamities which have ever in modern times overtaken a crowd of human beings in a single building, the burning of the church of La Campania, Santiago, in 1863, has never been equalled or approached. In one short hour 2,000 people, nearly all ladies of youth, rank, and beauty, were reduced to ashes. The flower of the capital of Chili had gathered in the church, in a spirit of religious excitement, to pay its devotions at the closing celebration of the Immaculate Conception. Every seat was full. Nothing that invention could suggest or wealth supply was omitted in the adornments of the occasion. The interior of the church was hung from roof to floor with floating gauze and rich drapery, and lighted with festoons of innumerable paraffin lamps. An acolyte, in lighting the last lamp before the shrine, raised a flame which spread instantaneously. A rush soon choked the entrance with a wall of dead and dying twelve feet in height. The melting lead from the roof and the blazing oil of the several lamps poured down upon the heads of 2,000 tender women, who could be seen from the windows of neighboring houses rushing wildly to and fro without an outlet of escape. The falling of the roof put an end to their agonies, and completed a catastrophe which stands without a parallel.—London Times.

One of the Egyptian Pyramids has been opened for the first time in modern days. M. Maspero, the director of the Egyptian museum, has been greatly interested in a pyramid called the Meydoum, the entrance to which no one had been able to discover. It is situated on the borders of the Libyan Desert, and of all the pyramids is considered the most mysterious. The following account is from the Paris Journal des Debats, and was written by M. Maspero's assistant. "The pyramid has long been the subject of curiosity, and Ismahin Pacha even endeavored to effect a breach in its walls with artillery, in the hope of finding a treasure concealed therein. By removing some of the ground on the north side of the artificial mound which surrounds the pyramid. M. Maspero has succeeded in uncovering all the points where an opening might be revealed, and the result has shown that his calculations were well founded. Thirteen days of active labor, with skilled workingmen, have sufficed for the discovery of a secret which was believed to be undiscoverable. The spades of the fellahs have exposed to view the opening, which is situated nearly at the top of the artificial mound. On entering the pyramid the visitor passes through a corridor, admirably constructed, which takes him about forty yards in a gentle decline, as is the case in the great Gizeh Pyramid. Here, for the moment, he is stopped by the debris, which is being rapidly cleared away. M. Maspero has already found two sacred inscriptions, in the style of the Twentieth Dynasty, giving the names of two scribes who had visited the pyramid."—Christian Herald.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

As announced last week, below we give the names of parties whose orders for tracts at 10 cts. per pound, came too late to be filled, and such persons will please notify us immediately what they will have done with the money sent. We will send other tracts at their actual cost, or to those who wish, the money will be refunded. Following is the list:

Mrs A Smith, C Boyd, Martin Moore Harry Ronner, W I Crockett, J R Willitt; Mrs Emma Smith, S T Blossing, C W M Hunt, C W Dean, O Scoville, J G McAnelly, J Robinson, P Fisher, Mrs Josiah Hornaday, Wm Hutchinson A G Winchester, Helena M Hunt, H H Geish, J & D Bender, M J Mansfield P Putman, Dan'l Gates, J A Thurman T P Morrow, T T Doyel, H Burdick, S M Hixson, L H Combes, C W Hoover, Mary Hoover, C W Young, J M Lewellen, R McLaughlan, Thomas Elton, Wm Reid, D T Seeley, K Tarr, Ira Forbes, Mrs M E Leppo, Mrs Judge E Barnum, S C Oliver.

The Christian must expect opposition from the world, because he is going just the contrary way from the multitude and has to pass through them.

DELIVERANCE.

When we reach the quiet dwelling
On the grassy crystal hills,
And our praise to him is swelling
Who the vast creation fills;
When the path of prayer and duty
And affliction all are trod,
And we wake and see the beauty
Of our Savior and our God—

With the light of resurrection
When our changed bodies glow,
And we gaze the full perfection
Of the bliss begun below—
Shall we recollect our sorrow,
And the clouds that hung o'erhead,
When our hearts are filled with gladness,
And our tears are dried by God?

All the way by which he led us,
All the goodness which he bore,
All the patient love he taught us,
Shall we think of them no more?
Yes, we surely shall remember
How he gave his hand to lead,
How he fanned the dying ember
With the spirit's gentle breath.

And we feel will be the pleasure
When we think of weary ways,
And our joy will be the purer
When we mourn on cloudy days;
'Twill be a glorious morrow
To a dark and cloudy day—
We shall recollect our sorrow
As the dreams that pass away.

THE LESSON OF THE ASSASSINATION.

Number Four.

A. B. MAHURIN.

"In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die and not live. Then he turned his face to the wall and prayed unto the Lord saying, I beseech thee, O Lord, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight, and Hezekiah wept sore. And it came to pass before Isaiah was gone out into the middle court, that the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Turn again and tell the captain of my people, Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears, behold I will heal thee: on the third day thou shalt go up into the house of the Lord. And I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the King of Assyria and I will defend this city for mine own sake and for my servant David's sake." 2 Kings ch. xx.

The moral of the president's assassination will lose much of its force if we omit to dwell on his personal relations to the sad tragedy and his course and conduct during the long and gradual illness which preceded his death.

President Garfield claimed to be the servant of God, and by profession and church connection, a Christian. This relation, apart from the high office he held as the head and chief magistrate of a people in a "Christian land" imposed upon him certain duties and obligations in recognition of the supremacy, and will of the Almighty which he could not easily forget; yet it was a notable feature of his surroundings throughout his long confinement that there is no report of any reference or allusion by the sufferer, to his faith and trust in God at such a crisis. No account of any appeal for divine help and mercy either from the president himself or by others at his request. Dr. Power, who stood in the relation of pastor to him and of whose church he was a member—has stated since his death—that though he was frequently present at the White House and offered and desired to see the president, he was never called into his presence, nor requested to offer prayer in his behalf. What may have passed in his own mind and thoughts during that long and painful illness, we know not. Let us hope as he must have believed, —as the Bible teaches—that the issues of life and death are with God, who has promised to hear the cry of distress and for help from those who trust in him through the mediation of Jesus Christ his Son, the Christian's only mediator—that he did not neglect or omit this natural and becoming appeal to him "whose eyes are over the righteous and his ears open unto their cry." The Bible is full of precept and examples of such helpful reliance, and of answer to prayers. It teaches that the just shall live my faith—"that the effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much." The apostle James, illustrates this promise by the example of Elijah whose prayers—though a man of like passions with ourselves—brought first drought and famine and afterwards rain and plenty from the land of Israel, in the days of King Ahab.

St. James is very specific as to the particular course to be pursued by the Christian who is sick or afflicted in such exigencies (ch. v. 14.) and ends with the assurance that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven." It is not to be supposed that Mr. Garfield—a reader teacher, student and lecturer on the Bible could be ignorant of these and similar encouraging and consoling promises, yet he seems to have been forgetful of them. for it is a true saying that "out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh"—that, "we cannot but speak the things that we have heard," the occasion invites our utterances and at such times, we desire and are expected to give expression in words to what we think and feel. Yet this Christian man and magistrate gave no sign of the faith that was in him. The voice of prayer, the song of praise, the reading of God's blessed word with all its glowing promises and its soul-subduing consolations, were unheard in the sick chamber—around the yielding couch of the wounded and dying man!

It might be thought that the pain and sufferings of the stricken sufferer repressed these natural and becoming emotions of the higher life or deprived him of the power of expressing them. But there was often an absence of pain —moments—even hours of apparent relief and promised convalescence, during which he conversed of current topics, wrote a letter to his mother, conferred with his official advisers as to public affairs and dictated and performed official acts. Dr. Bliss relates that at Elberon he felt so far convalescent that he proposed a game of whist, at cards, and even asked if he might not take a hand—and we know it was only in the closing hours of the last sad scene of death that his strong mind and will wandered and failed him.

It is by no means an agreeable task to dwell on these features of the weakness and infirmities of our fallen nature, as illustrated in the career of one of our race, but they fix in our mind the useful lesson it is so hard for us to learn that "man at his best estate is altogether vanity." At one period of Mr. Garfield's busy life, he doubtless fully appreciated this wholesome truth but his active and energetic pursuit of the objects of human ambition—his daily contact with politics and politicians and his familiarity with their crooked ways naturally but culpably blunted his otherwise acute perception to the lowered tone of morals and religion among public men and brought him imperceptibly under influences unfavorable to religious growth and vitality. It is said that "politics make strange bed-fellows." In connection with that reflection we cannot ignore the patent fact that in this last and greatest trial of his life, the president was surrounded by those only, in the members of his cabinet and in his physicians and household, who seemed to ignore his religious relations and not to have adverted to his moral and spiritual wants and necessities but were intent only on his recovery to sound physical life. It is remarkable that among his chosen and official associates and friends, not a single Christian was to be found who did not hide his candle, if he had one, "under a bushel." The very numerous bulletins and official reports of the president's condition were conspicuous for the utter absence of all reliance or even allusion to the divine interposition and mercy—to any hopeful help and blessing from God under such trying and distressing circumstances. Thus God was ignored. His supremacy was unacknowledged and his very name seems not to have been invoked or heard, during the sixty-nine days of mortal sickness in the death-chamber of the Christian chief magistrate of 50,000,000, of so-called Christian people. Is it wonderful then that God should have turned a deaf ear to the formulated prayer and services offered and "taught by the precept of men" in official manifestoes of the civil magistrates and the formal rescripts of church dignitaries with high sounding titles? "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble." Is it not written for our instruction in his word of truth: Thus saith the Lord, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom; neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches, but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me,—that I am the Lord that exercise loving-kindness, judgment and righteousness, for in these things I delight, saith the Lord."

King David called upon the Lord "when the sorrows of death compassed him." He says "In my distress I called upon the Lord and cried unto my God. He heard my voice out of his temple and my cry came before him." Then he adds, "The Lord was my stay. He brought me forth into a large place and delivered me."

We have seen in the beginning of this paper, how Hezekiah, King of Judah, in view of the impending death which threatened him behaved himself. He sought the Lord in prayer and supplication that he might not die but live, and the Lord hearkened and heard and graciously in answer to his prayer added fifteen years to his life. Such examples ought not to be lost upon us. Afflictions and trials in the present life form the school in which our faith and trust in God are daily being tried and proved. If we stand the trial and abide faithful, our reward is certain and sure, but if we faint under them and turn not to the Lord for help and strength, who will commit unto us the true riches of life and immortality which are the fruits of our fidelity and firmness?

Nations no less than individuals have their trials. They are all put to the proof that they "that are approved may be made manifest," for "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." May the people of the United States lay this tragedy of their President's fate to heart and profit by the lesson.

THE PUNISHMENT OF SIN.

NUMBER THREE.

I proceed to give similar proof with regard to each of the parts, the body, the spirit and the soul.

First, then, as to the body, no one doubts that it suffers privation of life. Nor will the same be less evident as regards the spirit, if it be allowed the spirit has no participation in the Divine nature, but is purely human; and that no reason can be assigned, why, if God has sentenced to death the whole of man that sinned, the spirit, which is the part principally offending, should be alone exempt from the appointed punishment; especially since, previous to the entrance of sin into the world, all parts of man were alike immortal; and that, since that time, in pursuance of God's denunciation, all have become equally subject to death. But to the proofs.

The preacher himself the wisest of men, expressly denies that the spirit of man is exempt from death; iii. 18-20: "As the beast doth, so doth the man; Yea, they have all one breath, .... all go into one place." And in 24th verse, he condemns the ignorance of those who venture to affirm that the way of the spirits of men and of beasts after death is different: "Who knoweth the spirit of man, (an anima eius exalat,) whether it goeth upward?"

Psa. cxlvi. 4: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish."

Now the thoughts are in the mind and the spirit, not in the body; and if they perish we must conclude that the mind and spirit undergo the same fate as the body.

I Cor. v. 5: "That the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus;" the apostle does not say "in the day of death," but "in the day of the Lord."

Lastly, there is abundant testimony to prove that the soul (whether we understand by this term the whole human composition, or whether it is to be understood as synonymous with the spirit) is subject to death, natural as well as violent.

Num. xxiii. 10: "Let me (anima mea, Lat. Vulg.) die the death of the righteous."

Such are the words of Balaam, who, though not the most upright of prophets, yet in this instance uttered the words which the Lord put in his mouth. Verse 9.

Job xxxiii. 18: "He keepeth back his soul from the pit." xxxvi. 14: "They (anima eorum. Lat. Vulg.) die in youth." Psa. xxii. 20: "Deliver my soul from the sword." lxxviii. 50: "He spared not their soul from death." lxxxix. 48: "Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave." xcix. 17: "My soul had almost dwelt in silence."

Hence man himself, when dead, is spoken of under the name of "the soul." Lev. xix. 28. "Neither shall he go into any dead body" (soul, Hebrew). Isa. xxxviii. 17: "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption."

The just and sufficient reason assigned above for the death of the soul, is the same which is given by God himself. Ezek. xviii. 20: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" and therefore, on the testimony of the prophet and apostle, as well as of Christ himself, the soul even of Christ was for a short time subject unto death on account of our sins. Psa. xvi. 10, compared with Acts ii. 27, 28, 31: "His soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption." Matt. xxvi. 38: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Nor do we anywhere read that the souls assemble, or are summoned to judgment, from heaven or from hell, but that they are all called out of the tomb or at least that they were previously in the state of the dead. John v. 28, 29: "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

In this passage those who rise again, those who come forth, are all described as being in the graves, the righteous as well as the wicked.

1 Cor. xv. 52: "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." 1 Thess. iv. 13-17: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope: for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him: for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep; for the Lord himself shall descend, etc. .... And the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

They were asleep; but the lifeless body does not sleep, unless inanimate matter can be said to sleep. That ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope,"—but why should they sorrow and have no hope, if they believed that their souls would be in a state of salvation and happiness even before the resurrection, whatever might become of the body?

The rest of the world, indeed, who had no hope, might with reason despair concerning the soul as well as the body, because they did not believe in the resurrection; and therefore it is to the resurrection that Paul directs the hope of all believers.

"Them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him;" that is, to heaven from the grave. "We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep."

But there would have been no reason to fear lest the survivors should prevent them, if they who were asleep had long since been received into heaven: in the which case the latter would not come "to meet the Lord," but would return to him. "We," however, "which are alive shall be caught up together with them," not after them, "and so shall we ever be with the Lord," namely, after, not before the resurrection.—Selected from the writings of Milton, by E. N. Harding.

The Bereaved Mother.

O mother, whose children are sleeping,
Thank God as by their pillows you kneel,
And pray for the mothers now weeping
O'er pillows too smooth and too white;
Where bright little heads oft have lain,
And oft little cheeks have been pressed;
O mothers, who know not the pain,
Take courage and bear all the rest.

For the soul-messenger angel is going
With pitiless flight o'er the land,
And we wake in the morn never knowing
What he ere the night may demand;
Yes, to-night while our darlings are sleeping
There's many a soft little bed
Whose pillows are moistened with weeping
For the loss of one dear little head.

There are hearts on whose innermost altars
There is nothing but ashes to-night;
There are voices whose tones softly falter,
And dim eyes that shrink from the light;
O mothers, whose children are sleeping,
As you bend to caress their fair heads,
Pray, pity for the mothers now weeping
O'er pitiful smooth little beds.

Dr. Duff on Children.

Dr. Duff, the consecrated missionary to India, began his work there on a principle altogether new in missionary enterprise. He began with the children. With the eye and heart of a philosopher, as he was, a Christian philosopher, he saw that, if he could gain the children, the coming generation would be gained. In the words of Sir Charles Trevelyan:

"Up to that time, preaching had been considered the orthodox regular mode of missionary action; but Dr. Duff held that the receptive, plastic minds of children might be moulded from the first according to the Christian system, to the exclusion of all heathen teaching, and that the best preaching to the rising generation, which soon becomes the entire people, is the line upon line, precept upon precept of the school-room."

This action of Dr. Duff's recalls the action of the Spartans, who, when Antipater demanded fifty children as hostages, offered him in their stead a hundred men of distinction. One would have thought this by far the noblest offer, but there was a far-seeing wisdom in it. In the children, there was hope of retrieving their loss, and wiping out their dishonor. Their fathers had lost the day, the children might regain it. In them Sparta would flourish anew.

Band of Hope Review.

Who Wins?

Boys, this is a question of great importance.

Who will succeed in life?

The boy or man who spends his evenings away from home—attending music-hall, theatre, or billiard-room; playing dice, billiards or cards; smoking tobacco, or gambling;—or the one who is entirely free from all that we have named—whose inclinations are in the direction of home, industry, sobriety, self-culture, of right, the truth, and of God?

We have in mind a most worthy gentleman who stands high in business circles, because when but a boy on the streets of London he chose the right and maintained it. At eleven his father died, leaving a wife and four children. From that time for seven years that boy sold papers and blacked boots, all the while supporting the family out of his daily profits. At eighteen he commenced business for himself as a merchant, and to-day is highly respected by his many friends and acquaintances, and is doing a flourishing business.

Who wins? The boy or the man of bad habits? No! The boy, or the man who can swear cheat, lie, or steal, without being found out? No! But he wins who is not ashamed to pray to God in the hour of temptation for help —for strength more than human when adversity overwhelms. He who reads God's Word and trusts it; who is not governed by the motive is it expedient, but is it right?—he wins.

The Beggar.

A TRUE STORY.

One cold, windy morning, the last Sunday in December, 1849, a half-naked man knocked timidly at the basement door of a fine, substantial mansion in the city of Brooklyn. Though the weather was bitter, even for the season, the young man had no clothing but a pair of ragged cloth pants and the remains of a flannel shirt, which exposed his muscular chest in many large rents. But in spite of his tattered apparel and evident fatigue, as he leaned heavily upon the railing of the basement stairs, a critical observer could not fail to notice a vestige of dignity and the marked traces of cultivation and refinement in his pale, haggard countenance.

The door was speedily opened, and disclosed a large, comfortably furnished room, with its glowing grate of anthracite, before which was placed a luxuriously furnished breakfast table. A fashionably attired young man, in a brocade dressing gown and velvet slippers, reclined in a soft fauteuil, busily engaged in reading the morning papers. The beautiful young wife had lingered at the table, giving to the servant in waiting, her orders for the household matters of the day, when the timid rap at the door attracted her attention. She commanded the door to be opened; but the young master of the mansion replied that it was useless—being no one but some thievish beggar; but the door was already opened, and the sympathies of Mrs. Maywood enlisted at once.

"Come in to the fire," cried the young wife impulsively, "before you perish."

The mendicant, without exhibiting any surprise at such unusual treatment of a street beggar, slowly entered the room, manifesting a painful weakness at every step. At his entrance Mr. Maywood, with a displeased air, gathered up his papers and left the apartment. The compassionate lady unwisely placed the half frozen man near the fire, while she prepared a bowl of fragrant coffee which, with abundant food, was placed before him. But noticing the abrupt departure of her husband, Mrs. Maywood, with a clouded countenance, left the room, whispering to the servant to remain until the stranger should leave.

She then ran hastily up the richly mounted stair-case, and passed before the entrance of a small laboratory and medical library, occupied solely by her husband, who was a physician and practical chemist. She opened the door and entered the room. Mr. Maywood was sitting at a small table, with his head resting upon his hands, apparently in deep thought.

"Edward," said the young wife, gently touching his arm, "I fear that I have displeased you; but the man looked so wretched I could not bear to drive him away;" and her voice trembled as she added, "You know that I take the sacrament to-day."

"Dear Mary," replied the fondly fond husband, "I appreciate your motives. I know it is pure goodness of heart which leads you to disobey me, but still I must insist upon my former commands that no beggar shall ever be permitted to enter the house. It is for your safety that I insist upon it. How deeply you might be imposed upon in my frequent absences from home, I shudder to think. The man that is now below may be a burglar in disguise, and already in your absence taking impressions in wax of the different keyholes in the room so as to enter some night at his leisure. Your limited experience of city life makes it difficult for you to credit so much depravity. It is no charity to give to street beggars; it only encourages vice, dearest."

"It may be so," responded Mrs. Maywood, "but it seems wicked not to relieve suffering and want, even if this person is lying badly, and we know it. But I will promise you not to ask another into the house."

At this moment the servant rapped violently at the door, crying out that the beggar was dying.

"Come, Edward, your skill can save him, I know," said his wife, hastening from the apartment.

The doctor did not refuse this appeal to his professional vanity, for he immediately followed his wife's flying footsteps as she descended to the basement. They found the mendicant lying pale and unconscious upon the carpet, where he had slipped, in his weakness, from the chair on which Mrs. Maywood had placed him.

"He is a handsome fellow," muttered the doctor, as he bent over him to ascertain the seat of his pulse.

And well he might say so. The glossy locks of raven hair had fallen away from a broad, white forehead; his closed eyes were bearded by long raven lashes, which lay like long, silken fringe upon his pale, bronzed cheeks, while a delicate aquiline nose and a square and massive chin displayed a model of manly beauty.

"Is he dead?" asked the young wife, anxiously.

"Oh, no! it is only a fainting fit caused by the sudden change of temperature, and perhaps the first stage of starvation," replied the doctor, sympathizingly. He had forgotten, for the moment, his cold maxim of prudence, and added, "He must be carried to a room without a fire, and placed in a comfortable bed."

The coachman was called in to assist in lifting the athletic stranger, who was carried to a chamber, where the doctor, with his own hands, administered restoratives. The young man soon became partly conscious, but all conversation was forbade him and he sank quietly to sleep.

"He is doing well; let him rest as long as he can; should he awake in my absence, give him beef tea and toast ad libitum," said the doctor professionally, as he left the room.

In less than an hour afterward Dr. Maywood and his lovely wife entered the gorgeous church of "The Most Holy Trinity."

Amid the hundred fair dames that entered its broad portals, dressed with all taste and magnificence that abundant wealth could procure, not one rivaled in grace and beauty the orphan bride of the rich physician. Her tall graceful figure was robed in a violet silk, that only heightened by contrast her large, azure eyes, bright with the lustre of youthful happiness yet. There was a touch of tender pity in their drooping lids that won the confidence of every beholder. The ermine mantilla which protected her from the piercing wind, rivaled, but could not surpass, the delicate purity of her complexion. Many admiring eyes followed the faultless figure of Mrs. Maywood, as she moved with unconscious grace up the centre aisle of the church, but none with more heartfelt devotion than the young, wayward, but generous man, who had recently wed her in spite of her poverty and the sneers of his aristocratic acquaintances.

The stately organ had pealed its last rich notes, which were still faintly echoing in the distant arches, when a stranger of venerable aspect, who had previously taken part in the services at the altar, rose and announced his text, the oft-quoted, but seldom applied words of the apostle, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Dr. Maywood felt his brow flush painfully; it appeared to him for the moment that the preacher must have known of his want of charity towards strangers, and wished to give him a public lesson; but he soon saw from the tenor of his remarks that his own guilty conscience had made the application in his particular case.

I have not the space, not indeed the power to give any synopis of the sermon, but it, combined with the incident of the morning, effected a happy revolution in the mind of at least one of his hearers. So much so that on the return of Dr. Maywood from church, he repaired at once to the room of the mendicant to offer such attention as he might stand in need of. But the young man seemed to be much refreshed by nutritious food, and commenced gratefully thanking his host for the kind attentions he had received, which without doubt had saved his life.

"But I will recompense you well, for, thank God, I am not the beggar that I seem. I was wrecked Friday night in the Ocean Wave, on my return from India. My name was doubtless among the list of the lost, for I escaped from the waves by a miracle. I attempted to make my way to New York, where I have ample funds in the bank awaiting my order, but I must have perished from cold and hunger had it not been for your and your wife's charity. I was repulsed from every door as an impostor, and could get neither food nor rest. To be an exile from one's native land ten years, and then after escaping from the perils of the ocean, to die of hunger in the streets of a Christian city, I felt was truly a bitter fate."

"My name is Arthur Willet," added the stranger.

"Why, that is my wife's family name. She will be doubly pleased at her agency in your recovery."

"Of what State is she a native?" asked Arthur Willet, eagerly.

"I married her in the town of B——."

At this moment Mrs. Maywood entered the room, surprised at the long absence of her husband.

Arthur Willet gazed at her with a look of the wildest surprise, murmuring:

"It can not be—it cannot be. I am desirous to think so."

Mrs Maywood gazed with little less astonishment, mentionless as a statue.

"What painful mystery is this?" cried Dr. Maywood, excitedly, addressing his wife, who then became conscious of the singularity of her conduct.

"Oh, no mystery, only this stranger is the image of my long-lost brother, Arthur." And Mrs. Maywood, overcome with emotion, turned to leave the room.

"Stay one moment," pleaded the stranger, drawing a small mourning ring from his finger, and holding it up, asked if she recognized the relic.

"It is my father's gray hair, and you are—

"His son, Arthur Willet, and your brother."

Mary Willet Maywood fell upon the mendicant's breast, weeping tears of sweetest joy and thanksgiving.

Dr. Maywood retired from the room and left sister and brother alone in the sacred hour of reunion, saying to himself.

"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Copied from Messiah's Herald.

Christ is the gospel personally, and the gospel is Christ unfolded.—John Cumming.

The church has but two enemies in this country which she need fear, and therefore but two dangers: Ignorance and immorality.

The honest, earnest man must stand and work,
The woman also; otherwise she drops
At once below the dignity of man,
Accepting scornful. Free men freely work.
Whoever fears God, fears to sit at ease.

Inward goodness and benignity of spirit reflect a certain sweetness and serenity upon the very countenance, and make it amiable and lovely, inspire the soul with a noble resolution and courage, and make it capable of enterprising and effecting the highest things. —Seougal.

The name of Jesus is power and willingness. There is life in that name. Love has made it the wing of its swiftest messenger. God has made it the talisman of hope. With great love, O sinner, Jesus entreats you. Own your sins at his feet. Lay down your sorrows at his cross. Take his love into your hearts and give life to his service. —P. W. Houghout.

Rise for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming out
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to the fight are gone.
A place in the ranks awaits you,
Each man has some part to play;
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern To-day.
—Adelaide Proctor.

Preserve your conscience always soft and sensitive. If but one sin forces its way into that tender part of your soul and dwell easy there, the road is paved for a thousand iniquities.—Watts.

There are some persons who are constantly asking for special rules of life. They would have an individual Bible with particular instructions for each hour of their lives; but Christ dealt with great principles which are to be the basis and motive of all action, and from these, with the aid of his Spirit, we are to draw out our own applications.

'Tis a good thing sometimes to be alone,
To sit calmly down and look self in the face,
Beneath the hush search every secret place;
Prayerful uproot the hopeful weeds there sown,
Pluck out the weeds are the full crop is grown,
Gird up the loins afresh to run the race,
Resterate noble thoughts, cast out the base,
Thrust forth the bad and make the good thine own.

Who has this courage has to look within,
Keep faithful watch and ward with inner eyes,
The foe may harass, but can ne'er surprise,
Or over him ignoble conquest win.
Oh! doubt it not, if thou wouldst wear a crown,
Self, basest self, must first be trampled down.
—John Addison.

"THIS SAME JESUS."—Acts i. 11.

FRANCES R. HAVERGAL.

This same Jesus! Oh, how sweetly
Falls those words upon the ear;
Like a swell of forest music,
In the night-watch still and drear.

He who healed the helpless leper,
He who dried the widow's tear;
He who clasped to health and gladness
Helpless, shivering, trembling fear;

He who wandered poor and homeless,
By the stormy Galilee;
He who, on the night ere dawned the
Bent in prayer the wearied knee;

He who gently called the weary,
"Come, and I will give you rest!"
He who loved the little children,
Took them to His arms and blessed;

"This same Jesus!" When the vision
Of that last and awful day
Bursts upon the psychate spirit,
Like a midnight lightning ray;

Then we lift our hearts, adoring;
"This same Jesus," loved and known—
Him, our own all-gracious Savior—
Seated on the great white throne.

For this word, O Lord! we bless Thee;
Bless our Master's changeless name:
Yesterday, to-day, forever,
Jesus Christ is still the same.

THE LITTLENESS OF MAN.

There are times in our lives that we feel burdened with a sense of our own littleness and weakness. I once stood on the precipice overlooking the great falls of Niagara and beheld its "terrible majesty," heard the voice of its ceaseless thunder and felt the thrill of its power in the trembling earth beneath my feet, caused by the downrushing of the mighty weight of water, and how insignificant I felt before the stupendous scene which nature was enacting. It seemed as if I had stepped from the presence of man into the anti-chamber of the great creator. I was awed into becoming reverence and felt as Sir Isaac Newton did, in contemplating the heavens under the light of modern science, like lifting my hand above my head in act of silent worship.

Turning from the local and near signs and tokens of the Creator's power and wisdom, to the grander displays of his creative skill, and viewing that small (comparatively small) portion of the heavens that may be scanned by our most powerful telescopes and seeing worlds upon worlds, suns and systems, sweeping through the fields of space, to be assured that those worlds are vast bodies, many of them being thousands of times larger than the earth, and then to think of the power and wisdom necessary to create these stupendous globes, to adjust them to their several orbits like wheels in a mighty machine, to set them in motion and keep them moving age after age in harmonious order and precision; and we feel like a mere speck in the immensity of God's works. The language of the Psalmist, under these impressions, comes forcibly to mind: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him, or the Son of man that thou visitest him?" Psa. viii. 3–4. David's thoughts must have been lifted by inspiration vastly above the crude notion of the heathen world who looked up to the heavens with a dull, brute gaze, or as some did, to read in the various aspects of the stars, the owners of the evil or good fortune they would meet with along the path of life. He, perhaps, had a view which modern science with its wonderful discoveries has not yet transcended. It is well to take these views of the Creator and his works to humble us, it takes all the pride out of us. But how comforting the thought that this great builder of the universe attends to our smallest needs; giving us life, and breath and all things, assuring us in his word, that "the hairs of our heads are all numbered," and more, he has condescended in his goodness and mercy, to relate himself to us under the endearing name of Father, that he pardons our sins and upon the conditions of faith in his word, and the poor and imperfect service of this fleeting life, makes us heirs of an eternal weight of glory—ages without end.

Oh how weighed down with a feeling of unworthiness, and how we are humbled and subdued into prayerful submission to his will, and we say "how true it is, that the love of God leads us to repentance." JOHN L. WINN.

OUR EXALTATION.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Not long since I stood in the beautiful cemetery at Louisville. I saw the marble sepulchres of the rich. I saw their costly monuments. I read the inscriptions placed there by loving hands. I saw on many of the graves wreaths of flowers, but they were withered. I read that the occupants of many of those graves were not beneath the sod, but above the blue vault of heaven. I saw the flag of the United States wave proudly over the resting place of hundreds who had fallen in battle. I looked on the words of eulogy, and when I had turned away—when I thought seriously of these things—these words came into my mind:—

"Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust—
Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?"

And I answered—no! It is all vanity.

"Do not our trophies and gilded dust our pride
Look on; for a moment whole and round;
Like that to the buried body of the king,
Found lying with his arms and ornaments
Which at the touch of light, the air of heaven
Straight fell to ashes, and was seen no more."

The sum of every life is failure that has not availed itself of the promised "honor, glory, immortality." Poor, miserable, blind, and naked is he who will not have "beauty, for ashes, oil of joy for mourning, or the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

The apostle John says, "Every one who hath this hope"—what hope? Of seeing and being made like Jesus as he is! "Every one who hath this hope purifieth himself even as he is pure."

Truly the one sublime and changeless hope, the rainbow that will not "vanish amid the storm"—must shine, lighten, and purify us. We have only to open our lives, and the beauty of its presence will fill them.

What a wondrous exaltation. To be called sons of God! This earth can produce nothing like it. Present exaltation is with it, present fame, present enjoyment, present emolument. Not so with our exaltation brethren. If we are true to our brother, and our tender loving Father, are we not now seen as was Jesus at the last supper—girded and serving?

Ah if we know these things happy are we if we do them. If our Lord and Master—if the only begotten Son of God—could wash the stains from his followers' feet—shall we forget to serve, refresh, and comfort one another?

O world flaunt your banners, and revel in your palaces—you have not learned what it is to be exalted. Go abase thyself to learn the Glad Tidings—go humble thyself to be obedient—tear off thy tinseled trappings, and while thou mayest enter into the household of faith.

Fellow-sons of God, remember your calling. Make it sure. Live above hate's petty whisperings. Be men "sun crowned who live above the fog." Love each the other, and you will love God, for if ye love not one another whom ye have seen, how can ye love God whom ye have not seen?

Let us live more and more for Christ. More and more to be loved of Christ, and so shall we know in the fast approaching time what it is to be "made like Christ when we see him as he is."

"O Savior kneel, and Pitiest
The highest, holiest manhood thou;
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine."

Editor Restitution:

My son Platt M. Corbaley, returned home October 9th, to make us a visit after an absence of a little more than three years. He has been living at Spokan Falls, Washington Territory during that time. He and Miss Nellie M. Jefferson of Alameda, California, were married on the 20th of December last. On Christmas day there was a reunion of all our children on this coast; comprising four sons, one daughter, three daughters-in-law and two grandsons.

Our oldest son, John A. Corbaley, wife and two sons, who live at Monroeville, Indiana, to our regret, could not attend with us. It was pleasant indeed to have such a pleasure once more—and we may not have many more, if indeed we ever have another in this world.

While we were assembled together, the reflection would come: Will we all meet in the kingdom of God, or will there be some missing links? It is indeed a serious matter for all of us to think of.

How many who enjoy the society of dear and beloved friends, seldom ever think seriously of the realities of the world to come, and who are making no real preparation to secure an acceptance when the great life giver comes. What is now but a matter of faith and hope will soon become a reality. In the great throng who will participate in the first resurrection or pass over from mortality to immortality in the charge thereby avoiding death, we can imagine fond parents with eager eyes gazing over the great throng in search of their beloved children. The husband or wife seeking the former companion—children seeking parents and their brothers and sisters. Alas, from all indications, how few entire families will meet without a missing link or former loved one. And what a terrible thought that those who are unworthy are left out for all eternity—unworthy of the glory—honor, immortality and eternal life of an endless world. The thought of being found unworthy is fearful to contemplate—but how much more to realize when too late.

Before the flood the earth was filled with violence. Men and women lost nearly all regard for God or for virtue. The inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah were likewise—vicious and wicked. In each case the threatened calamity came literally upon them. Our Savior has left the warning, that as in the days of Noah and of Lot, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man."

It does appear as if the great mass of human beings now living upon the earth are dependent for their salvation upon systems devised by man, or altogether ignore the plain precepts to be so easily found in the oracles of God.

Nearly every system professedly religious or otherwise, has for its foundation the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the soul—that death is in reality the gate that passes them into the Paradise of God in heaven. This conduct ignores Christ or rather his great mission of conferring immortality and eternal life at his second coming. Indeed it does away with the necessity of his coming again. Why should he come to this earth if the saints are in heaven? And what necessity of a resurrection if the saints are already happy?

I am glad to know there are some yet, who are willing to be led by the teachings of the word of God; and who are willing to put in practice those precepts God has appointed for the development of the kind of character that will give them "an entrance abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

In hope,

RICHARD CORNALEY.

P. S. Brother Joseph H. Willey, of Rensselaer, Jasper County, Indiana, has been visiting with us lately. Yesterday, January 9th, he started from here to go to the southern part of this state. He appears better pleased with Russian River Valley where we live than any other part of the state he has yet visited. He will probably return to his home sometime in February.

It does us good to have our eastern friends visit us,—hope more may come. Has brother J. F. Wagoner given up the idea of coming to this coast? More laborers are needed here in this large field.

I have attended meetings in Indiana, when so many preachers were present that all did not get an opportunity to preach for want of time. I should like to attend a protracted meeting of that kind here. We should all be vigilant the little time remaining for work. In a little while our opportunities will be passed—and we can not go back to repair neglects. Now is the time to work, and now is the day of salvation.

Our time is far spent, but you have been very kind to send us the paper, for which we send our thanks. Enclosed is our subscription. We don't see how we can do without THE RESTITUTION, as we are so isolated. It gives us great satisfaction to read the writings of brethren and sisters of like precious faith. We hope both editor and contributors will endeavor to show the world the true light of Scripture in a kind and loving spirit. May we all have the spirit of Christ dwelling in us richly.

Editor Restitution:

I have not written for sometime, so perhaps the editor and all the brethren will excuse me for taking up a small portion of room.

The apostle Paul says to Timothy that all Scripture that is given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Thus we see by the apostle's instructions to Timothy, that the Scriptures that are inspired are sufficient to direct us to a state of perfection, not that I think the apostle would have us understand that we could reach that state of perfectness in this life, but points to a time in the future when we will be made perfect; for he said elsewhere to Timothy that he did not expect his crown until the coming of the Lord. It seems the apostle understood the needs of the followers of the Lord, being under the inspiration of God, so he wrote to Timothy that we might know where to get our instruction, so when we want knowledge we go to the word for it. I conclude from a candid study of the word that by nature we know nothing of the plan of salvation, or how to please God, but when we consult his word we find we are enemies to God, and also the words of reconciliation. We read and learn our duty to God and our relation to him.

A few words to those who are in Christ: We should live soberly and righteously in this present world, for we are looking for our reward in the kingdom of God which is to come. We ought always to speak the truth without being a respecter of persons. Deal honestly with all men, be respectful to all, seekable to all, exact nothing unfairly from worldly people—mind the are watching you to see if you are consistent with your belief. You say the word is your guide, then live up to it as far as you can. This will be letting your light shine, that others may see your good works, and be led to honor our Father in heaven.

Please find enclosed five dollars to pay my subscription and to send to whom you think best. We are still living in hope of the soon coming of Jesus our King to establish his kingdom on the earth, under the whole heavens, and the longer we live the more we see the necessity of his coming. We see the professed church so corrupt we cannot tell who are professors and who are not. It seems to be money, money, no matter what means are used or how we get it. Paul says: "Do not evil that good may come" but as all strive to live that when Jesus comes we may be ready.

I find my subscription has expired, and I want to renew, as we do not wish to be without THE RESTITUTION, for it brings us glad tidings of good things, and is always welcomed to our home.

I would say by way of encouragement, that we are having a good meeting here. Quite a number have started on the good way. It rejoices our hearts when one has been praying for years for his family, to see them all make a start; he feels glad, it causes him to praise the Lord. May the good Lord keep us and our family over at the foot of the cross, little and unknown, but loved and prized by God alone, is my prayer. Amen.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find our subscription. Myself and wife are almost alone here, trying to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. There are plenty who once were obedient to the faith—who once believed in organization and meeting once a week to celebrate our Lord's death until he comes again. But some have adopted the yearly communion and disorganization theory, and by this means have lost sight of nearly all except the pleasures and cares of the world. We desire the prayers of the faithful to sustain us in our lonely condition. May we soon meet you all in that kingdom that is to break in pieces and consume all others, and stand forever, is our earnest prayer.

I am the only person in this part of the country that takes your paper. Although poor, so far as this world's goods are concerned, we cannot well do without THE RESTITUTION. Would to God I could get more to take it and interest themselves in the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, that they might attain unto eternal life. May the blessings of God rest upon all the faithful in Christ, and may we all get home at last in our Father's kingdom, where we may be able to give praise, honor, and glory to his great and excellent name throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

Infidel Science.

EVOLUTION.

It's wonderful, neighbors! It is wonderful, what discoveries science has made. You have heard from our distinguished visitor, the amended genealogy of mankind. It's true neighbors, every word of it. There, for example, is the immortal Shakespeare. Would you know his origin? Science has traced back his progenitors to the remote ages of the past. Shakespeare was the son of the ape, which was the son of the monkey, which was the son of the four-footed beast, which was the son of the bird, which was the son of the fish, which was the son of the eel, which was the son of the tadpole, as it were. Or if you choose, you can turn it the other way, after the best form of Hebrew genealogy. The tadpole begat the eel, and the eel begat the fish, and the fish begat the bird, and the bird begat the beast, and the beast begat the monkey, and the monkey begat the ape, and the ape begat the ancestors of Shakespeare. It may seem a little humiliating to you, neighbors, and not equal to the old Bible genealogy you have been accustomed to follow. But then such is science.

Rationalism.

THE DEMONS AND THE SWINE.

A learned German professor argued that the demoniac of Gadara was simply a lunatic, who so frightened the swine that they ran down into the sea. We are strongly inclined to believe that with all his learning he was not very familiar with the habits of swine. We should like to set him to work driving one hog into the sea—not to say two thousand; he would probably learn more of the true nature of these beasts in one hour, than he could ever see through the clouds of tobacco smoke which quite likely bedimmed his vision when he was undertaking to expound Scripture. By the time he had driven one or two swine into the sea, he would probably be willing to turn the job over to some one else, and be fully prepared to believe that it would need a legion of devils to drown two thousand swine.

English Views of the Gulteau Trial.

Guiteau's trial, says the London St. James' Gazette, is perhaps as disgusting and discreditable a scene as has occurred in modern times. Let us hope that it may at least have some of the advantages which are supposed to have attached to the exhibition of drunken helots. If it has done nothing else, it will have shown how democracy carried out to its full extent tends to degrade courts of justice into the lowest kind of popular theatres, in which are enacted melodramas none the less disgusting because they are also profoundly horrible; and it will also have done something, let us hope, to convince reasonable men that no sort of person is better suited on every ground for being hanged than a wretch who, after crowning a life of infamy by an atrocious crime, tries by coarse buffoonery and impudence to persuade the decent part of the world that he is what in his case he calls an "crank," and that as such he ought to be kept alive in comfort at the public expense and interviewed by reporters and experts.

Not a Blessing.

It is a good thing for the cause of morals that Dr. Gray, of Utica, in his testimony at the Guiteau trial, put the weight of his censure upon the miserable quackery that calls depravity a disease to be doctored with drugs. He said he did not believe in what is termed by some writers "emotional insanity" or "moral insanity." "Kleptomania" he considered simply thieving, "dipsomania" drunkenness, and "pyromania" incendiarism. These designations were simply convenient terms which had been invented to cover certain crimes.

This is sensible and true. Immense damage is done by imputing the wickedness of men to insanity or to uncontrollable passions, when it is nothing but their own guilty love of the evil. The get drunk, not because of any disease, but because they would rather get drunk than keep sober. They kill, because they choose to kill. This the law recognizes when it refuses to make drunkenness an excuse for crime. It is itself a sin, and when other sins follow as its results, the guilt is enhanced, not excused.

Prof. Plimpton says that "the history of both the Old and New Testaments stands now on a firmer footing than it did a hundred years ago. Assyrian, Babylonian and Egyptian inscriptions have brought into daylight clearness all that the Hebrew Scriptures tell us of such rulers as the Pharaohs, Sennacherib, Belmanasser, Nebuchadnezzar, etc. Chaldean and Assyrian records, give the Bible names of Omri, Ahab, Jehu, Pekah, Azariah, Ahaz and Hezekiah. The cemeteries of Rome, the Columbarium of Livia, the arch of Thessalonica, the stones of Cyprus, are adduced as verifying the New Testament account of the origin of the Christian Church."

—BY WILEY JONES.—

The above is the title of a book which every Bible student ought to have. I hope to be able to deliver it to purchasers in a few weeks, the Lord willing. It will probably contain about 250 pages, in neat cloth binding, price $1.25.

The concordances of the Hebrew words have been copied from "The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance" those of the Greek words from "The Englishman's Greek Concordance." But with all these are many other words learned students might be thought to guarantee I was unwilling that they work go to any one before personally or by letter each quotation. There is urgent need of complete accuracy and reliability in such a work as this. Others said a work like this—one of which says that it has reached its tenth thousand and yet under disposition, XXIX. Revised—four distinct errors in saying that one is not.

I have endeavored to use this period of retirement in a manner, conscientious search research and I have time in a small compass, a dwelling light of inestimable value on the following doctrinal and practical subjects:—preaching, exhortation, faith, hope, repentance, baptism, conversion, salvation, the covenants as to manner, eighteen ages, justification, the church, the world, the spirit, the soul, the state of dying, the dead, the grave, the spirit, hell, Sheol, and Hades to death, second advent, resurrection, regeneration, immortality, incorruptibility, paradise, the kingdom of God.

A FORTHCOMING BOOK.

A Treatise on the Covenants and Their Relationship.

This book discusses:

1. The immutability of God in his purposes.

2. His purposes in the creation of man, and Adam's failure as regal head.

3. The unfolding of the word seed as announced to Adam and Eve, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

4. The terms and confirmation of the Abrahamic covenant.

5. The perpetuity of the covenant.

6. The landed estate—its locality and boundary.

7. The non-possession of the heirs as yet. Who the heirs are and their inheritance yet future.

8. The abolition of the Sinaitic. Its relation to the Abrahamic. Where given. To whom given. Its terms.

9. The unity of the law. The law of the Lord and the law of God contained in it more than the decalogue. The law of Moses and the law of God one. The decalogue was in the law of Moses.

10. The purpose of the Sabbath.

11. The limitations and the cessation of the law—Sinaitic covenant.

12. The new covenant. The covenanters. The mediatorship—who is it. Our relation to the new covenant—as prospective parts and parcels of the mediation body—to bless the covenantees and the nations.

13. Priesthood—order of Melchisedec—1. Upon the plane of flesh. 2. Upon the plane of spirit abideth eternally.

14. Royalty of Christ—Davidian covenant.

15. Twelve objections to our views upon the kingdom discussed and answered.

The manuscript for this book has been in a state of preparation for a the past three years, and is now almost completed and will go into the hands of the printer in January, and ready for distribution in April or May. This will make a book of about 300 pages, and should be in the hands of every brother who is surrounded, or comes in contact with Sabbatarians, those who oppose the restoration of Israel, or probation to the ages to come.

The price of this book will be one dollar. We are now taking subscriptions to be paid when the book is delivered. We want 200 names to assist us in the expenses of the work. Send in your names to me immediately.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM
Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay any one at any and perusing its important information that it will not fail to impress to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 11, 1881.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and wisdom especially toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 22, 1881.

"Anything is endorsed by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested, merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for none of the topics are treated to pass in impatience to us. . . . Any one not fully acquainted with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1882.

"I have read it diligently again and again, and it is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the book of books."—D. M. Ea., Va.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer a clearer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time more briefly stated to general instruction on that subject. The price which brother Jones gives to it for his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'"—R. E. B., Va.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the translatication of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE (MESSIANIC)—ITS PROXIMITY.

Zechariah Continued. Thirteenth Chapter Investigated. Fourteenth Chapter Examined. Concluding Remarks.

No. 99.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Zechariah has traced the conversion of Judah with minuteness, having a clear vision of those distant times.

"At that time (time of their conversion) a fountain shall be opened for the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and uncleanness." xiii. 1.

"At that time" is a connecting chronological link between consecutive events. It does not teach that the events transpire at once; but that the events belong to one and the same cycle. The 12th chapter and the 13th to the 6th verse, narrate one cycle of events; the 14th is another very distinct cycle. The former cycle marks the millennial reign; the latter opens up into the endless reign on the new earth; the one cycle marks the reign of subjugation. It is the reign of righteousness, and the period of the conversion of Judah and Israel, the period of conquest, and synchronizes with Rev. xix. 19-21 and xx. 1. The other cycle synchronizes with Ezek. xxxvii. and xxxviii and Rev. xx. 8, 9, xxi. and xxii.

On these chapters I dwelt in my articles on the nature of the coming age. My remarks here will be, in part, supplementary to those; and, at the same time, they will have a direct bearing on its proximity. Every prophecy the fulfillment of which can be shown, leaves one less in the future. It also sheds light on the present.

It is quite proper that mercy should follow such a mourning. It was necessary that Judah and Jerusalem should see their moral pollutions before they would call for the cleansing element. A sight of the Messiah, crucified, as in the case of Paul, the pattern, was required to show them their guilt. They see that they had put to death their own Messiah, the Son of David, their long looked for King, they mourn over this sad calamity, as their fathers mourned over their king Josiah.

This fountain sends forth waters to purify, not to assuage thirst. It is a fountain of life-giving waters; an open fountain; not a subterranean stream passing from an underground pool, along tortuous channels formed by natural openings in the region of perpetual night, but flowing freely beneath clear sunlight; free for all to approach and be healed by its waters.

Verse 2. "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I abolish the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall not be mentioned any more; also the prophets (false prophets), and the unclean spirit, will I remove from the land."

"In that day," during this cycle of events. The order of this cycle of events is the following:

1. Return to the land of Judah and his companions and the building of villages and of Jerusalem.

2. Its invasion by hostile nations, and their overthrow outside of Jerusalem.

3. Messiah appears in the midst of the conflict, opening his eyes on Judah first.

4. The great mourning in Jerusalem as that of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon.

5. Fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness. Christ's atonement.

6. Great reformation follows: Reign of subjugation. 1 Cor. xv. 25.

The first great work of the reformation is to abolish the names of the idols out of the land so as not even to be named any more.

How is this accomplished?

1. Christ and his victory and their conversion will so absorb their intellects and their affections that they cannot find room for any other class of thoughts.

2. It will be also accomplished by Jehovah's removal of the false prophets, and the unclean spirit, from the land (land of Palestine).

Josiah seems to have been a type of the Messiah in his overthrow of idolatry, and as to his giving his life for the people; and, also, as to the great mourning.

False prophets were of two kinds:

a. "The prophet who presumes to speak any thing in my name, which I have not commanded him, and he who speaks in the name of strange gods, shall die." Deut. xviii. 20.

"Unclean spirit" is singular, and stands (probably) for Satan. It is the great enemy of the Holy Spirit that inspired the prophets of God. Each class of prophets, when uttering their predictions was under the control of a foreign power—these prophets were possessed by the unclean spirit; and when that wicked agent was banished from the land, deprived of the spirit of divination they fell back into their private state. This reformation banished the system of idolatry from the land.

Verse 4. "And in that day the prophets (false prophets) shall desist, ashamed, from their vision in their prophesying, and they shall no longer put on the hairy mantle to lie."

Such was the power of this revival that these prophets became ashamed of their profession; vowing it as on former occasions, still they were ashamed to practice; especially as the banishment of the unclean spirit had robbed them of their inspiration. Acts xvi. 16-19. They laid aside their hairy mantles to avoid suspicion. One of these prophets being met by a detective the following dialogue occurs:

D. You do not seem to be following your profession in these strange times; are you a convert? Still your heart does not join in our devotions: are you ashamed of your profession, that you have laid aside your hairy mantle?

P. "I am no prophet, I am a husbandman. For a man (Adam) has sold me from the time of my youth." My parents were poor (Isa. lx. 17), and in debt, and for the payment of a claim I was sold, when a child, to a certain husbandman. That has been my occupation ever since.

D. This may be your present employment; but, pardon my impertinence; you do not look like a farmer; besides, What then are these wounds between thy hands, (on thy fingers and arms)? These marks look like those given in idol worship. 1 King xviii. 28; Jer. xvi. 6; xlv. 5.

P. "They were inflicted upon me in the house of my lovers."

He confesses to his former practices: they were inflicted in my early years when the worship was so universally practiced.

This dialogue reveals the religious state of that period. Satan is cast out and bound, righteousness flourishes, and God's glory covers the whole land. Jerusalem is safely inhabited, and all people are taught of the Lord.

Zech. xiii. 7-9, supplementary to xi. and xiii., and xiii. 6.

Verse 7. "Sword awake against my shepherd, and against a man, my near relation, saith the Lord of hosts; smite the shepherd and the flock is scattered, and I bring back my hand upon the small."

"Sword awake against my shepherd." This shepherd, the Lord of hosts calls "my shepherd," and "a man," "my nearest relation;" that relationship must be "Son," his only begotten Son. It is the shepherd that took charge of the most miserable flock (people). He was treated with the greatest indignity by the hireling shepherds, and three and a half years' services, and his own life valued at twenty dollars. He came to give his life for the sheep. The time had come when his Father makes the demand—Awake sword against my shepherd. How great is the Divine love for man that he voluntarily gave the life of his Son for their salvation. The act was free, Christ said to the Jews, "Thou wouldst have no power against me except it were given thee from above." So spake the Lord to Pilate. John xix. 11. "The flock is scattered. This was true of the entire flock; the poor and the wealthy.

"I bring back my hand upon the small." Some have thought this spoken in a bad sense. The history, however, of those events show that we are to give them a favorable interpretation. The poor of the flock, the disciples of Christ, were scattered abroad, but were soon gathered into congregations that continued under the care of the good shepherd through the Divine Comforter. Through all their persecutions "Lo I am with you," has been their consolation. Though the flock has been composed principally of persons gathered out from the nations, yet there have been, in every century, some of God's ancient people, the Jews. "His blood be on us and on our children" has still followed the "flock of slaughter," and they are driven and scattered through the world as "The Christ Killers."

Verse 8. "And it come to pass in the whole land, saith the Lord, two parts (mouthsful) in the same are exterpated and die, and the third part (mouthful) remains therein."

The whole Jewish family is an inheritance, after the shepherd had been slain, that had been left behind, and was divided into three parts; two parts are claimed by death, as his first-born right, and one part for life. Death belongs to the first ages, life to the last. Zechariah uses a passage parallel to Ezek. v. 12:

"A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they all be consumed; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds; and I will draw out a sword after them."

This prediction by Ezekiel was accomplished in Israel's overthrow in Babylon. Like conduct, in coming ages, was followed by like results. Not that one prophecy has two fulfillments, but like fulfillments. Prophets, therefore, made use of similar language without copying. Such a three-fold division as named by Ezekiel, was made by the Romans under Titus, as predicted by Zechariah. To understand the prophets fully the dates of their prophecies must be kept in view. As Zechariah speaks at the close of the captivity in Babylon he must have another overthrow in his eye, that by the Romans.

Verse 9. "And I bring the third part into the fire, and purify them, as silver is purified, and prove them, as gold is proved. They will call on my name and I will hear them. I say, They are my people; and they answer, Jehovah my God."

The law of Moses says, "Only the gold, and the silver, the brass, and the lead, every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make (it) go through the fire, and it shall be clean." Num. xxxi. 22, 23.

Metals alone can stand the fire. Hay, wood, and stubble are consumed. In the Roman fire, the gold, silver, and the precious stones built upon the foundation of Jesus the Christ escaped. God selected therein the furnace. Isa. xl. 10. In the Babylonian furnace the coarsest dross was separated. Such was clearly exhibited in the lives of those who came through the fire of that furnace. The early Christian Jews that passed through the Roman furnace, were purified, as silver is purified. "Tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times." Psa. xii. 6. Purified till the image of God is perfectly reflected. Gold is proved by its various properties. Job xxiii. 10; 1 Peter i. 7.

Verse 6. "And it happens, if a man still prophesy, his father and his mother, who begat him, speak thus to him: Thou shalt not live, for thou hast spoken lies in the name of the Lord."

The primary thought here expressed is this, the love of God will be so great, at that time; as to dwarf all other affections. The order of love will be, "The love of God with all the heart, soul and mind; thy neighbor as thyself." Matt. xxii. 37.

Serious objections have been urged against the cruelty taught in this passage. We have already given the meaning of this passage. It does not show, nor does it teach the want of natural affection; it teaches that it will be eclipsed by greater love. The moon radiates as many rays of light at noonday as at midnight.

What was God's law to Moses?

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which (is) as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers; (namely), of the gods of the people which (are) round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from (one) end of the earth even unto the (other) end of the earth; thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him: But thou shalt surely kill him; thy hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people." Deut. xiii. 6-10.

"But the prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die." Deut. xviii. 20.

God's violated majesty required such severity. Idolatry, with all its votaries and fixtures, were to be banished from the land. This course would have the most salutary effect to banish all the idols. This course was required in families, since those practices were generally in secret. It was heathen family worship.

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Five.

J. B. COX.

Having in my last referred to the perversion of the word of God, by Satan, by the priests of Israel, and by the Scribes and Pharisees, even to the time when Paul was a young man, and persecuted the church of God.

I wish now to continue the importance of Paul's admonition to Timothy, and the perversion of the word of God, in more modern times.

When the apostle was a young man, seated at the feet of Gamaliel, he was a Pharisee of the strictest sect. He thought he was doing God service when he persecuted the church of God. But when God called him from among the Pharisees to carry his word unto the Gentiles, he at once saw the evil of his Pharisaical religion. So from that time on he zealously expounded the word of God in truth, and he fought manfully the fight of faith among the Jews in their synagogues, and disputed with them concerning their worship, and also "with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him. Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection." Acts xvii. 17-18. So different was the true teaching of the word of God, to that advocated by the Scribes and Pharisees, that it met with great opposition, and Paul became greatly persecuted.

In views of these things, we should appreciate Paul's admonition to Timothy. For by experience he learned that it was necessary to have a thorough knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in order to be approved unto God, and a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, it was by rightly dividing the word of truth that caused so many to believe the gospel of God.

Now Timothy was a young man just starting out into the world as an evangelist, and Paul knew that he would be subject to all the criticism that could be given by the opponents of Christianity. Hence we see the importance of such an admonition by such an experienced teacher. And by a thorough knowledge of the word of God, he would be better able to shun profane and vain babblings. These profane, and vain babblings, existed in the apostle's day, as well as before and since that time, "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work;" 2 Thess. ii. 7. Paul said also. "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Acts xx. 29-30. "And that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage" Gal ii. 4. Amidst their perils Paul desired the brethren to pray for him and them that were with him, "that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified,"—And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, for all men have not faith. 2 Thess. iii. 1-2. "For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." Titus i. 10, 11. Again Paul forewarned Timothy saying, "But the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in latter times some shall fall away from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies, branded in their own conscience as with a hot iron: forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God created to be received with thanksgiving by them that believed and know the truth." New Version, 1 Tim. iv. 1-3,

"But know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come, For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God; holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof; from these also turn away." New Version 2 Tim. iii. 1-5. Therefore for these reasons Paul said to Timothy, "I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word; be instant in season, out of season: reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and teaching. For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine: but having itching ears, will heap to themselves, teachers after their own lust: and turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables." New Version 2 Tim. iv. 1-4. It was very important even in the apostle's day, that they, and the evangelists, and pastors and teachers, should be well posted on the word of truth, for they stood for the perfecting of the saints. In Paul's letter to the Ephesians we read, "And he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints: unto the work of the ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ: till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we may be no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men in craftiness, after the wiles of error; but speaking truth in love may grow up in all things into him, which is the head, even Christ.... This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye no longer walk as the Gentiles also walk, in the vanity of their mind, being darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, because of the hardening of their heart: who being past feeling gave themselves up to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness." New Version Eph. iv. 11-19. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." New Version, Gal. v. 19-21. These things fully agree with the parabolic language of Jesus the Christ, when he said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the fold of the sheep, but climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber. .... The thief cometh not, but that he may steal, and kill, and destroy.... He that is a hireling, and not a shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, beholdeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth, and the wolf snatcheth them, and scattereth them: he fleeth because he is a hireling, and careth not for the sheep." New Version, John x. 1-13.

Thus we see that in the days of Jesus and his apostles, the same principle of perverting the word of God, and making merchandise of it, was manifest, as well as in earlier times. And the duty of the apostles was the commencement of the last times, and of the working apostasy in the church of the living God. For John says, "Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists: whereby we know that it is the last time." 1 John ii. 18.

"For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist." 2 John vii.

So the apostasy commenced in the days of the apostles, and has existed through the Christian era. A very prominent feature of apostasy was exhibited by the counsel at Nice, when an attempt was made to change the laws of God, in connection with the church of the living God, by establishing laws to suit their own convenience. Thus setting themselves up as gods and lording it over God's heritage, for filthy lucre's sake. Who have privily brought in destructive heresies, denying even the master that bought them, bringing upon themselves swift destruction. And many have followed their lascivious doings: by reason of whom the way of truth is evil spoken of. And in covetousness have they with feigned words made merchandise of the church. See 2 Peter ii. 1-3.

Thus we see that the seed of apostasy were sown very early in the history of man. The evil one was the sower, the seed first appeared in the shape of the little word "not," it sprouted in the hearts of our first parents, it branched off into the mind of Cain. It grew rapidly among the false prophets and priests of the Israelitish church. And when Jesus came to take away the sin of the world, this seed had germinated to such a powerful extent, that the victimized said, "This is the heir, come let us kill him."

So when the redeemer of mankind had conquered death, and had told his disciples to preach the gospel to every creature. And they had obeyed his commands, and made many converts, and organized a modal church: the evil seeds of apostasy grew as rapidly as in bygone days. This corrupt system, sprang up in the church. For Paul says, "Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Acts xx. 30. John says, "They went out from us, but they were not of us." 1 John ii. 19.

So through the pages of the Christian Era, the word of God has been perverted, the truth has been evil spoken of, apostasy has branched off into innumerable sects, and each and all of them, have had a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." But have persecuted one another, and have opposed every advancement to a knowledge of the truth. The Roman Catholic priests virtually say to their church, it is for us (not for you) to read the Bible and tell you what it means, we are the learned ones, and we alone can understand the book. But the Protestant divines allow the members of their church to read the Bible for themselves, but require them to put such constructions thereupon as are endorsed in their creeds. The Romish church says, "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith. Which faith except one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly." The creed of Athanasius, A. D. 333. If such is the case, why should any protest against the Roman Catholic church? But many sects have denied the faith of that church, and are styled Protestants. They too say, come with us, and we will do you good. Ours is the church by which you are to be saved. Hence divisions, and discord are the result. And when we look around among the fashionable sects of the present times, we behold every effort is made to draw away disciples after them. They build the most tasty and costly church edifices, with their heavenward spires; and select an organ that will surpass their neighbor sects: they so arrange their seats that the member with his thousands may have the choice; and they with their hundreds may take one not quite so fine, while the poor man can take a back seat, or sit behind the door. Then a minister who has passed through a noted college, and is a fine orator, is hired at a stated sum, perhaps for one thousand dollars per year, from that up to twenty thousand dollars, according to the ability of the church. He must be stately in his appearance, and attractive in his manners, and able to tickle the ears of his audience by relating to them the most fashionables of the day. So their expenses become heavy, interest must be paid, for they have the most fashionable improvements upon their buildings, (a mortgage); or they are in debt for their organ; or, they are behind with their pastor's wages. So a meeting is called to make a raise of some money: a lunch is decided upon, a festival with all the fashionable amusements, or a church fair; anything to raise the money. They even invite the most worldly people, even the friends of Satan to their feasts, to help to pay the expenses of their fashionable religion. But they have nothing left for the poor.

What a contrast between these things, and the teachings of the Holy Scriptures. For James says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this; To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment: And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, stand thou there; or sit here under my footstool: Are ye then not partial in yourselves, and become judges of evil thoughts? Harken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called? If ye fulfil the royal law according to the Scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well. But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. James i. 27. ii. 1-8.

But sad to say that such is the perversion of the Holy Scriptures. So in my next I will examine the vain babblings, or empty declamations, as they present themselves to the mind of the Bible student.

Christ the Center.

As the sun is the center of our solar system, so Christ is the Christian's sun and center of desire. As gravitation holds the planets in their proper orbits so love holds the trusting heart in the pathway of willing obedience. As in completing her solar circuit the earth receives the pleasing variety of seasons adapted to beauty and health, and to promote all organic life, so in our loving service of Christ, there is a pleasing and useful variety of gracious and profitable experiences. Sometimes fierce storms sweep across our pathway to drive us into the shelter of his promised grace. Sometimes the cold repulsiveness of the world's unbelief and sin chills us like a winter's blast, driving us to the central, steady sunlight of a Savior's constant love, causing springtime to burst forth in the Christian's heart, and bursting buds of developing faith and love to expand into the fruits of Christian grace. But there is no winter in the sun. And he who has the sun of righteousness in his heart will have (see) only the springtime of his abiding love.

A man's reputation, like his coat, may be soiled without touching the man himself, since the reputation is not the character, any more than the sleeve is the arm which it envelops. The character can be soiled only by what the man himself does, while the reputation may have mud thrown upon it by any wretch unmanly enough to want to injure the standing of another. We are to see that our motives are pure, our principles honorable, and our outward life governed by them, and to go about our duty calmly, confident that in the end they who unjustly seek to injure us will do us no harm.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 1, 1882.

We shall occupy but little space this week. The success of THE RESTITUTION depends on the friends of the paper. We hope our subscribers will promptly renew. Some of our friends not only do this, but do more—either sending copies to others, or aiding financially to meet deficiencies. We thank them. They will have their reward.

THERE is a feeling that the present quiet may be only the painful stillness before the earthquake. The Balkans are in rebellion against the dominant power of Austria, and are now concentrating themselves in their impregnable mountain fastnesses. The small fire kindled here may spread far and wide before it is extinguished. The attitude of Mohammedanism toward Christendom is threatening. The powers of Islamism combined in a holy war would cause thrones to tremble. Though we cannot forecast the future, the gathering clouds threaten a tempest. A few months may bring forth events that will surprise the world. Let us all watch, pray, and work.

BRITISH INDIA.

ALLAHABAD, Jan. 26.—Cholera has appeared among an immense number of pilgrims now assembled here, and the government has ordered them to disperse.

It is feared that a famine is imminent in Tunis. A large portion of the agricultural land has been, in consequence of the recent troubles, left unsown; and it is estimated by those capable of judging that when the scarcity of food begins to be felt in the interior of the country another and probably a fiercer insurrection of the people will break out.

VIENNA, Jan. 29.—Ten gensd'armes were surprised by night by a band of insurgents in Herzegovina, and massacred under the most frightful circumstances.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 29.—The report of the commission instituted in Warsaw to relieve the victims of the anti-Semitic riots reveals the following facts: Altogether there were 2,011 families ruined, numbering 10,000 persons. During the riots there were demolished 292 liquor shops, 593 eating houses, warehouses and synagogues, and 893 private houses, all the property of Jews.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A dispatch from Cabul says a reign of terror exists in that city. The Ameer is executing all the leaders of the recent opposition, and is confiscating their estates. He has 1,100 political prisoners confined in prisons awaiting his orders.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 30.—The outbreak of cholera at Allahabad did not cause much mortality, but the returning pilgrims are carrying the infection in all directions.

Yellow fever swept away 222 persons at Tomax, Yucatan, and there are now 1,700 cases there under treatment.

RUSSIA.

MOSCOW, Jan. 30.—The scheme of the Governor-General for assuring the safety of the imperial cortege to Moscow, on the occasion of the coronation ceremonies, proposes that the Emperor shall come to Moscow by carriage road, instead of railway, and that the crowds in the streets shall be separated from the procession by trenches, barriers and lines of troops.

EMMET, Ark.

This Jan. 16, I sit in my room, in the presence of the Lord of the whole earth. How commonly, and perhaps almost weekly, we are affected by the presence of men! But how noble and wholesome is a sense of the greater presence of God, even as God is greater than man! How much greater, can any mind imagine? And Jesus was so much greater than all men, in that he felt and understood the presence and greatness of the Father, in the [illegible], and despite the presence of all men, and was obedient instantly, without reserve to all the dictates of the Spirit. And how often we are disadvantageously affected by human presence, though indeed again, in many ways, we so highly and justly prize it.

My eye alights on the glorious one hundred and first psalm. Mercy and judgment are the inspiration of a singing exercise, and instead of singing to men or for men, the decision is declared to sing to God. How many really do this? How many rather sing to themselves, or sing to congregations? The fact is, singing to God is singing by faith, and in spirit of God's silence, and the absence of audible demonstrations of his approval, whereas other kinds of singing are so much encouraged by human applause. And when we come to the matter of a theme, these two things in one, mercy and judgment, are good and great and grand. Question, is not merciful judgment, the thing intended?

I have just received a letter from Piazzi Smyth, in which he encloses me a neat five inch rule—of exact Great Pyramid inch measure. He sympathizes (and his wife also) with me, in the death of my companion. I have always felt that he had done a great and good work in the Great Pyramid investigations and measurements. While avoiding hasty interpretations, I trust we may kindly and providentially fulfil our privilege and duty in the evolutions of the time, whatever they are. I dogmatize in nothing. It is impossible to escape labor, and we ought to glory in appropriate occupation. The Grand Gallery did not begin with a convulsion; is it certain that its ending is to be marked with a catastrophe? Many queries may arise on many points,—and among the rest, the one of Christ's thief-like parousia: and exactly where to locate it. The Lord give us peace and light and joy, and life and delight in his will.

I wish Sunday were more sacredly kept in this, my new (temporary) home. There is among my friends here, too great an inclination to allow the supposed demands of business to intrude as trophies, on the attention,—too little longing for precious things of godly love and delight. I have been hindered now a long time with conversation in my hearing, that impeded greatly the facile and congenial movement of the pen. Surely secular things ought not to be prominent on the Sabbath.

I have attended a meeting of (missionary) Baptists to-day. The meeting house was the very soul of simplicity, with roof and rafters and joists in full view—with six open window spaces without windows, and two open doors, and with benches and pulpit of the simplest—yet to me really agreeable in simplicity. The preacher, a man of forty, perhaps, with black moustache and beard, discoursed pleasantly, though I wished that he could see a little further into the beautiful mystery and meaning of the new birth, which he sought to explain. I like the primitiveness of things well enough here. There were no vehicles—but saddled horses stood tied to the trees around. Many of the people knel in prayer time. Last Sunday evening, I attended a meeting of the colored people. Perhaps things were plainer yet there. The preacher was a negro, who for ought his dress or appearance indicated, might have come right from a cotton field, as he had neither collar or cooktie. His discourse was defective in accuracy of statement, to say nothing of other things—but he was apparently very sincere. He had the honesty and frankness to acknowledge his ignorance. The singing was good, —and good even in its peculiarities. The hymns were lined very rapidly by a young colored brother. Sinners were invited to "make a start," while the saints sang "why do we mourn departing friends?" Three or four lamps, (without chimneys,) gave a rather dim light, and the fire burned low in the stove. With me, there had come my friend, Dr. Snell, once, an extensive owner and manager of slaves, and a pious Irishman, also a preacher; and we were all invited to take part in the meeting. The Irish brother seemed much at home with his colored brethren and sisters, and prayed with zeal and earnestness. At the close, there was hearty hand-shaking all round. One colored aunty declared that all she wanted was to be "saved from going to hell, and git to heaven." This seemed to me, not quite the extent of her privilege, but I could allow for ignorance—in a good measure. I am sorry to say, sorry to be compelled to say, that the freedmen are not doing very well, I fear—lacking much in industry, in energy, in reliability—and the consequences are almost deplorable —both to themselves and others. Nothing pains me more than to see the stupid inaction,—inertness, or whatever it may be called, of people in this country, nor are they alone, the blacks. An infusion of something is wanted,—life, hope, will, tenacity—whatever it may be named. A country naturally blessed beyond almost anything I know,—invites to activity and consequent abundance. When or how will this partial stupefaction be shaken off? Let wide-awake men come here and teach the people, by that most blessed and powerful of all lessons—example, teach industry, order, neatness and thrift. Will they come? I hope so. C. COLEGROVE.

[We are delighted that Bro. Colgrove is favoring us with some more communications. His observations and impressions of men and things narrated in his perspicuous happy style are more than welcome. We hope he will be able to often favor us with his pen pictures. ED.]

Editor Restitution:

I heard an Advent Christian minister preach from Heb. viii. 12, and he explained (?) the text to refer to conversion. I could not see why he labored so hard to convert sinners, if his position was true, and this covenant was made in conversion.

Does not this covenant mean what it says?

Assuredly God's word is true. Israel means Israel, and not something else. Life means life, and not happiness. Death means loss of life, and not misery, and "all shall know me from the least to the greatest" means all he is speaking of and not something else, even the house of Israel.

Again, if this covenant has been made in the past, at some one's, or any one's conversion, why do not all know the Lord? And why do any "teach every man his neighbor" and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord?" When God declares they shall not do these things?

Surely their works are opposed to God's word, their theory being true.

I and my wife are the only ones here of the Abrahamic faith. We have belonged to the A. C. Church, but as Brother Stephenson and of the A. C. elders, they will not hear. One even tried to make me believe THE RESTITUTION taught the non-resurrection of the wicked. We preach the whole gospel and though A. C. ministers and members oppose us, we feel strong in the truth, and ever succeed in showing we have the truth. They will not hear, I fear for them. Deny the literal word of God as they do concerning the Jewish restoration. May God open their eyes.

Should be glad to see any of the brethren here. Hope to remove to Camanche county next summer; if there are any brethren there, would like to correspond.

Editor Restitution.

When our last report was sent I had intended going to Nebraska, but was detained under various circumstances. I have been holding meetings and have found no idle moments. We have now nineteen believing the one faith, and a prospect of a good work being done here. F. M. CLIFTON.

THE BOOK ON THE COVENANTS—NEW HYMN BOOK.

LANARK, Ill., Jan. 10, 1882.

Brother Chaplin:

My hymn books yesterday all came from the bindery. To-day I send you by U. S. Express an order for 50 copies of each binding—100 copies. My sales so far reach 760 copies. This far exceeds my expectations. As I had only 1500 copies printed I fear I will inside of a year have to issue again. In case I do so, I will, if I cannot do better, have 75 to 100 pieces of music set in after the size and order of the old Millennial Harp.

I send a few extracts of letters concerning the book which I hope you will give a place, as they will be of service to me.

I am getting names every day for my book on the covenants. Thirty-five names have been given in so far. To-day our printer man has gone to Chicago for new type—small pica—for the book. I will commence the type setting in a week, and as chapter by chapter is issued I will send you—or at least some of the best portions of it for copy.

We are all well at present. We have had two cases of small-pox here, but now we are beyond danger for any more from them.

THE ECLECTIC HYMN BOOK.

I desire to say to the brethren that I am meeting with good encouragement relative to my hymn book both by sales and by word. Below are a few encouraging words from some of those who have received:

The hymn book came to hand all right. I think a good selection.

G. P. HENDRICKSON.

Brother Myers:—Pa wishes me to write and tell you that he received the hymn book, and we like it very much. I think it will sell readily.

Your sister, AZORAH BATCH.

Brother Myers:—I am in receipt of your hymn book. I like it better than any other hymn book I ever saw, both as to arrangement and sentiment. Send me a few copies.

Yours in hope, J. M. HARLAN.

Brother Myers:—Enclosed find postal order for one dozen hymn books. We like them here very much.

Your brother in the bonds of Christian love and fellowship,

B. J. HILL.

Persons ordering remember number P. O. box 325. In sums of one dollar or more, register, or send P. O. order.

G. M. MYERS.

THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

With the direful news from Warsaw before me, I ask how long will the civilized world shut its eyes and close its heart against the agonizing cry that, despite all political interlusion, comes up from my tortured brethren in Russia? Day by day, and hour by hour, a brutalized populace are permitted, seemingly unchecked till the mischief is done, to perpetrate atrocities that degrade the very name of man. Highly placed Russian philanthropists —if such there be—stand not alone in their ominous indifference. Atrocities against Jews have been so common to the world that professional philanthropists, even in this country, appear to regard them with a great philosophic bearing. Voices that denounced in words of fire the Bulgarian atrocities, which pale before those uniformly practised in Russia and enacted under the very eye of authority, are now practically dumb. Has civilization no resources left to stop this carnival of blood? Is this portentous silence to be attributed to the fact that Russia is powerful and that Turkey was weak? Or is it that political exigencies do not now require a party war-cry? There might be another reason alleged which I fain would not believe. Is it because the victims are Jews and the Slavonic savages are called Christians?

In the name of consistency I appeal to those whose charmed words nerved the arm of Russia in its assumed championship of oppressed Christians to throw aside their supineness in the cause of outraged humanity. In the face of the whole world I assert, and I am prepared to prove, that my poor brethren in Russia are cruelly maligned as well as maltreated. They are not as a race guilty of the sins with which they are charged. There is one sin, I admit, of which they are guilty in the eyes of a besotted and ignorant populace, and for which vengeance is taken—they will not, however cruelly they may be urged thereto by exceptional laws, permit themselves to be degraded to the level of their surroundings.

I have, I admit, no conclusive evidence to prove that the "powers that be," like Dmitri's wife, permit my co-religionists to be devoured by the Russian wolves, and that to save themselves. Could I but prove this I would challenge the Russian Government to enact the part of Ivan Ivanovitch, to behead the "fiend that lies like truth," and thus rid civilization of at least one monstrous hypocrite. Christian Europe is so little informed about Jews and Judaism that I invite, and solemnly invite, the attention of intelligent Christians to a work which appeared in St. Petersburg, translated by Harkavy, Wilna, 1867. This book gives a graphic description of the early settlement of Jews in Southern Russia; their marvellous industry, combined with irreproachable honesty; their political identity with the country of their home, and their useful employment by the state. This luminous work will enlighten those who speak and write of the Jews of Russia as if they were and always had been akin to the roughs of civilization. The epidemic of intolerance now disgracing Europe, created, as it undoubtedly is, by political rivalries and commercial enmities, and fostered further by interested superstitions, is calculated to do more real harm to religion and social order in the promotion of a universal Nihilism than the most avowed scepticism and most determined revolution.

I appeal, then, in the name of religion and morality to all earnest men to rally round the common cause hold sacred alike by Jew and Christian—the cause of humanity. I appeal most earnestly to the enlightened and free press of this country to make the cause its own and to denounce, and with no stint of words, the outrage committed against the laws of God and man. And I appeal in the last degree to the manliness and the political instincts of my fellow-countrymen, to whom civil and religious liberty is their national heirloom and the keystone of our social fabric, to give expression to their, I hope, pent-up indignation at horrors which disgrace our age, and which the Russian Government seems unable to cope with or mitigate, and I hold that such expression of opinion, instead of being regarded as offensive to Russia, will, on the contrary, call from her a hearty response to the convictions of the civilized world in which as a great nation she must agree.

I am, Sir, your obediently.

"I SAY UNTO ALL, WATCH."

We have received many mottoes and texts for the New Year—some relating to the faithfulness of God, some exhorting to faith in him and service for him—all appropriate and needful. We add as a fit accompaniment to each of them, and as an essential watchword, the word "Watch!" It is the Master's own word to his disciples at the beginning of this age, and becomes all the more imperative as the end of the age draws nigh.

Let us, with Habbakuk, stand upon our watchtower, and "watch and see what he will say" to us. Let us "watch and pray," for the Lord from his watchtower watches to see what we will say to him. Let us "watch unto prayer," for the breath, though it is but as a vapor, which ascends from our watchtower in supplication with thanksgiving, returns from his watchtower in the dew of his favor and in the rain of his blessing: "He maketh small the drops of water; they pour down rain according to the vapor that goeth up." Job xxxvi. 27, 33—margin.

Let us watch the signs of the times; for we ought to be men having understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do. Jesus rebuked the religionists of his day because they did not discern the signs of the times of his first coming; surely not less are we amenable to his rebuke if we neglect the signs of his glorious return.

Let us watch, because of our own selves men do continually arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after themselves. Let us watch, therefore, and remember that the marks of the true pastor and teacher are that he treads in the footprints of the faithful apostle who kept back nothing that was profitable, who taught publicly and from house to house, and ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears. Teachers of perverse things are never men of that pattern.

Let us watch for souls as they that must give account; for we are all, by him that loved us and washed us in his own blood, made priests unto his God and Father; and he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall surely come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

Let us be sober and watch unto prayer, for the end of all things is at hand; and we are called to hasten the day of God, in which the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. But, seeing that we look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, let us be diligent, that we be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.

Let us watch and stand fast in the faith; let us quit ourselves like men and be strong; for the latter times have come when some have departed from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, with seared consciences, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God created to be received with thanksgiving by them that believe and know the truth.

Yes, we are in the perilous times of the last days, when men having the form of godliness, but denying its power, are lovers of their own selves, covetous, proud, boasters, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Therefore we must watch in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of evangelists, make full proof of our ministry. For he has given to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

Let us watch and keep our garments lest we walk naked and men see our shame. For if we do not watch, he whose coming shall be as a snare on all those who dwell on the face of the whole earth, men of the earth, who have their portion in this life, will also come upon us as a thief, and we shall not know what hour he will come upon us. Let us be watchful, therefore, and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die; for verily we must all confess that he has not found our works complete before God.

Let us watch, therefore, and pray always, lest that day come upon us unawares; and that we may be accounted worthy to escape all the things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.

May God's Spirit thus keep us and all his people watching, praying, trusting, overcoming, through this year for his glory and for our peace and joy.

THE INSTINCTIVE CLINGING TO LIFE.

Many Christians have a great dread of death, and they unwisely conclude there must be, therefore, something wrong between their own hearts and the Father in heaven. What a mistake this is! The instinctive dread of death is common to all men, and is moreover, one of the most merciful defences of human life. It is a blessed thing "that all that a man hath will he give for his life."

Suppose that the love for and the clinging to life was less strong than it is, is it not true that our suicides would be multiplied twenty-fold?

What would prevent the business man who has become bankrupt, and who has to face the pitiless criticism of creditors and the fiend grip of poverty, from making away with himself?

It is the strong and instinctive love of life that becomes his protection. Think of a fair and loving woman united to an inebriate, gradually brought down by cruelty and neglect. She finds her children homeless and herself in dire distress.

Do you not see that if that mother's love of life was less strong than it is she would assuredly make away with herself?

Thank God that he has planted in the human breast these intense hold upon this clinging to life. True, it may be that death is dreaded because it is known that there is no peace with God, and no rest in his salvation. In such cases death must be and ought to be dreaded; but if the fear of death is merely a result of the instinctive love of life common to all men, then it has no force as an argument against the safety of the believing, redeemed, and devoted child of God.

A few years since it was our privilege to stay with an elderly Christian lady whose heart and home were ever ready to welcome the Lord's servants. The conversation on several occasions turned upon her personal fear of death. We pointed out the thoughts contained in the foregoing paragraph. Light and comfort came to her mind in consequence. Well do we remember adding: "Besides all this, rest assured that when your Father in heaven calls you from earth, he will take away from you the fear and dread of death." It so happened that we were passing through the town about four weeks subsequently, and tidings reached us that the lady referred to was seriously ill. She gradually weakened, and quietly and gently her spirit passed away. In conversation with her son it was refreshing to hear the testimony: "From the very day that our loved mother was confined to her room she had not the slightest fear of death. She told us that she would not recover, and, in the possession of the peace of God which passeth understanding, she sweetly said 'I have no fear—I am going home; all, all is well!'" How true it is that "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."—The Christian Commonwealth.

A PHILOSOPHER'S OPINION OF THE BIBLE.

John Muller, a learned Swiss writer, was deeply engaged in historical studies at Cassel, in the year 1782. Indefatigable in research, he wrote to his friend Charles Bonnet, the naturalist, that he had studied all the ancient authors without one exception, in the order of time in which they lived, and he had not omitted to take note of a single remarkable fact. Among other works, it occurred to him to glance at the New Testament; and we give, in his own words, the impression it produced upon him:

"How shall I express what I have found here? I had not read it for many years, and when I began, I was prejudiced against it. The light which blinded Paul in his journey to Damascus was not more prodigious, or more surprising to him than what I suddenly discovered was to me—the accomplishment of every hope, the perfection of all philosophy, the explanation of all revolutions, the key of all the apparent contradictions of the material and moral world, of life and immortality. I see the connection of all the revolutions in Europe and Asia with that suffering people to whom were committed to promises. I see religion appearing at the moment most favorable to its establishment, and in the way most likely to promote its reception. The world appearing to be arranged solely with reference to the religion of the Savior; I can understand nothing if such a religion be not from God. I have not read any book about it; but in studying all that happened before this epoch, I have always found something wanting; and since I have known our Lord, all is clear to my sight; with him, there is no problem that I cannot solve. Forgive me for thus praising the sun, as a blind man who had suddenly received the gift of sight."

Sententious.

Half the ills we hoard in our hearts are ills because we hoard them.

Shallow men believe in luck; but strong men believe in cause and effect.

What we charitably forgive will be recompensed as well as what we charitably give.

Sow good services; sweet remembrances will grow from them.

Instead of complaining of the thorns among the roses, we should be thankful there are roses among the thorns.

The rod knows what justice is; and in those who approve, and in those who resist, truth creates conscience. Those who resist are irritated; while those who obey grow strong within themselves.

Men who work can only work for earth,
And not to work in vain, must comprehend
Humanity, and so work humanly.
And raise men's bodies still by raising souls.
So God did first.

No man truly prays against sin who does not pray against temptation. No man truly hates sin who does not hate temptation when known as temptation. To guard against temptation is the supreme wisdom; and Christ put that wisdom into the prayer he framed for his people.

What makes you hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding rock or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slope, composed of innumerable blades of grass. It is of small things that a life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find very little in Bible character to admire or copy.—Dr. Bonar.

Quiet from God! how beautiful to keep
This treasure the All-Merciful hath given:
To feel, when we awake and when we sleep,
Its fervent round us, like a breath from heaven!
To carry it to the world, and yet apart,
To dwell with the Lord still with calm to feel:
To bear about forever in the heart
The gladness which his spirit doth reveal!

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and generally the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 14, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 29, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have kept it interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1878.

"I have read it diligently again and again. * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Md.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'"—R. ## LIFE.

JOHN L. WINCH.

O gift of life! to me how strange,
Through all the wide extended range!
A wonder in the mighty plan,
From monad up to lordly man:
A mystery in this human frame
That with the breath (ethereal came;
The heart's enkindled fire that burns
In these decaying mortal urns;
The underlying gift of all
The blessings that around us fall;
A hidden, secret, central force
Outflowing from its ethereal source,
To cause the pulse to throb, and beat,
In head and breast, in hands and feet;
The latent power by which is wrought
The visions in the realm of thought,
That fans the flame of Love's true,
And lifts the hand that rules the heart
Incites us to a world of scope
Where linked in cause and consequence,
That we may trace in Nature's laws
The guiding hand of Intelligence.

O wondrous gift! and yet so brief!
The symbol of the fading leaf:
To like the summer's scented flowers,
That blooms awhile in sweetest hours;
The drawing of a fleeting breath—
A cry, a tear, then, sullen death!

So short! a hand-breadth—a span
Will measure out the life of man;
So short! and yet, to human reason
Ever put in speech, or ever can,
The glories of what is to be,
In our eternal destiny.

A few days here of toil and pain:
If this were all 'twould seem in vain;
But what a world of meanings found
Within our being's narrow bound,
In view of what around it verges,
The issue of immortal things.
In sight of this each life is dear,
However small, becomes a seed
Whose growth shall be a millionfold
In that fair city paved with gold.

Then what if pain, if toil and fever
Be crowded in these fleeting years;
Or poverty should be our lot.
Our dwelling but the meanest cot—
Joint heirs with Christ, and heirs of God,
Some day we'll walk the golden road
Beneath the smiling cloudless skies,
Of the Heavenly Paradise.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN,

Or the Principle of Life in Man and Beast.—No. I.

H. H. HALL.

"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward?"

In a very excellent work entitled "Science and the Bible, by Rev. Herbert W. Morris, formerly professor of mathematics in Newton Collegiate Institution," page 360, I find the following language in regard to the creation of the animal world:

"Every effort to penetrate into the mysterious temple of life in order to lay bare its principle has failed, and the greatest philosopher approaches no nearer than the crowd. The living principle [in animals] God has reserved as a secret with himself. From him and with him alone are the issues of life. We must, therefore, be content to be ignorant of it. If not forever, at least during the present twilight of our existence."

"Ignorant" forsooth!

And why ignorant? Is it because the Bible is silent upon the subject?

By no means; but simply, because of having a substantial fear for their orthodox dogma, immortal-soulists do not receive the plain teaching of the word of God, which declares that the breath of life in man and beast is precisely the same life-giving principle which inflates the lungs and sets the blood to flowing and the man or animal to thinking.

Then, affirm without the fear of contradiction that "The living principle" in animals, which Mr. M. says, "God has reserved as a secret with himself," is as clearly revealed in the Bible as is the living principle in man. And yet Mr. M. thinks he knows what is the living principle in man.

But why is he so ignorant of this principle in the former and so knowing in regard to the latter?

I answer, because he, with the "orthodox" church, has assumed that man has an immortal soul which is the life principle, and which does all the thinking and sinning, whilst the animal creation being destitute of this soul-entity cannot thus think and remember, but must live and move and think by some principle that "God has reserved as a secret with himself." It is surpassing strange that "orthodox" theologians and clergymen are so bound down to the unscriptural, absurd, and heathen doctrine of immortality of the soul that they cannot see that man—with a much superior organism to the brute, with the same "breath of life"—ought to be able, without a superadded entity, to live and will, and think by means of his brain just as the brute does. But they do not (and I think don't desire to) see it, and wonder what "the living principle" in the brute is that enables them to think and reason, as they manifestly do, without such a soul as is claimed that man possesses.

"Every effort to penetrate into the mysterious temple of life (in the brute) in order to lay bare its principle has utterly failed."

Yes sir, and "every effort to penetrate" will continue to fail so long as men are wise above what is written in the Scriptures of truth—so long as Christians adhere to the creeds of the church councils and the creeds of the churches, and thus continue to wear their "orthodox" spectacles when they read the Bible, they will continue to cry mystery in regard to Trinity, mystery in regard to hell and endless torment, and mystery as to how the brute lives and thinks without an immortal soul! And men who think for themselves will continue to wonder how it is, when only the fracture of a man's skull and pressure upon the brain will render him unconscious, that the destruction of his brain will not only not impede thought, but make the man, though dead(?), more thoughtful and knowing than ever before! In a word, the logic of "orthodox" theology is,—hurt a man's brain and he knows nothing; heal up it, and he knows everything.

The idea that man—created in the image of God and after his likeness, into whose nostrils God blowed the breath of life' (not an immortal soul as alleged, but the same breath of life he gave the animal creation)—cannot think, as the brute does, by the means of his more wonderful brain, is to my mind the acme of absurdity.

I have stated that the living principle in animals, which Mr. M. says "God has reserved as a secret with himself," is just as plainly revealed in the Bible as is the living principle in man. Now let us see which statement is the true one.

In the first place let me state a fact which no theologian will deny, namely, that soul and spirit, and breath of life, are terms applied in the Bible to the animal creation as well as to man. So that, if these terms imply an entity in man, they must also imply the same in the brute; or, in other words, if the use of these terms proves that man has an immortal soul or spirit within him, it also proves that animals have the same. But if theologians are unwilling to admit such a logical conclusion, then they must confess that these terms when applied to man do not prove a superadded entity.

Ruah is the Hebrew word for breath and spirit in the Old Testament, and nephesh is the soul and life-word; and in the New Testament the Greek word pneuma corresponds to ruah, and psuxee to nephesh. These spirit and soul-words are not synonymous, and are never used in the Bible interchangeably as they are by most theologians and Christians.

The words ruah and pneuma are defined by lexicographers as follows: "Wind, air in motion, a breathing, breath, expiration, respiration; spirit." These are the primary definitions, and the most that follow are mere theological definitions, given as used by theologians. Every candid person can readily see that there is nothing in these definitions that imply conscientiousness in the spirit or breath, but on the contrary simple breathing, expiration, and respiration; the breath, the breath of life, or vital principle in man and beast; that which sets the lungs to heaving, the blood to circulating, the man to thinking. These words are translated in the Old and New Testaments air, wind, breath and spirit. The term spirit is applied to God, angels, man and beast. "God is a spirit," angels are spirits, and man has a spirit. The term when applied to man most generally denotes the breath or life-principle; frequently his disposition, or mind, and in a very few instances, as in 1 John iv. 1-3; Hab. xii. 23, it is employed as a synonym of the whole man or person, but never as a conscious entity within him.

A person may have a good, or a bad spirit; the spirit of Christ, or, the spirit of the devil. But if a man "have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit—not a spirit-entity, but the disposition—the spirit or disposition of the subject of this heavenly birth being so changed as that the person now loves what before was hated, and hates what before was loved. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." "And be renewed in the spirit of your minds, and ye put on the new man—new disposition, new affections, 'the inward man' which, though 'the inward man perish,' 'is renewed day by day'—which after God is created in righteousness and holiness of truth." But Peter sums it all up as follows:

"Decorate the hidden man of the heart with what is incorruptible,—a meek and quiet spirit, which is very precious in the sight of God."—Emphatic Diaglott Version.

"Peter's 'hidden man' is Paul's 'inward man,' and "new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." In a word, it is, as Christ taught, the "spirit," the disposition, the "heart" that is "born again," changed and "renewed," and not an intangible, immaterial, immortal being within a being. Christ said to his disciples when they had fallen asleep in watching, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." In disposition, and mind they were "willing," but were overcome by sleep. "And Mary said my soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." Theologians know that the expression "my soul" is an idiom of the Hebrew, and always refers either to the person, the life of a person, or the mind of a person, but never to a being in a being.

The same phrase is applied to God as well as to man. "Your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth." "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." And God says, "My spirit shall not always strive with man." "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh." These idiom phrases, then, no more prove that man has a personality within a personality than it does that God has a living soul and a living spirit within Himself. Then we see in the light of the above that Mary must have used the terms soul and spirit—soul meaning herself, and spirit her disposition of mind—in order to emphasize her pungent feelings and happy state of mind.

Having seen that the words ruah pneuma (spirit) are employed in the Bible to denote the temper and disposition of man, we will now look at some passages of Scripture where they denote the principle of life in man and beast.

Solomon says (Eccl. iii. 19-22): "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts .... as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one [ruah—spirit] breath; so that a man [in death, or as regards his spirit] has no pre-eminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All [man and beast] go unto one place [heaven and hell?]; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the [ruah] spirit of man [who understands this principle of life in man] that [in consequence of his erect position] goeth upward, and the [ruah] spirit of the beast that [in consequence of his drooping position] goeth downward to the earth?"

This inspired wise man says that man and beast have all one ruah—breath, spirit; and that "they," as persons and beasts, all go unto one place at death, while our uninspired, and not so wise theologians contradict all this, and affirm that man has a conscious, immortal ruah within him which the beast does not possess, and that man goes to heaven or hell at death, where they know the animals do not go.

Solomon not only tells us in the Scripture quoted that man and beast "all go unto one place," but he tells us in Eccl. ix. 10 what and where that place is. It is not, however, the heaven of happiness and the hell of torment we have been taught to believe, but the hell and grave of unconsciousness as taught by all the Scriptures of truth. Hear him: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in it. [sheol] the grave [or hell?] whither thou goest." "For the living [living persons] know that they shall die; but the dead [dead persons] know not any thing, neither have they [while dead] any more a reward." Eccl. ix. 5.

But let us go back to the creation of man and see if there is the least intimation that God gave him a superadded entity, called the immortal soul, and capable of existing in a conscious state when separated from the body. For, if we do not find it in connection with his creation we shall not find it anywhere in the Bible.

Gen. ii. 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul"—living being.

What was formed of dust? was it the body, as alleged, to the exclusion of the soul?

Not by any means. It is stated that man—all, then, that it takes to constitute man—was "formed of the dust of the ground?"

And what did it take more to make him a living man?

I answer, "the breath of life."

And God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives"—not of two lives in one man, as supposed, but the breath of many lives, the breath of life common to man and beast—"and man became"—not received—"a living soul."

I have stated that the breath of life, which was breathed into the nostrils of Adam after he was formed of the dust of the ground, is the same breath of life possessed by the animal creation and have given two or three instances where spirit and breath (ruah) are applied to brutes as well as to man, and I will now give further proof of my statement by quoting from Gen. vi. 17; vii. 15. "And, behold, I, even I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die." "And they [every beast after his kind, and cattle, and every creeping thing after his kind, v. 14] went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life."

I know that theologians claim that, because the word ruah is employed in the verses above quoted, and that neshemah, or a shemah is used in Gen. ii. 7, both words being rendered "breath," there is something more than "the breath of life" implied in neshemah, as applied to Adam, than to ruah as applied to animals as well as to man. And hence they have imagined, and then assumed that it must have been a living sentient being that God blowed into the nostrils of Adam. It is true they do not tell when this immaterial soul-entity was created for man, or whether it could think and know before its connection with the dust-made man; but of course it could, or, it could not be a living thinking entity for the lifeless, unthinking "man" that God had formed of the dust of the ground!

I am certain that, if this imparted life-principle—call it soul, spirit, breath, or anything else—is conscious and knowing when separated from man at death, it was conscious and knowing before being united with man. For, if the soul, or spirit can live and think independently of the body, as alleged, then it must have been living and capable of thinking anterior to its union with the body, as the inanimate body of Adam could not impart life and thought to such a soul or spirit as is claimed that man possesses.

If it be said that, although the body could not impart life and thought to the soul, God could do so by uniting the two, I would ask, if God could not also make man to live and think without a superadded entity, just as he has made the brute to live and think minus such an appendage?

The question, then, is not what God could do, but what did he do to give man life and thought and reason?

The Bible says, he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." The serpentine theology of the Roman and "orthodox" creeds is that, "The Lord God breathed into his" brain "the immortal mind," which can live and think independently of the brain, and can think a great deal better when the brain is destroyed! God said to Adam, "For in the day that thou eatest thereof dying, thou shalt surely die." The serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die."

Which shall we believe, God, or the devil?

God says, "The soul [nephesh, the soul and life-word of the Old Testament] that sinneth it shall die." "Orthodoxy" says, "The soul is immortal and cannot die."

Which shall we believe, God or man?

Elder Restitution:

About eighteen months ago Brother H. R. Carter, of Noble Co., came into our neighborhood and began to preach the acceptable word, the Abrahamic faith. The teaching as he gave it was well received by a good many here, but yet he did not succeed in effecting an organization until near a year ago, when we organized a little church consisting of only four members. This formed a standard around which we could rally. Bravely have we stood our ground against opposition. Steadily our number has increased, and we gained strength.

Our faith is firm and we adhered to doctrine as taught by Christ, apostles and prophets.

The last day of last year Brother Carter commenced a meeting which continued three weeks, with only a slight intermission. And oh! what a glorious time it has been. There is a great rejoicing in the camp of the Lord. There has been twenty-three accessions to the church, eighteen of them by immersion. Old and young have come forward to enlist in the glorious cause. There was one young lady of the Dunkard persuasion came forward and demanded immersion. Of course she was gladly received.

Our first organization was effected by the following members: David Read, Mary R. Read, Geo. W. Fairchild, and Rebecca A. Fairchild, with Geo. W. Fairchild as leader. There have since been thirty-two admissions as follows: Cyrus Shultz, Annie Shultz, Martha Fairchild, J. E. Fairchild, Wm. Fairchild, Lydia Read, Emma J. Cochenour, Emma Hartman, I. Hartman, Ruth A. Beam, Annie Cochran, Olive J. Read, Harriet Read, Arthur Chaplin, Mary Adams, A. Patrick, T. Fletcher, Mary Fletcher, Eva Hiler, J. Cochran, Jasper Cochran, Wm. Perry, Wm. H. Tucker, Rolando Chaplin, Clara Chaplin, J. Read, L. B. Cochenour, Dan'l. Lemmer, Ella Lemmer, A. Myers.

Of this number twenty-two have been immersed.

On Friday evening, Jan. 20, church met and proceeded to a full organization. Result as follows:

Elders: L. B. Cochenour and G. W. Fairchild.

Deacons: David Read and Jacob Read.

Clerk: Lydia Read.

We are now placed on a sound, substantial basis, being founded on the rock Christ Jesus. All glory to his worthy name for his blessings. Old gray bearded persons have been led to come to Christ, to arise and wash away their sins.

We are a poor people, poor in this world's goods, but rich in hopes of the kingdom to come. We cannot refrain from giving thanks that Brother Carter was called this way, because through his instrumentality we have been led to a better knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

Our Children.

Standing forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
Oh, we know not what are long
May betide them.
Numb the shadow of thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Walking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer, they cry to thee,
Be thou hear them;
Mid the sorrows of life's road
Do thou cheer them.
Mid the quicksands and the rocks
Do thou steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be thou near them.

Unto thee we give them up,
Lord, receive them;
In the world we know must be
Much to grieve them;
Many striving evil and strong
To deceive them;
Trust we in the hands of love,
Safe we leave them.

Happy Childhood.

'Tis just the early dawning
Of life's fair day to me;
The first bright rays of morning
Above the hills I see.
The dew is on the blossoms,
Like pearls of beauty rare;
The trill of woodland songsters
Is quivering on the air.

My heart is full of gladness,
My lips have caught the song.
Oh, can a note of sadness,
Among these chords belong?
Dear Savior, let the key-note
Of all this happy strain,
Be nothing but the name
Of Thine own precious name.

What Became of the String.

Little Fred had a tin box with a hole in it. He put a string through the hole and fastened it up by the back door. Then he unwound the string and ran with it across the yard to call his playmate, who lived in the next house. He wanted that boy to take the end of the string over the fence and fasten another box to it. "Then," said Fred, "we will have a telephone."

The next-door boy was not within hearing, so Fred dropped the end of his long string under the apple tree, and ran over to find him and explain his famous plan.

When he came back the end of the string which was to have passed over the fence was gone—where? and how? Up in the air, high over Fred's head. Up into the sky, he thought at first. But not soon he traced it into the apple tree, and there he saw a dear little rogue of a bird using the string to make a nest.

It had woven it already back and forth across the little twigs, and was pulling at it to make some more of it come.

"There, that bird has spoiled my telephone, but I'll cut the string, and he can have scraps for he is so cunning," said Fred.

Foot-Lamps.

Little Annie Waters was thinking very deeply one Sunday afternoon, with an open Bible in her hand, from which she was learning her verse.

"Is it not hard, is it?" asked her mamma, who had been watching her for some time.

"Not hard to learn," replied Annie; "but I am wondering what it means." And she read the verse from Psalm cxix: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "People don't have lamps unto their feet, do they mother? I thought lamps were always put up high, so that we can see better."

"Lamps guide the feet to walk in the right path, Annie. But I will tell you more about this at bedtime."

Annie dearly loved these little bed-time talks; and when her face and hands were washed, and her little white nightdress was on, her mother lifted her up beside her at the open window, and said:

"Now look up, Annie, at the sky, and then tell me what you can see up there."

"Why, I see the stars, mamma, oh, so many of them! and so bright! And they look like lamps shining very far off."

"It would seem very strange to see stars shining and twinkling on the ground would it not?"

"Oh yes, mamma! No one ever does see such a thing, do they?"

"They see what looks very much like it," replied Mrs. Waters; "and now I am going to tell you about the 'lamp to the feet.' In the Holy Land, where these words were written 3,000 years ago, there is no gas in the streets which are very dark and narrow; and the stranger in Jerusalem, who looks out of his chamber at night, will see what looks like little stars twinkling on the pavement, but they are really little lamps fastened to the feet of those who walk after dark, so they can see where they are going. When the Psalmist makes use of this custom, he speaks of walking in the way of God's commandments. And now, darling, I think you understand what the words mean."

"Yes, mamma," replied Annie, in a satisfied tone, "I know now;" and she felt quite sure she would not forget that verse.

A Letter from Aunt Carrie.

Dear Children:

I hope you have not forgotten all I said to you on Dec. 7. I want you to think of these things because I want you to be good. When we are good and try to do what God tells us in his word, then we are happy, and it does not make much difference whether we are rich or poor, handsome or homely. This life will soon be over; even to the oldest persons it seems as a day, compared with the everlasting ages which all righteous people will enjoy in the everlasting ages on ages. Then there will be no sorrow, no pain, nor death. Every one there will be beautiful, and everything we shall see will be much more beautiful and glorious than anything we have ever seen in this world.

If any of your friends should tell you, surely, if that if you would be very good, obedient to parents and teachers, kind and loving to all, they would take you to New York City, and to Central Park which is in that city. In summer everything is very beautiful. The grass is cut every week, so that it looks like a soft green carpet. The gravel walks are all kept perfectly clean, the trees are all nicely pruned, the flowers are choice and well cultivated, every fading flower and every withering leaf is taken off and thrown away by men who are hired to take care of the park. Then there are many seats under the shade trees, and such beautiful, gray little rustic arches with seats all round and through the middle, so that many people can sit there and enjoy the cool breeze. There is also a lovely little lake, and ponds, where there are many kinds of water-fowl swimming and diving and throwing up the water off their wings, till it looks like showers of diamonds in the sunshine. In the menagerie you could see a great many kinds of wild beasts, and snakes, and reptiles, some of them very beautiful and some fierce and hateful. You would see many things too, that I cannot now write about. Would you not all like to go with that friend, and see all those strange things?

I think I hear you say yes. I think each one would promise to be good, loving and gentle, and to study any any every lesson your friend told you to learn.

Now suppose you were all ready and you were to start on your journey on Washington's birthday. How happy you would be. But let me tell you what might happen. Your friend, though so kind and good might take sick and die just the day you hoped to be so happy. This is just the way things go in this age, because there is sin and death here and none of us know how soon we may die.

Now dear children, let us look at the other side of this picture. In the Bible we are told that the earth will yet be made beautiful as the Garden of Eden, and it will be a thousand times more lovely than Central Park, and that the righteous or good shall dwell therein forever.

Christ is our friend who has promised us a home in the new earth when he comes back, as I mentioned in my last. He will not disappoint us. He will not take sick and die, and leave us to grieve over our sad disappointment.

He may not come on Washington's birthday, we do not know but he will. He has not told us what day he will come back, but he has told us to be ready when he does appear. In the Bible, which is his word, he has told us what to do. You are not too young to know right from wrong. You are not too young to read your Bibles. Do you not want to live in this beautiful earth, when everything naughty and wicked will be taken out of it? You surely may, there will be room enough for all.

Boys and girls, how many of you will try? I will try to be ready every day. Will not you?

Yours in hope.

AUNT CARRIE.

According to an article by Prof. Bruniati in the Archiciodi Statistica, the Jewish population of the world numbers about 7,000,000 persons, of whom over 5,500,000 are in Europe. Of these latter, Russia contains about 2,700,000; Austria-Hungary, 1,500,000; Germany, 660,000, and Roumania, 400,000. Thus these four States contain about 5,260,000 Jews; while Turkey contains only 100,000; England and Holland 70,000 each, and France but 50,000. It is singular that the Jewish population is largest where it is treated with severity.

Mrs. Edson, President Garfield's nurse, reports that the second day after the shooting the patient said: "Well, it's all over. It's my business to be ready for death, and I have always been ready. I had work before me; but, after all, perhaps it is better that it is laid down where it is—unfinished. It was a great and trying work, and I am relieved of it." She said that when he was apparently improving he had some hope, but he never lifted his head from the pillow during his long sickness, and every day he grew weaker.

The French Waldenses seriously contemplate removing to Algiers. The valleys of Freissinieres and Queyras may have served a good purpose in past centuries by offering a retreat from violent persecutions to those whom their relentless enemies would not suffer to live in peace in any less hospitable region. But mountain heights, where winter reigns for nearly three-quarters of a year, are no fit abode for men, women and children. In spite of every exertion, the most industrious cannot but see poverty and possible starvation staring them in the face, and preparations are made accordingly for an exodus to Algiers.

The flow of lava from the Hawaiian volcano, Mauna Loa, lately in eruption, is the greatest observed there within the last fifty years. It began on Nov. 5, 1880, and continued without interruption till the middle of last August. Photographs of the lava near Hilo show that, after flowing thirty or forty miles, it was still in a very liquid state. Wherever it could be seen through apertures in the crust it seemed as liquid as water, and at a red-white heat. It was apparently a case of pure igneous fusion; no vapor or gas was observable when the stream did not enter water or come on vegetation. The pretty little town of Hilo was like to be engulfed, the lava forming a semicircle of fire about it, and the possibility of damming and diverting the current was being considered; but happily the flow ceased in time, and parts of the arched crust, falling in afterward, blocked the passages, so that Hilo, at the end of August, seemed comparatively safe.

Amona, the daughter of the chief of the Algerian revolt, is the great beauty of the Arab tribes. She appears to be distinguished above all her rivals, not only for her loveliness, but for her accomplishments likewise, being a poetess of no mean order, and for her equestrianism in the field, where she takes her place by her father's side and gallops fearless, on her Arab courser, as fleet and powerful as his own. The picture is worthy of Horace Vernet, the Frenchman by who have pursued the flying host under Bou Amena's command—the chief with his white bournous flying behind him and the red and purple tassels of the horse gear dancing in the wind, while the dark blue and white-striped veil of the girl, with its gold border, flashes in the sun as it floats out beyond the long-streaming tail of her flying steed.

Remember

That duty to God is still duty though the whole world go wrong. Wrong doing in others does not release us from obligation. God's laws are imperatively binding.

In the church or out of it, wrong doing is no excuse for us. We must obey or have no hope of love. We cannot be good, we cannot be righteous, unless we yield obedience to God at all hazards. Let the loss of all things come, but still obey.

SUNSET THOUGHTS.

W. I. CROCKETT.

I stood upon the hilltop
When my work was o'er,
And thoughtfully I turned and gazed
Upon the setting sun.
I cannot now recall the glorious scene
For 'twas in autumn's time, and earth
Was glowing in a thousand hues,
The sky I know was deeply blue,
And clouds were soft and white above,
But opal tinted where the sun
Was in departing.
I stood and gazed,
My eyes were wet with tears
When I went slowly home,
And the glorious sun was gone.
I returned not, and yet the tears
Dropt slowly down my cheeks;
For I was wholly filled
With the grandeur of that mighty orb!
And lost in swelling thoughts
That burst the feeble flood gates of my soul
And bore me to the vast infinity.
And yet I wept, for I
Could never comprehend the Power
That filleth all the universe.
Nor shall I know of all
That wondrous illimitable might
Until I see its Author face to face,
And bear upon my brow the seal
Of strength and everlasting life.
I walk, I weep.
Yet sorrow not, it is my soul o'erflows
To him whose handiwork is seen
Wherever man may turn his eyes.
The glory of departing suns
Shall stay on earth in after time
And suns shall not depart:
And we, O waiting ones, shall not depart,
Not past the utmost bounds of time
Shall live through all the golden ages
Of sublime Eternity.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER TO A SKEPTICAL FRIEND.

J. F. WILCOX.

I fear it is of little profit to either of us to spend time or waste paper in exchanging views, when we have drifted so far apart intellectually as to be beyond sight or even hearing. From a deeply religious, enthusiastic Baptist, you have drifted into Atheism—I am more and more a Christian—at least in faith.

You claim however through it all to be a "truth seeker." I too have been and still am an independent seeker for truth, and I can say that I have sacrificed too much in my fealty to truth not to admire an honest "truth seeker," yet when the search has led to no results except universal doubt I can but pity the unfortunate victim of his own folly, and hold fast to whatever truth I think I have myself obtained. It seems to me that now after ten or more years spent in seeking truth and finding nothing you ought at least to be willing to re-examine the grounds of your doubt and ascertain if after all the mass of mankind may not have some basis truths which you will do well to build upon. You ought to remember that while the field of thought is illimitable, man's powers of reason are frail and his flights brief and unsteady.

The fact therefore that he is unable to explain or comprehend all things instead of leading to universal doubt ought rather to convince him of his need of diction, instruction, and control by superior intelligence and show him the wisdom of using his powers rather to direct his progress in the path pointed out than to waste energies exploring illimitable space in search of ways that never in fact existed. But dropping the figure you must confess that you have searched for truth at least ten years and found nothing worth the name to reward your labor. Your creed, like every one before you who has given up to doubt, may be summed up in these words, "I believe in all unbelief."

Now, as a practical man, ought you not to ask yourself if, (as ten years search along the line of infidelity has resulted in nothing,) you may not be on the wrong road?

Your search certainly has led you deeper and deeper into difficulty, till, judging by your letters it has landed you in a morass of utter doubt. So that instead of the clear light of even one truth you are surrounded with the impenetrable gloom of entire uncertainty and disbelief.

That you have ground for enmity against that huge tyranny called the Church there is no doubt, and I am no more a friend to it than you are, yet its enormities constitute no ground for unbelief, but rather are themselves clear proofs of the truths which are and ever have been the objects of its hate. It is folly to waste your time throwing stones at this old rookery. The doves of truth have not nested there these many years; it is wholly given over to the owls and bats of falsehood and superstition and while it may amuse you to stir them up it is not a serious nor profitable employment for a "truth seeker." Rather incline your ear to the voice of him who said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life," and open your heart to the gentle influences of that lover of nature and of nature's God, and flee the old rookery as he fled it out into God's temple among the everlasting hills, where the voice of truth is not drowned by the hooting owls or whirring bats of either superstition or unbelief.

I am persuaded that you have never seriously set yourself to the study of Christ nor the character of his claims. You have never thoroughly examined the proofs of the claims of the Jewish Volume to be a revelation from God. You have never carefully and wisely and thoroughly gone over the ground of a belief in God. You have for years been stoning the old rookery, and I do most earnestly suggest that it is high time to change your course and seriously hunt for the place where the doves rest.

I have been thinking to-day that it is a curious string of coincidences, to say the least, that one of the very smallest and most insignificant planets of the universe should be selected as the spot on which to carry out the profound and far reaching work of man's creation, development and redemption. That a small, and in the eyes of the world an odious and contemptible nation, the very fewest in numbers, the most insignificant in origin, the most unlovely and hateful in many things to the majority of mankind should next be chosen. That an obscure, mountainous and out-of-the-way corner of the earth, almost unknown to the great nations of antiquity, the smallest territory ever erected into a kingdom should be chosen for the theatre. That a lowly, poor and insignificant family should be chosen as the principal actors. That of that insignificant country its most humble province, Galilee—of Galilee, its most despised city, Nazareth—of Nazareth, its Carpenter, a lowly and beggarly occupation in those days.

And yet of the lowliest of the lowly stations in life the untaught Nazarene has risen till the world is filled with his name, and if the record be true, he himself passing through death has been placed upon the throne of the universe by its Creator and all things made subject to him. If this is but the creation of the imagination it is the most marvellous work of fiction ever penned, and the most cunningly conceived and successfully executed imposture in history.

Let it never be forgotten that of the many false Christs of history who attempted to achieve success in the line of Israel's hope and expectation, every one ended in igcominy, and their names, if not hidden in oblivion, are remembered only with horror and execration by all mankind.

How has it happened that this "creation of imagination" has alone survived and achieved a success for his name and his doctrine already too amazing for steady contemplation?

A book which narrated such a series of wonderful and unexplainable events if avowedly fictitious would make the fortune of its author and give him an imperishable reputation.

But what shall we say of the genius of these men who not only had the skill to invent the drama, but the shrewdness to make the world believe it real? And on what principle of human action shall we explain the hardihood, the patience, the eagerness, the joy, with which they died to attest its truth?

Looking into the book still further, How are we amazed at the purity of the thoughts, the doctrines, the precepts, the examples of those princes in imposture and wickedness? And what can we think of a world who have never been able to discover the evident marks of the fraud, but who are actually the better, wiser, and happier, the more nearly they succeed in imitating their conduct and that of the hero of their fictitious tale?

As you are a philosopher you may perhaps be able to give some rational explanation of this astounding paradox. Possibly you may be able to explain the existence of such customs as baptism in the name of a fictitious man; of eating bread and drinking wine in the memory of the death and in expectation of the return of one who never lived. When you are able to explain Bunker Hill Monument and the Fourth of July on the supposition that the war of the Revolution is a fiction, please try your hand on the Monumental Institutions of Judaism and Christianity.

[Some more Brother Wilcox. We should be very glad, too, to see the infidel get seriously about tracing up the Jewish and Christian institutions to the southern point.—ED.]

BAPTISM INTO CHRIST.

J. CAMERON.

The place and power of Christian baptism cannot be too closely investigated by the earnest student of the Bible. I propose in what follows to glance at the subject from the standpoint suggested by the heading of this paper. It is derived from the writings of the Apostle Paul, particularly his letters to the Romans and Galatians. To the former he says, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" (Rom. vi. 3); and to the latter, "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus: for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Gal. iii. 26–27. The phrase, "baptized into Christ," has been criticised with the view to make it square with preconceived ideas. To ascertain its true meaning and application, as used by the apostle, I propose to examine one of those attempts to impose a certain interpretation on this expression, in the hope that by placing both views before the reader, some help may be afforded him in forming his own judgment in the matter. The opening paragraph of the writer alluded to (who is anonymous) is as follows: "The question of baptism, like many of the doctrines of the Word of God, has been the subject of much controversy, and, strange to say, even at the present moment it is made the cause of separation among those known by the general name of Baptist. This must arise from a misapprehension of the mind of God on this point; therefore the only course that can be taken, in order to remedy the evil, is to draw attention to the subject as seen in the light of Scripture and reason, by inviting the consideration of brethren to the arguments we have drawn from these sources. In this spirit, then, I would suggest for consideration:—That it is agreed that the English equivalent for the Greek verb baptizo, is dip, immerse, or plunge; at least, such is the practical interpretation given of it by Baptists, and I believe admitted even by infant sprinklers to be its primary meaning. To read, therefore, any passage where the word baptizo occurs, using the English word in preference to the Greek, we certainly get a better idea of what it meant by the writer, that is, if the meaning of the English word is understood by the reader; and there are few who require to be told, that a man who was immersed in water for any given length of time, was a man surrounded by water for that period."

There is nothing here to find fault with; it is the use which the writer seeks to make of the statement in the closing sentence which calls for remark. This becomes apparent in the succeeding paragraph, which is in these terms:—"Understanding, then, immersion in this way, let us consider some of its applications. To be immersed in water is to be surrounded by it; and the same holds whether the word be applied to pleasure, difficulty, sorrow, or any other thing which might be named; the word, so applied, denotes that the object spoken of as being immersed, was enveloped or surrounded with or by it. To understand, then, that immersion into Christ is immersion into water, or that immersion into water is immersion into Christ, is wrong: Christ being one thing and water another. Yet some do confound the two, and speak of immersion into Christ as if immersion into water were such; but a little reflection ought to correct such an idea, for water is not Christ, and we might surround, or immerse a man in water as often and as long as we pleased, but that would, nor could not, be into Christ. It might be, and is (because God has given it as such), a sign or figure of immersion into Christ, and, as such, may be, and is called immersion into Christ, just as we call the figure or portrait of a man by name, as if it were the man himself; but it is not the man, being merely a portrait of him. The same form of speech was used by the Lord at the institution of the supper, 'This is my body.' Now, that which the Lord referred to was not his body; but being the figure representing his body, is called his body; from the identification of the figure with the thing figured."

He then proceeds to amplify the argument indicated here by illustrating "baptism into Christ, in figure," and "baptism into Christ, in substance," in the manner following:—"Baptism into Christ, in figure, therefore, is performed by immersion in water, but baptism into Christ, in substance, is quite another thing; and I apprehend that as there can be no portrait of a man unless he exist in substance, so no figure can be given of anything but what has a reality; so I judge there can be no figurative immersion of a man into Christ, unless there has been such an immersion in reality. Dipping, or immersion, into water is an easy to be performed, and requires no sacrifice to be made; nay, it may be done to administer to the gratification of the carnal mind—as appears from the pomp and eclat that sometimes are made to attend the performance of it. And this might be found to be the reason (if people would search narrowly their own hearts), why they are so fond to look upon the figure of the one baptism as if it were the reality."

"But baptism into Christ, in substance, is not so easily accomplished. To be surrounded with Christ, is to be placed in a position of hostility to the natural mind, the whole bent of the inward desires, and the course of the outward world. Thus a sacrifice is required of all that is dear to the flesh—a putting to death, and a burial of the old man. Faith in what the eye cannot see—faith in what God's word testifies—can alone effect such an immersion. Christ, the humble, patient, meek, long-suffering, kind, faithful, loving one, is the mantle in which we are enveloped. It is faith, then, which brings us into connection with Christ; through faith the living word gains admittance into and dwells in us; faith makes us children of God (Gal. iii. 26), and because we are such, God sends forth the spirit of his Son into our hearts. Gal. iv. 6. This is the connecting link—the one life in the one body; by one spirit are we all baptized into one body. 1 Cor. xii. 13. Such is the reality,—such is immersion into Christ; and is as far above the figure in value as a living man is above the artist's work."

The reasoning in the extracts quoted may be briefly summarized thus, retaining the writer's own words:—

"To understand that immersion into water is immersion into Christ, is wrong; Christ being one thing and water another."

"Baptism into Christ, in figure, therefore, is performed by immersion in water."

"Baptism into Christ, in substance, or to be surrounded with Christ, is to be placed in a position of hostility to the natural mind, etc. Faith in what God's word testifies, can alone effect such an immersion."

I understand the writer to mean that the immersion into Christ is effected by faith alone, immersion in water being but the outward symbol of this reality. As the evidence adduced in support of this proposition is summed up in the first item of the above summary, I shall take the liberty to examine it somewhat minutely.

Observe, the phrases "immersion into water" and "immersion into Christ" are employed as if they were the usually occurrent language of Scripture, and might thus be adopted as type and antitype. But it so happens that the phrase "immersion into water" is never once found in Scripture; and is, moreover, incorrect language, wherever found. The writer, on the other hand, employs the phrase "immersion into Christ" as equivalent to immersion in Christ as if Christ was the object in which the subject was immersed, just as water is. Now, the idea of being immersed in Christ, in this sense, nowhere occurs in Scripture. Indeed nothing is more remarkable than the distinction uniformly maintained in Scripture in the use of the words in and into, in reference to this subject. This might naturally be expected seeing that there is a clear distinction in the meaning of these terms. The Greek en strictly denotes rest in, hence the common rendering in. The word eis, on the other hand, has the idea of motion, hence its primary meaning, to, towards, into, etc. Thus our English word into is defined to be, "a preposition noting entrance."

Besides this misapplication of the word into, the writer seems to have overlooked the probability that the passage in Galatians is one of those in which there is a very natural ellipsis or omission, requiring a supplement to express the full sense. The fact is, that nearly all the passages in which baptism is referred to, are of this class. I quote a few, putting the supplement within parentheses.

"John did baptize (in water) in the wilderness, and preach the baptism (in water) of repentance."—Mark i. 4.

"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them (in water) into the name of the Father, etc."—Matt. xxviii. 19.

"He that believeth and is baptized (in water) shall be saved."—Mark xvi. 16.

"Then they that gladly received his word were baptized (in water)."—Acts ii. 41.

"Arise and be baptized (in water), and wash away thy sins."—Acts xxvii. 16.

These are but specimens of a class of passages, in which baptism in water is thus elliptically expressed.

That the passage in Galatians belongs to this class, will, I think, be evident, from the same apostle's language to the church at Corinth. He asks, "Were ye baptized into (eis) the name of Paul? I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I had baptized into mine own name."—1 Cor. i. 13–16. As it will be doubtless admitted that Paul, in this passage, referred to water baptism, the ellipsis may be supplied thus, "Were ye baptized (in water) into the name of Paul, so as to lead others to think lightly of them. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," is the unrevoked fiat of the Son of the Highest. Who will dare to set it aside, or explain it away?

THE SPIRIT.

What may be known of the spirit?

We may know just what the word of God and the facts that come within our actual observation and experience embrace. But this range embraces all that is worth knowing on any of the forty or fifty subjects to which it applies. See Cruden. No one can add to his knowledge of "the spirit" by speculation, assumption, or persistent opinion. The Divine word and the facts in any given case, must measure our authorized opinions and conclusions.

1. Note the word of the Lord: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." 1 Cor. ii. 9–16; xii. 12. The things of God are known by the Spirit of God—things of a man by the spirit of man; and we observe that each grade of animals know what sounds or signs belong to that order.

2. The word spirit applies pre-eminently to the Holy Spirit—the spirit of truth—of grace—of prayer, as it leads unto life. Again, it applies to their evil antagonists in all their range of ruinous delusion, unto death.

3. As the subject is illustrated by facts, I mention Moses. Num. xi. 16–17. Moses, under Divine direction, chose seventy elders. God took the spirit of Moses and put it on them; that they, with mind and heart of Moses, might co-operate with him in directing Israel on their way to Canaan.

This spirit was not a mystical or minor Moses. No, no; but his mental and moral capacity to aid him in his work for the people and to carry forward the purpose of God.

This appears in John the Baptist. He was the usher to Jesus and "the gospel of God." He had the spirit of his mission. Then Jesus came in the plentitude of the Spirit—the Spirit without measure, to disclose God's grace and truth in calling sinners to be "saints and sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." Such are "baptized into one body"—and made to drink into one spirit." 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13.

This is the spirit of glory, hence and immortality—in all the amplitude of everlasting inheritance in Christ's kingdom over a renovated world—an educated universe. Eph. i. 10; iv. 8–13; 1 Cor. xv. 24–27.

In such relations, "Jesus was the way (back to God)—the truth and the life." John xiv. 6. He was "the truth" as God manifested in the flesh." 1 Tim. iii. 16. The aletheia—the truth—is compounded of a, not, and lethea, from lanthano, hidden, etc. Its import is not hidden. Of old God was hidden to the Gentiles and veiled even to Israel under types. Divine Fatherhood and Sonship; restitution and Paradise; inheritance and kingdom, were hidden; but in Jesus they are "brought to light" unhidden. Because, proclaimed to Jew and Gentile "by the Gospel." Glory to God!

Thus Peter, Paul, James and John were "in the Spirit." Rev. i. 10. They saw the state of the world through "this age; the age to come and all things made new." Rev. xxi.

As the seventy elders partook of Moses' spirit, mind and purpose, so all Christians must partake of the mind of Christ. Rom. viii.

Without further illustration it is easy to understand this in the family circle. The well taught and loving children will obey their absent parents, delight to please them; and feel happy to look forward to their approval and smiling reward, on their return. So with "the called and chosen and faithful" in the family of God. Eph. iii. 15–20.

This theme is most profound, and most important; but all may be embraced with it; except they take it by the handle, and so begin and end with "the Word" and the facts it embraces in the history of God's blessed children.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 8, 1882. NO. 6.

THE RESTITUTION,
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR,
Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the literal "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY.

Delay of the Seventh Trumpet. Two Witnesses. Zechariah Continued. Chapter xiv. Explained. What is its Chronological Position. Siege and Fall of Jerusalem. The Great Battle. Overthrow of the Nations. The Lord Comes with His Saints. Establishment of the Kingdom of God. New Era.

No. 100.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The seventh trumpet very distinctly marks a resurrection, for then the dominion of the earth comes under the Messiah, and one class of the dead are judged and rewarded. It is under the shadow of that great epoch that we now stand. This great cycle, called, in a military sense, the seventh trumpet includes in it two lesser cycles; the one marking the commencement of the great cycle, the other, its close. This great epoch may also be denominated—the judgment epoch, as the noted period of national executive judgments; also, the age, or reign of subjugation; during which time Messiah executes the work of a king in subduing all things to the Father. Two noted conflicts mark the beginning and close of that reign, after which the joint reign commences. The judgment epoch has two parts:

1. The judgment ecclesiastical.
2. The judgment national.

"Judgment must begin at the house of God." 1 Peter iv: 17.

It begins on the apostasy. It has already commenced, for its dominion is taken away; the civil power of the apostate hierarchy is no more; and, since her trial and sentence must have preceded the execution, they are also numbered with events behind us. But in those executive judgments the witnesses were involved. Such we shall attempt to show.

Zech. xiv. is the narration of events yet to transpire; still they are to be classed with events belonging to the age of subjugation—to the personal, official reign of Messiah. They evidently precede the new heavens and the new earth, the new Jerusalem, and the joint dominion. It it is said, "He (Christ) must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet." 1 Cor. xv. 25.

In verse 23 the joint reign of the Father and Son comes to view; also in Rev. xxi. 22; xxii. 3. "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." "And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him."

Zech. xiv. 1. "Behold a day comes to the Lord, and thy booty is divided in thee."

"Day of the Lord," and "a day comes to the Lord," express different shades of thought. Which is correct? The original is יוֹם־בָּא לַיהוָה—ki-ye-hoveh yom bah. Yom (day) is applied to limited and unlimited duration, some limiting word is necessary to make it definite. The words "evening" and "morning," make the six days of creation, and the one of rest, ordinary days. The events themselves, and limiting words must fix its duration. Day without any limiting word may stand for twenty-four hours; the age of Messiah; day of eternity. Micah v. 2. A year. Judges xi. 40; Exod. xiii. 10; Num. xiv. 34.

In the passage under review it signifies period, or time; a day comes to the Lord. All other days come to man for his work and glory; this day comes to Jehovah, in which he shall be honored. The Rabbins hold, that "A day with Elohim is a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; and that Adam died within that period as God had declared." 2 Peter iii. 8.

This is evidently the period set apart by Jehovah himself for his own special work, executive judgment against his people, those called his chosen; their gathering at Jerusalem, are true believers and hypocrites. Satan, being at liberty after long confinement, uses the freedom, to work against the Messiah and his kingdom. His imprisonment has not produced in him any reformation. Possessing the same hatred to the seed of the woman, as on the day which saw him enter the bowers of Eden, he begins to set in motion his ambitious schemes of subverting the throne of Christ his great rival prince. He sets out what he always was, the Anti-christ; and father of anti-christs. He is equally opposed to the Father and the Son; and is a rebel against the authority of each.

Satan has given one interpretation to the fact of his liberty; God, quite another.

Satan says, I broke jail.

God says, I loosed you.

Satan says, I will gather all nations against the city and the army of the saints, in the city.

God says, I will gather them.

Satan has in mind the overthrow of Christ's kingdom.

God has in view the overthrow of Satan's domination.

The action is the same, but the motives of each are as wide apart as the antipodes.

God makes use of Satan to assemble the nations, to purify the sons of Levi, and then to dash the nations to pieces like a potter's vessel. Jerusalem is here the capital of the millennial kingdom. The period, is the time of the beginning of that cycle of events which terminates the reign of subjugation, or of Christ's official reign, and the introduction of the joint reign.

Zechariah sees and describes the phase of that era: John has been looking upon Gentile, Divine delineations, and, therefore, sees its Gentile phase.

Verse 2. "And I collect all the heathen against Jerusalem to battle, and the city is taken, and the houses plundered, and the women dishonored, and the city go forth as captives, and the remnant of the people is not cut off from the city."

God here collects the nations, as in Ezek. xxxix. 2, as he brings Gog out of the extreme north, and conducts him to the mountains of Israel there to destroy him. No doubt of Gog's views of himself.

"Are not all these nations my subjects; subdued by the power of my arm? The gold and silver, which those Jews possess, are not those riches mine, which I shall take by the might of my power? Who can resist my supreme will?

Jehovah, however, was the invisible commander of those armies, leading them to the mountain of judgment and execution. The wicked of the city were first taken captive; then, the whole army meets with overthrow, on the mountains of Israel. The wicked captives taken out of Jerusalem, were probably overthrown with them.

The righteous half (large portion) is not cut off, but escapes in a miraculous manner, as will soon appear. Its parallel will be found in Isa. iv. 3: "Every one who shall be left in Zion, and remain behind in Jerusalem, he shall be called holy, every one who is enrolled for life in Jerusalem." The Church of God is now purified.

What now "shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

Let us continue the narration of the prophet.

Verse 3. "And the Lord goes forth, and fights against those nations (heathen), as in his day of conflict, in the day of battle."

"Thou goest for the salvation of thy people." Hab. iii. 13; Exod. xiv. 14; xv. 3.

His conflict with Pharaoh, when he brought his people out of the house of bondage suits the expression very accurately.

How does his people escape out of the city when it is taken?

This we shall learn when we have examined the next verse.

"And his feet stand in that day on the Mount of Olives, which lies before Jerusalem, eastward, and the Mount of Olives is split in the midst, from east to west, a very great valley, and a half of the mountain gives way towards the north, and a half towards the south."

"In that day;" what day? the period of the taking and plundering of the city. Verse 2. Satan's army, gathered from the four quarters of the earth, has just taken the city, are occupied in gathering gold and silver, and other spoils of the wealthy Jews, the object of their invasion; and in pressing the camp of the saints more closely; when, suddenly, a shout is heard, as if in the heavens; a terrible blast of a trumpet, and a voice, like the lion's roar, immediately follow. They cast their eyes upward: when, lo, upon the loftiest summit of the Mount of Olives, stands Messiah, King of kings, and Lord of lords; not alone, as the babe of Bethlehem; but, as the Lion of the tribe of Judah: surrounded by by a vast retinue of holy ones—witnesses of the scenes about to follow. Let us stand on Mount Zion, that we may see and hear the terrible conflict.

Who has not, in imagination, been present in each of the fifteen decisive battles of the world; and, for the time, so interested, as to become an actor, for and against, as our sympathies incline us:—now for the victors; again, for the vanquished?

We are now called (as we shall be) to be witnesses of the last great battle of the world; one that shall fix the destinies of the human race. Sixty centuries of skirmishes culminate in this final death struggle. Christ and Anti-christ with their legions, flee each other in the final conflict. They had been personally opposed once before; but it was in the valley of his humiliation; and the Son of God submitted to an apparent defeat. Centuries later there was another personal contest, when Satan was defeated, and remained a prisoner for a thousand years. Being loosed again for a little season, he resolves to have another trial of power, to decide finally who shall hold earth's dindom. To this end he has assembled all his forces; and, to this moment, has been the conqueror. The land of Israel has been covered by his forces as with a cloud. The city fell before his innumerable hosts; and the object of his invasion about to be realized, when he finds himself suddenly confronted by his ancient enemy—Jesus the Messiah. He trembles at the sight of the Son of God—for he has had trial of his Almighty arm, and his avenging wrath.

Leaving the enemy, let us turn our eyes to the Mount of Olives. Look upon the Son of God, as fury comes up in his face. The time has come when he takes to himself his great power; as the Maker of all things, he bids the elements to gather their forces around him. The four winds, once quieted at the sound of his voice, now, obedient to his call, rush towards him, bearing in their swift chariots the elements of a mighty storm. Around him gathers blackness. Over his head, radiant with diadems the lightnings flash, and the thunders roar; his voice is like the sound of many waters. The battle begins. The windows of heaven open and down rushes the tempest of fire and hail-stones. Above the roar of the storm, his voice is heard in the fire of his anger. He pleads against Gog, with pestilence and with blood; he rains upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain and great hail-stones, fire, and brimstone. The terrors of the storm have their intensity increased by the shocks of the devastating earthquake. There is a great shaking in the land of Israel, the earth, the air, and the seas tremble. The Mount of Olives splits in the midst, forming a very great valley. The pent up army of the saints flees out of the city, into this mountain valley; and escapes.

Thus ends this final conflict between these rival powers. The results of the battle are the transfer of all authority, and all power to the Son of God. The times that follow this great battle are very peculiar.

Verse 6. "And it comes to pass in that day, (that) the light shall not be clear, nor dark." Verse 7. "And it will be one day, it will be known to the Lord, neither day, nor night, and at the time of even it will become light."

We have, in these verses, the picture of nature after a storm; the intense darkness of the tempest gives way to mixed light and darkness; then as the clouds pass away the sun comes out in full splendor. It describes the state of nature as it begins to dawn towards the new creation. It is a new creation out of chaos.

Verse 8. "And it happens in that day, living waters will go forth from Jerusalem, their half to the east sea, and their half to the west sea, in summer and in winter (continually) shall it be."

The unity of our subject will not allow us to follow this digression. We have been led, by these concluding chapters of Zechariah, into and nearly through the age of subjugation, instead of confining ourselves to its proximity. In the prophecies we can readily trace the two reigns—the reign of subjugation, and the joint reign; but as the one gradually opens up into the other it is very difficult to classify the Scriptures that give their history so as to fix, certainly, what events to each cycle.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

Or the Principle of Life in Man and Beast.—No. 2.

H. H. HALL.

"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward?"

A. N. Arnold, D. D., and lately a professor in the Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago, in an article on the natural immortality of the soul, published in the (Baptist) Standard some time since, said:

"When God made man at the first, after his bodily organization had been completely formed [why did he not say in Bible language, after 'man was formed of the dust of the ground?'], 'God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man [not 'his bodily organization' then, to the exclusion of anything it took to constitute man] became a living soul.' As if on purpose to intimate to us that his breath of life, the direct inspiration of the Eternal, partook of the immortality [why of immortality rather than any other attribute?] of its divine original, the Spirit prompted the sacred penman to employ a word (neshamah) which is never applied to the breath of the brutes that perish [Peter says that the wicked 'as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption'], but only to rational and immortal beings, to God, to angels, and men."

Now suppose the professor to be correct in his statement of the use of this word rendered breath, it does not, therefore, follow that this "breath" is an "immortal soul," as alleged, or, that it has even consciousness, or, that it is anything different from the ruah that returns to God who gave it, or, that it is anything but the life-principle received by "the direct inspiration of the Eternal" at the first, and which man continues to inhale and exhale and will till he dies. Job says (xxxiii. 4), "The spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." The Psalmist says (civ. 29, 30): "Thou takest away their breath [the unconscious spirit, or breath of life], they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit [breath], they are created [resurrected]; and thou renewest the face of the earth," or, restorest it to its Eden state.

But if it can be shown that the professor is not correct in his assertion that the Hebrew word neshamah "is never applied to the breath of the brutes that perish," the point must be conceded, either that the use of this word affords no evidence of an immortal soul in man, or, that it furnishes the same evidence that this breath in the brutes also "partook of the immortality of its divine original."

Let us see. Taylor, in his Hebrew Concordance, says that neshe—neshamah signifies the chameleon, a kind of lizard, which has its mouth always open gasping for air, upon which it is said to live. According to this definition, the word is not only employed of the brute, but of the lowest reptiles. If Taylor is right, the professor is wrong. But we have the most positive proof in Deut. xx. 16, where this word is applied to the breath of brutes that be is wrong, and which will be more clearly seen by reading the connection. "But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that [neshamah] breatheth."

That neshamah, the breath of God, as applied to man, means no more, but always the same as ruah, is very evident from the fact that the translators have rendered ruah "breath" in Gen. vi. 18; vii. 15, where it is said, "I do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." "And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." To make it still more certain that neshamah is applied to the breath of the animal creation, and that the professor is mistaken in his assertion that this "word is never applied to the breath of the brutes that perish," I refer the reader to Gen. vii. 22, where it is said that, "All in whose nostrils was the [neshamah] breath of life, of all that was in the dry land [of man, beast, fowl, and creeping things—see v. 21] died." It is certainly very evident that the translators understood that these words, as employed in the passages quoted, and applied to the breath of both man and beast, referred to the same thing, namely, the life-principle within them; or, otherwise, they would not have rendered them, as they have, precisely alike.

If additional evidence is required that these terms are used synonymously as applied to the breath of life in man and beast, the professor has furnished it, when in connection he says, "Thus in the very beginning, 'the spirit [ruah] of man, that goeth upward,' was distinguished from 'the spirit [ruah] of the beast [not here certainly] that goeth downward to the earth.' Eccl. iii. 21. And so when the dust shall return to the earth as it was, the spirit [ruah, not neshemah] shall return to God who gave it."

Here, then, we have still further evidence that neshamah and ruah have the same meaning where applied to the life principle in man. The ruah is said to "return to God who gave it." And when did he give it, if not when he breathed it into the nostrils of Adam? So, then, it is the same neshamah, the same ruah, the same breath, the same spirit which was imparted at the beginning, and is now received whenever a man is born into the world, that returns to God at death, and is restored at the resurrection, as taught by the inspired prophet (Ezek. xxxvii. 3-15), where he sees the vision of dry bones (not sinners, as alleged) with the flesh and sinews coming upon them, and the skin, and finally the ruah—"breath" coming into them, giving them life once more, so that they come "out of their graves" an exceeding great army.

But the professor further says of the passages he quotes above where ruah is found—"Those plainly imply that the spirit of man [does he mean neshamah, or ruah, or both?] has a life of its own, not dependent upon a material organization."

It is very easy to assume, and then affirm all this, but it is impossible for the professor, or any other man living to produce one passage of Scripture that will prove such a dogma.

Did this neshamah, ruah—breath, "spirit" have a conscious "life of its own" before God blowed it into the nostrils of Adam?

No theologian will pretend that it had.

If not, then where is the evidence that it has after it leaves the nostrils of man?

Again, if the use of neshamah, ruah, pneuma, which are the spirit and breath-words; or nephesh and psuchee, which are the soul and life-words of the Bible furnish any evidence that the "spirit" or breath, or soul "of man has a life of its own that is not dependent upon a material organization," does not the fact that all these words are employed in the Scriptures of the animal creation, afford precisely the same evidence of such a spirit, or such a soul in the brute as man possesses?

To show the reader that I do not mistake the true position of "orthodoxy," and for the purpose of the further elucidation of this subject, I will again quote from the work of Rev. H. W. Morris, page 547. He says:

"The bodily structure (of man) wonderful as it is, is but the tent of an invisible tenant, the Spirit given by the inspiration of the Creator, and all its marvellous parts and organisms are but tools and instruments provided for the use of the spirit (?). In the employment of this immortal mind all this sensitive apparatus finds its appropriate use and its highest and fulfilled." On the same page he further says: "In man, the mind or spirit is the seat of the intellectual faculties; and the special dwelling-place of that [immortal] mind is the brain."

The reader will observe that Mr. M. has reversed the Bible account of the creation of man—because this common hypothesis of the spirit's powers requires just such twisting and turning—and assumes that man was created "for the use of the spirit." Let us look at this bold assumption and see what the sequence will be if true.

1. If "man was formed of the dust of the ground" "for the use of the spirit," as Mr. M. says—for a house, a habitation for the spirit to dwell in, then it certainly must have been created anterior to the creation of man, for the good reason that there is no "use" for a "tent" or house without a "tenant"—no use for a cage without a bird. But if the spirit, being a living, knowing, immortal being, as alleged, was created before man was found, how long and where had it existed, and why is this spirit-entity so weak and feeble in the infant and child, does the immortal spirit grow in stature and calibre as the child grows? would be pertinent questions to be answered. But the proper form of these questions would be—does this breath that God blowed into the nostrils of Adam, and which, as we have seen, he also gave to the animal creation, thus grow in strength and knowledge? Is it this "breath of life" that receives culture, that is enlarged and so richly endowed, and that manifests such wonderful thoughts, and works out such marvellous results—that penetrates the infinitude of space and measures the suns of other systems and tells their wonderful distances—thus declaring the glory of God, and showing forth his handiwork?

No indeed. It is the infant that receives "the breath of life" at birth, sometimes from the attending obstetrician; it is the child that grows in stature and calibre; it is the man who, through many years of laborious study, acquires such polished culture and marvellous powers; it is the man, who after long years of toil and years of usefulness, begins to go down the hill that leads to the graveyard—in a word, it is the man that suffers and dies.

Immortality cannot suffer, for suffering, sooner or later, brings death. But the "mind" of man suffers, gets tired, becomes diseased and deranged, decays, and ceases to exist when the brain is destroyed, or the breath leaves the body. Then the mind cannot be immortal, as alleged. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath [ruah] goeth forth, he [man] returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. If when a man dies "his thoughts perish," it is very certain that the inspired wise man wrote the truth when he said —"For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol [the state of all the dead] whither thou goest"—"For the dead know not any thing."

Once more under this head. If man was formed for the abode of these "immortal spirits" they must either be existing in store somewhere, or, are created to "tenant" every infant when born into the world. In the language of another I would ask—"Does God furnish every illegitimate child at birth this spirit-entity and thus sanction all the whoredom in the world? Would God thus obey the mandate of every vile prostitute, and thus continually help men to transgress his own commandments?" These are hard questions for theologians to answer who believe with Mr. Morris that "man" was created a "tent for the use," and a cage for the dwelling of immortal spirits.

2. Having shown, as I think, the absurdity of pre-existing spirit-entities as "invisible tenants" of man—man (not his spirit) who was created "in the image of God, and after his likeness"—not in the image and likeness of his attributes, but of his form and person (see Phil. ii. 5-8; Heb. i. 3)—I will now briefly notice the alternative hypothesis of this point. And that is the transmission of this spirit-entity from parents to children. But how can mortality transmit immortality? It certainly cannot. Do you say this is a begging of the question to affirm that man is mortal? then hear the inspired words of Job (iv. 17)—"Shall mortal man be more just than God?" And was not "man" driven out of the garden of Eden "lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever?" Then surely Adam and Eve could not perpetuate a race of immortals when they, themselves, in consequence of disobedience, had lost that inestimable possibility. But mortal bodies cannot produce immortal spirits, as the stream cannot rise higher than the fountain. There can be no transmission of immortality then, "unless," as one writer says (some of whose thoughts I have borrowed on this point), "the spirit-entity propagates its species independently of the body; and if it does, why not continue to do so after leaving its prison-house of clay, and thus eternally augment the number of spirit-entities in the spirit land. If we say this spirit-entity is transmitted, since mortality cannot transmit immortality, it must be transmitted by spirit-entities, involving the idea of male and female spirits; and furthermore; if spirits propagate their species either in or out of the body, it involves them in mortality, for that which is transmitted is divisible, and that which is divisible is destructible, and hence not immortal."

In view of the above indisputable facts what becomes of the "orthodox"-immortal spirit? which they say is a "spiritual, simple, uncompounded, immaterial, indivisible, indestructible, intangible"—nothing. It is a myth; for such an "immaterial" nothing does not, never did, and never will exist.

An Omission Supplied.

Editor Restitution:

Please let me say, for the information of those who may read my little pamphlet entitled "Human Government a Failure," that owing to a mistake—an omission to print the words of the question which the writer undertakes to answer—the opening sentence of the paper seems irrelevant and obscure. That question was "Does the world possess within itself the means of rectifying its evils, or must the remedy come from above?" This is the inquiry to which the tract is an answer, and which makes the work intelligible.

ENTHUSIASM.

Enthusiasm not merely emotional and fitful, but deep, principled enthusiasm, is necessary to all good and great work; and no one needs it more than the minister, as student, preacher, and pastor. One must hide himself in Christ to find and feel the true enthusiasm for humanity; you cannot find it by inlook, nor by outlook, but only by uplook. It comes not by the pathos of the appeal of man's deep want and woe; it comes not by the cold process of logic, or by the slow, calm method of thoughts; no, no, this high enthusiasm comes only as you stand by the cross of Jesus Christ; for of all summits Calvary is the highest; it is the most commanding and the most inspiring view point this side of heaven. There you see the two infinities: divine love, and human need. There God is realised, and there man is realised: God in his holiness, his condescension, and compassion; man in his awful guilt and peril. No humanitarian sentimentalism is thus induced, but a settled principled enthusiasm. And such enthusiasm will never burn out; but it will consume all self ambitions, and give perpetual light and warmth and power. The soul thus kindled cannot hide behind ramparts nor tower in trenches; it will go forth free, brave, and glad, and find that in Christian living the true defence is aggression.

A dispatch from Rome to the Standard says: "The Pope declined to comply with the law requiring him to fill up a census paper, but a monsignore filled up the return showing that there are 500 persons living in the Vatican, one-third of whom are females." The Pope's conduct is childish and spiteful, and serves to confirm the determination of the Church and the world, that no part of Italy and no foot of the earth's surface shall ever be governed again by a Pope.

THE RESTITUTION.

J. A. CRAFTS, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 8, 1882.

WE must delay to a future number some notices of books and charts that have been sent to this office. A chart on chronology will require careful attention to speak advisedly.

AS LARGE drafts have been made upon our time in other directions, we shall not fill much space editorially this week. This must also be our excuse for the delay of some articles.

TO give the warning—to herald the coming of the Lord—to urge personal holiness, consecration and sacrifice—and to exhort one another to endure to the end—let these be our aims in filling the columns of THE RESTITUTION.

WE shall aim to give our paper more of a practical cast. Did we only realize the consecration of everything in person, character, and talents demanded of those expecting the enduring honors of the everlasting kingdom, we should be more anxious about our preparation for the crown of glory than about the long controverted and unsettled questions now so strenuously agitated.

THE manifestations of contempt from a scoffing world are of just the character to justify us in looking for the speedy close of this dispensation. The darker shadings that the prophets cast on the gloomy pictures of last-day history are prominently marked on the fast passing scenes of our own times. Despite all the mocking, startling scenes will soon be enacted before all nations. Happy those who watch and keep unspotted garments.

WE are under obligations to Brother H. Heyes of England, for a number of late English papers. Some selections showing the tendency of current events appear in this number. As the question of Israelitish restoration is one to be soon solved by the scattered tribes gaining the repossession of the land given to their fathers, we call particular attention to the gradual removal of obstacles in Palestine, that have hindered this reinstatement in the past, as well as to the persecutions that will of necessity force them back to the land of their nativity.

"REV." GEORGE O. BARNES.

Mr. Barnes has been the centre of attraction in this city for two or three weeks. His meetings are always crowded and up to this date there seems no likelihood of an abatement of the interest in them. The secret of this man's successful preaching, successful as Orthodoxy uses the term, is simply his zeal and eloquence. His utterances are original and startling. He is a consummate actor and enforces all his thoughts by the strongest and most appropriate gestures. In appearance he is tall and graceful, with a thin intellectual face lit up by eyes piercing and expressive. His hair is auburn and worn very long. Altogether the man's manner is magnetic, and he holds the attention of his large audiences in a wonderful way.

But one thing, which in reality is everything, is lacking with Mr. Barnes. He is ignorant of the truth. Sometimes he strikes a true chord but in the main he is decidedly out of tune, and only the uncultivated ear mistakes his discord for harmony. A synopsis of Mr. Barnes' belief, for the faith it is not, may be given in two brief sentences. "Come up to a front seat and confess Jesus." "Rely on Jesus and fight the devil." It is a noticeable fact that "the Christ" is almost forgotten in current preaching. Mr. Barnes presents no exception to this. The one name Jesus conveys all that his theology has need of, for what place can the "Anointed" occupy in a system that denies him a future glorious reign in the city of the Great King, even Jerusalem whose sacred courts are profaned and whose temple is in ruins. Jesus the Savior of souls from eternal torment, and the King reigning in kingdoms beyond the skies. Such is the "diluted divinity" that is poured into the gaping mouths of the multitudes. It is astonishing how few think for themselves. A thunder tone, a fierce eye, and a flower rhetoric. This is now more potent for conversion than the testimony of the Spirit of God.

But to return to Mr. Barnes. His sermons are replete with such slang as the following: "Don't go back on Jesus!" Jesus sweetly "fills the bill." It is enough. I forbear. Are men and women to be fitted for an exalted, an immortal position in the world to come by these choice expressions, that were coined in the mint of sin? Oh Paul! Oh most eloquent Apollos! are those "clergy" "Divines," those "Rabbis," those "Reverends" thy successors? "Reverend and Holy" is thy name O God! Who among the weak, the fallible, will dare usurp the name of God? None of the apostles did so! We find no such expressions as the "Rev. Paul" or the "Rev. John" or the "Right Reverend Peter," and why? Because the truth had not been polluted by the lies and abominations of so-called Christendom. Men were to love with "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"—who followed the fortunes of the little "sect everywhere spoken against." Tell me not that by trampling upon the word of truth men can raise themselves upon "a higher plane." Perish the thought! It would drag all down to perdition.

Said a fine writer—"It is a lamentable indication of the low state of mental development among mankind that the Evil One always draws a larger audience than the Good One."

I trust, for the sake of the intelligence of Louisville, that Mr. Barnes' eloquence and not his talk of the diabolos is, as I have stated, the secret of his large audiences. It is true, however, that the Devil is the minor chord in Mr. Barnes' theology, and one on which he harps at times incessantly. "Dragon wings" and "fiendish laugh" are favorite expressions.

Mr. Barnes adopts the popular method of singing and exhorting at the close of each sermon and so far there has been about 900 "conversions."

One of the most interesting parts of the whole programme is the singing. Miss Marie Barnes accompanied by her father, and both have fine voices, sings with much expression and feeling such of Moody and Sankey's songs as are appropriate to the occasion. One redeeming trait with Mr. Barnes is—that he refuses to sing everything and anything that may be found in the hymn books. Some popular hymns he calls not in one sense inappropriately "devils' ditties." Singing is a most acceptable and soul-stirring part of worship, but alas for the people that neither speak nor sing with the spirit and the understanding.

How long Mr. Barnes may remain in this city, depends entirely, I suppose, upon how long the interest in his preaching lasts. That it has lasted so long in a place like this is conclusive evidence that Mr. Barnes is no ordinary man. His ability as a speaker is acknowledged by all who hear him, and but for the sad fact of his utter ignorance of "the truth as it is in Jesus," he would be, instead of the "Rev." George O. Barnes drawing crowded houses, plain George O. Barnes "earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints"—which is an incomparably nobler work.

Editor Restitution:

Another year finds me among the living, of whom there is hope. I have thought many times since the new year dawned upon us, I would write a few words for THE RESTITUTION, but have neglected to do so until the present time; not for any lack of interest in our paper, or the glorious truths it advocates. I am not disturbed either if all do not see things just alike, for that is something I do not expect will obtain fully, till the "Lord shall bring again Zion." Then will the watchmen see eye to eye, and not before. It would be very pleasant to have perfect harmony of faith, but we are instructed in the word that perfect love is more acceptable, and therefore more desirable.

I still love the gospel of the kingdom, as taught by Jesus, prophets and apostles, and have been proclaiming it publicly for the past few months, wherever a door has opened for me to do so. Have seen some fruit of the labor, for which I thank God and take courage. Have met with some opposition where I least expected it. One very devoted Advent brother got very much offended at me, and lost his patience entirely because I was preaching that the twelve tribes of Israel were to be brought back to their land and Jesus and his twelve apostles were to reign over them. He said I was perverting the Scriptures, and deceiving those innocent people. They told him I read it out of the Scripture, word for word, and they could not see how he could call it perverting the word.

I spoke there (East Douglass, Mass.) sixteen times. Was there more than six weeks, laboring with my hands to help, and that I might not be chargable to any. Have spoken among the Christs people, three times besides, of late. At one place found them very much interested to hear about the times of restitution of all things spoken by the prophets. A Baptist cousin carried me several miles last Sunday to speak to those people, and listened with apparent interest himself to the "truth" concerning the coming and kingdom of Jesus. There were but few out (as the wind and snow were blowing a gale) but they expressed great interest in what they heard. My cousin asked at the supper table if I could quote all that was in the Bible? said he made up his mind that I could. He is a man that reads his Bible a good deal but is not an Adventist. I had a Crisis preacher in my congregation Sunday, and I hope he got some light on the prophecies. He had a Bible, and followed closely the quotations.

O, brethren and sisters, praise the Lord for truth and light; and let us strive to spread it far and near. Don't "put your light under a bushel," but let it shine both by precept and example, making other hearts glad, as our own. Gross darkness still covers the minds of the masses of Christendom, to say nothing of the whole world at large, concerning the great prophetic truths of God's word.

"O watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

Don't forget to pray for us isolated ones, while many of you have the privilege of assembling yourselves together in Christian fellowship.

The God of Israel bless and keep you all unto life eternal; is the prayer of your sister.

Editor Restitution:

We are called upon to chronicle the death of Sister Jane Baker, aged 44 years, who fell asleep in Jesus the morning of the 24th inst., after a short and painful illness, in which the heart was much affected. She was connected with the Baptists in Canada, until she was privileged to listen to the gifted Brother Hay, after which she was associated with the Christadelphians, and in this place has been associated with the Adventists. She had a kind heart and willing hand to help among the sick and afflicted. Sister Baker was found in the sick room and that to minister to their wants. Brother Benjamin Woodward preached the funeral sermon in the Baptist meeting-house, on the 26th inst., to a large congregation. And according to her request all the ministers of the place were invited to attend. Death has taken away one of the strong and good. She sleeps. Death shall not always be allowed to hold its victim. She who one that loved the Lord and his appearing. Her husband, Brother Baker, feels deeply his loss. The family mourn. The community has lost an exemplary Christian. WM. C. WELLS.

AN OBJECTOR ANSWERED.

"I don't like so much talk about religion," said a rude stranger in a city boarding-house, to a lady opposite, who had been answering some questions with regard to a sermon to which she had been listening. "I don't like it. It's something that nobody likes. It's opposed to everything pleasant in the world. It ties a man up, hand and foot. It takes away his liberty; and it isn't natural."

"Oh, no!" answered the lady, "it isn't natural. We have the best authority for saying so. 'The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned.' True religion is rowing up stream; it is sailing against wind and tide."

A pause for a few moments followed: then the stranger began again, "People who speak and think so much about religion are queer, anyhow. I wish they could only know how people speak and think about them; nobody likes them, for they are like nobody; they are so very peculiar."

"Allow me to interrupt you again, sir," said the lady; "but I am so impressed with the manner in which your language accords with the Bible language, that I shall have to introduce another quotation from that blessed book. 'Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a peculiar people.'"

"Does the Bible say they are peculiar, then? That's odd. That book, somehow, has got a dose for everybody. Yet, ma'am, you must allow that the commands that book lays upon us poor sinners are hard. It's thou shalt not, and thou shalt not; all the time. Why, its precepts and views of things are not only systematic tyranny, but they are narrow, very narrow."

"Yes," replied the lady, "they are narrow, for the Bible says they are. 'Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leads to life.' We have to struggle hard to keep in this narrow way, if we once get in it. It is too narrow for pride, worldliness, and sloth. It is too narrow for the service of two masters. It is too narrow for covetousness, envy, and all other evil passions. Hatred can find no place for, so much as the sole of its foot, in the narrow way. Good deeds, kind words, faith hope and charity, occupy all the ground, and will continue to hold it to the end."

The stranger listened, surprised and amused, and at last arose and left the room, apparently a more thoughtful, if not a better, man.—American Messenger.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

The recommendations of the district assemblies of Finland, Cherson, and Volhynia—viz: that Jews shall be excluded from all state employments and forbidden to trade in the bazaars and markets—will, it is expected, be adopted by the minister of the interior, and receive the sanction of the law.

The following is a summary of the principal recommendations, hostile to the Jews, which have been adopted by the majority of the local commissions to consider the Jewish question, and which have been submitted to General Ignatieff, as minister of the interior:

1. The decree that authorized Jews to erect synagogues and other houses of prayer must be annulled. All synagogues and public places of prayer are to be closed, and Jews are only to be allowed to perform their religious services in private houses; these, however, may not be specially constructed for religious purposes.

2. Jews shall not be permitted to elect managers of their prayer-meetings nor to appoint rabbis.

3. The ordinance by which Jews were allowed to give their children an exclusively Jewish education shall be revoked. Some of the commissions are in favor of permission being granted to Jews to send children to Christian schools.

4. The registers of births, marriages and deaths among Jews shall in future be kept by the Christian authorities, as Jews cannot be trusted to keep correct records.

5. In order to keep the Jews in future from "exploiting" the rural populations, they will be strictly forbidden to reside in villages or in market districts.

6. Neither in towns nor in villages shall Jews have the right to own landed property.

7. Jews shall not lease mills, estates, or factories, nor may they be employed there. Any proprietor of mills, estates, or factories, who shall entrust their management to Jews, will render himself liable to a fine of from 500 to 1,000 roubles.

8. Jews will not be allowed to sell spirituous drinks, nor to be engaged in any way in the manufacture of such drinks.

9. No Jew may be employed by the state.

10. Jews may not be contractors or purveyors, and several trades and commercial transactions are to be forbidden them.

11. Local banks are to be formed for the purpose of granting loans to peasants, in order to enable them to purchase land. The banks will be forbidden to make such loans to Jews.

The commissions which were not infamical to the Jews have, for the most part, restricted their favorable recommendations to permitting Jews to reside in any part of the country and to purchase a limited area of land.—London Times, Jan. 13, 1882.

FINDS NEAR BAGDAD.

10,000 Tablets in an Enormous Building. Possibly Antediluvian Records.

On Monday evening, during a discussion which took place on a paper read at the Victoria Institute, Mr. Rassam, the well-known 'discoverer of Assyrian relics, said:

In March last I went out again to the east, as you know I am always doing, for the purpose of finding out the old cities which lie buried there. As I was journeying on one occasion in pursuit of this object I met an Arab who told me that he knew of an old ruined city, the remains of which were to be found within five hours of Bagdad—that is to say, taking the computation of three miles an hour, the place he knew of was fifteen miles from Bagdad.

As we were traveling along the route pointed out by the Arab, we came, at a distance of four hours' journeying, upon an old ruin that I had never seen before—a ruin of great magnitude—so large, indeed, that it must be about three miles in circumference. I at first thought this was the place of which my guide had spoken. We went onward, and at last the Arab showed me a most wonderful ruin. I set to work and excavated there, but I found nothing of any antiquarian value.

I afterward went back to the place I had first been, and commenced a thorough search there. The result was that after digging for four days we came upon the top of some walls. This induced us to persevere with increased ardor, and we soon found that we had come upon an enormous building, in which we began to find inscriptions. I may here say that I am not an Assyrian reader. I am only a discoverer of Assyrian relics, which I send to the British Museum, where those who have made Assyriology a study interpret the inscriptions I find. We first of all discovered four rooms, and then came upon a fifth. They were what I call generally of the Assyrian or Babylonian order, and paved with bricks or stones; but the fifth room was paved with asphalt, the discovery of which brought to my mind Solomon's saying: "There is nothing new under the sun." Previous to this I had always thought asphalt was a modern invention. Singular as this discovery was, we dug through the asphalt, and in a short time we were rewarded by coming upon a coffer on which we found inscriptions. From this coffer we took two cylinders. These were covered with inscriptions which are supposed to be the most important records of the oldest city in the world, founded, as historians tell us, by Noah after the deluge, and where, according to tradition, Noah buried the antediluvian records.

Well, I had to come home; but I left some workmen continuing the operations at the spot, and I have ascertained that they have found, after a few days' more digging, that in one of the rooms there was a channel, and inside that channel there were records inscribed on nearly 10,000 tablets. These tablets are all coming to England, but we cannot, of course, as yet say what they contain. They may contain something of even greater value than anything that has hitherto been discovered in the course of our eastern researches. It may be, indeed, that we shall really find on them the antediluvian records of which I have spoken. After I have been out there again I shall be happy to give you further information as to this interesting discovery on my return. I hope to be going out in another month, and then, I shall be able to make still further advances on what we have already discovered.—London Times.

Brevities.

In the Franco-German war the Germans lost over 40,000 men by disease or the casualties of battle. It is to be remembered that every one of these was a picked man, in the full vigor of life, when he had ought to have been adding to the wealth of the country and raising up a family to strengthen up the state. Besides the official cost of the war, the voluntary contributions amounted to $12,000,000 in money or kind.

THE PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

A committee of Jews, formed in London, has been collecting information required from various parts of Russia and Poland respecting the persecution of the Jews. Mr. Serjeant Simon, M. P., is at present acting as chairman, and Sir Nathaniel Rothschild, M. P., is president of the association. They are assisted by Mr. A. Cohen, M. P., and Baron de Worms, M. P. The report will be published next week, and will comprise voluntary testimony of individuals as to events within their knowledge and dated as published in the newspapers.

Ben Ameen, the Algerian chief, by means of his daughter, has assumed the part of a prophet and has visions and revelations direct from Mohammed. One of these latter is characteristic of his country. The prophet appeared and blessed him in a dream. "Ameen was my mother's name," said Mohammed; "and because thou hast bestowed it on thy daughter, both shall be taken to Paradise. Thou shalt be victorious in thy combats with the infidel. Thou shalt drive him from the land and restore it to the true believers."

The deadly cholera is moving silently and destructively in several Asiatic countries, introduced mainly by the pilgrims to the Pagan and Mohammedan shrines, who indulge in the most filthy habits, and are under very little sanitary supervision. An International Sanitary Council at Constantinople has prepared some regulations to keep the disease out of Europe. The British Minister at Aden, a British station off the south coast of Arabia, advised Lord Dufferin, British Ambassador at Constantinople, that the cholera broke out there in August, and has been very bad ever since. A large number of the pilgrims have died of the disease between Mecca and Medina. It is following the pilgrim routes through India and Persia.

It is now believed, from some letters recently received from Italy, that the body of the late Earl of Crawford, supposed to have been stolen from his tomb in Scotland, was really removed from the coffin abroad and cremated at Milan, for which process he had often expressed a wish to his friends there. Not long since a Roman Catholic gentleman of distinction left instruction in his will that his body should be cremated at Milan, but in the absence of the relative to whom this duty was intrusted it was buried by the family. On the relative's return, after many hard words, the family were compelled by due authority to allow the body to be exhumed and burned as directed by the will. The urn may now be seen in the cemetery at Milan, with the name and titles engraved upon it.

A London contemporary has received some very painful information with regard to the massacre of Chinese laborers in Peru, concerning which Mr. H. James has given notice of a question in the House of Commons. Thirty coolies who had been employed on the farm of an Englishman at Cerro Azul, near Callao, were tied together, pushed off a pier into the sea, and the Peruvians fired on the poor drowning wretches, not one of whom escaped. The British Minister at Callao is charged with having refused to send a man of war to Cerro Azul. A second massacre commenced during the Carnival at Lima. It is stated on trustworthy authority that 500 Chinese were killed in the streets of Lima and Callao. A correspondent who writes to the St. James' Gazette from San Francisco says that a great number of Chinese escaped into the sugar-cane forests, but they were pursued by their foes, who, finding that they could not get at the fugitives, set fire to the cane, and then killed them as they tried to escape from the flames. The damage done exceeds £80,000 in value. He adds that at the date of his letter about 4,000 Chinese had been for more than a fortnight besieged in two hacciendas (plantations) in the interior of Peru, not far from the coast; and as they are armed and know their fate if they should surrender, they are determined to sell their lives dearly.

INSURRECTION IN ARABIA.

ATHENS, Feb. 6.—The insurrection in Yemen, Arabia, is gaining ground. Numbers of Arabs have deserted to the Turkish standard. The insurgents are in possession of the principal interior towns, and occupy positions from which they can only be dislodged by a large force.

ANOTHER JEWISH FAMILY MURDERED.

APPREHENSIVE OF MORE OUTRAGES.

The authorities of Warsaw are apprehensive of a renewal of outrages against the Jews. Gen. Albedinsky has organized a thorough patrol of Cossacks. This is considered a sign that the authorities are disposed to make strenuous efforts to prevent a repetition of outrages.

Considerable stir has been caused in Madrid by the publication of a circular letter from the Papal Nuncio to the Bishops, recommending that they use their best efforts to promote the pilgrimage to Rome. The newspapers urge the Government to assume an energetic attitude in the presence of the Nuncio's conduct, in openly patronizing what they declare would probably prove a Carlist demonstration. The Government of Spain has informed the Italian Government that it will refuse protection to any Spanish pilgrim guilty of participating in a political demonstration in Rome.

From now until the day of his execution Guiteau will be kept under close guard in his cell. He will not be permitted to see anybody except his immediate relatives and the jail officers. His counsel will next month ask the "court in banc"—that is the tribunal of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, to which Judge Cox belongs, consisting of Chief Justice Cartter and five associate Judges—for a reversal of the verdict of the late trial and a new hearing. There is no probability of the request being granted.

I do not believe that any man ever made a great sermon who set out to do that thing. Sermons that are truly great come of themselves. They spring from sources deeper than vanity or ambition. A Paper for Our Children!

The YOUTHS' EXAMINER

C. H. JONES, Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

MONTHLY, EIGHT PAGES.

SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER YEAR.

The following is placed at the head of the Editorial columns:

"The Youths' Examiner will be devoted to the instruction of our children, in those branches that will not only enhance their intellectual faculties but strengthen their faith in the truths and religious system of the Bible. Its exposition of Bible topics will be based upon what is known as the literal view of the prophecies. The moral system of man, the reign of Christ and his saints on the earth, etc., etc. The doctrine of the atonement and life only through Christ will be plainly set forth, and every effort be made to bring these great truths before them in a manner both simple and truthful. Any lessons in the new and other departments will from time to time be given, accompanied with suitable illustrations."

It contains some stories, but only those that contain practical truth and information.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS MADE WITH SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

As long as the back numbers hold out subscribers will receive the paper from October, 1881, to January, 1883.

Address C. H. JONES, 109 & 111 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or any agent to A. E. Underwood, Restitution Office, Plymouth, Ind., will receive prompt attention.

THE TIME IS SHORT.

I sometimes feel the thread of life is slender;
And soon with me the letter will be wrought:
Then grows my heart to other hearts more tender,—
The time is short.

A shepherd's tent of reeds and flowers decaying,
That night winds soon will crumble into nought
So seems my life, for some rude blast decaying—
The time is short.

Up, up, my soul, the long-spun time redeeming;
Sow thou the seeds of better deed and thought;
Light other lamps, while yet thy light is beaming,—
The time is short.

Think of the good thou might'st have done, when lightly
The same to thee life's choicest seasons brought:
Hours lost to God in pleasure passing lightly,—
The time is short.

The time is short. Then be thy heart a brother's
To every heart that needs thy help in aught:
Soon thou may'st need the sympathy of others—
The time is short.

If thou hast friends, give them thy best endeavor,
Thy warmest impulse and thy purest thought;
Keeping in mind, in word and action ever,
The time is short.

Where summer winds, aroma-laden, hover,
Companionless—their wish forever wrought:
Soon other graces the more ardent form will cover—
The time is short.

Up, up, my soul, ere yet the shadow falleth;
Some good return in latter seasons wrought:
Forget thyself, when duty's angel calleth,—
The time is short.

By all the lapses thou has been forgiven,
By all the lessons prayer to thee hath taught,
To others teach the sympathies of heaven,—
The time is short.

THE GIFTS AND CALLING OF GOD ARE WITHOUT REPENTANCE. Rom. xi. 29.

S. BONHOMME.

Paramount above the interest felt in the future of other lands of Scripture, such as Assyria, Egypt, Moab and Ammon, and Edom and Ethiopia: is that which attaches to the future of Palestine. If the times of the Gentiles are well nigh accomplished, it follows that the time is at hand when Jerusalem shall no more be trodden down under the heal of the infidel Turk. No truth is more clearly revealed in God's word than that the Jews, now scattered to the four winds of heaven, shall be gathered again, and that it shall be the will of the nations, more especially England, to plant them in their own land. Isa. lx. 9. Improbable as this may seem, impossible to the judgment of unbelief, yet is it not within the power of God, who put it in the heart of Cyrus and Darius to restore his chosen people to the lands of their inheritance, to accomplish his purpose of restoration in a similar manner again? Jer. xxxi. 35, 36.

It is a well ascertained fact that the hearts of the Jewish people are being powerfully turned at this present time towards the land of their inheritance. The repeopling of Palestine is going on silently; every year many Jews are returning thither, and settling down in its deserted homes, an Israelite on the 23rd of October, having come from Jerusalem, (Weinstraul by name) stated that no less than one hundred thousand Jews now reside in the holy land, they have a legal right to the possession of land, building companies have been formed in many parts of the country, as well as in Jerusalem, and the purchase of extensive tracts of land by wealthy Israelites have been in contemplation and a banking house by a Jew has been established. The revival of the persecution of the Jews in Russia and Germany, has had an important influence upon their ingathering to their own land, 60,000 Jews, in their exodus from Russia, are now domiciled in Turkey, finding the infidel Mahometan a kindlier friend in Gentile lands, and thereby quickening their desires for a return to Palestine, when the crumbling fabric of the Ottoman Empire shall fall to pieces; and every day we see the hastening process of decay. Events may precipitate the drying up of the mystic Euphrates, and then we may expect to see the Jewish nation, Judah and Israel speedily gathered within the borders of Canaan. It is not a little remarkable that so strong an interest should now be manifested in that land; a land that once was and is soon to be the glory of all lands, Jerusalem—her buried palaces, even the very foundations of her beautiful temple are now being disentombed from her dust of ages in which they have so long lain, neglected and forgotten. Surely "the time to favor Zion, yea, the set time," seems to have come. "Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. God hasten the time, when he shall establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth; when thither the people shall be gathered together, and the nations to serve the Lord. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

When God called Abraham, and assigned him the fatherhood of a great and a mighty, even of a spiritual seed, he allotted a region of the earth's surface for their ultimate occupation. The limits of the holy territory were accurately defined and two great rivers designated as its principal boundaries. To thee and to thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates. Gen. xv. 18.

Also, the predicted reappearance of the children of Lot in the latter days, and the glory to be enjoyed by most of the Bible nations, is founded upon prophetic knowledge inspired by him who declared the end from the beginning. Scripture foretells a bright future during the millennial age, and that in the very territory assigned to the children of Lot as their inheritance by God's decree.

For on the very day that the Israelites, in their march to Palestine, reached the borders of the Ammonites, God said to Moses (Deut. ii. 19), "When thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them, for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession, because I have given it to the children of Lot for possession," so that they, like their Hebrew cousins, held their territory by a divine title deed. The Ammonites were planted on the east of the Dead Sea, and occupied the land between the river Jabbok and the Arabian desert. But before they obtained possession of the land given them by the God of heaven and earth and the sea, they like their Hebrew cousins had to drive out a race of fierce giants known as Zamsummims or the Rephaims. Gen. xiv. 5; Deut. ii. 20. This they effectually accomplished, for "the Lord destroyed them before the sons of Ammon."

Like their brother of Moab, they refused the Jews to march through their territory, though requested in brotherly terms. For this sin they were excluded by divine command from the Jewish census; for God said to Moses (Deut. xxiii. 3, 4), "an Ammonite shall not enter the congregation of Jehovah; even to their tenth generation, because they met you not with bread and water in the way when ye came from Egypt. Their extinction as a distinct people as predicted by Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Amos was fulfilled to the letter, and they are now so blended with the Bedouin Arabs, that they cannot be distinguished from the sons of Ishmael. But they still occupy the territory given them by Jehovah in perpetuity nigh 4,000 years ago. Though apparently extinct as a distinct nationality, the history of the Ammonites is not yet completed, for prophecy indicates that they will form an important factor in the events which are predicted to close this dispensation. This fact the prophet Jeremiah tells, "Ye shall be driven out every man right forth, and none shall gather up him that wandereth. And afterwards I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith Jehovah." Thus whilst the present position is so blent with the various races of the Arabian desert that none can gather up him that wandereth, so as to be distinguished, yet their revival as a distinct people is clearly predicted; for the God who scattered them for their cruelty to both Jew and Gentile will bring again the captivity of the Ammonites. Nor is this the only prophecy which foretells the revival of that race in the latter day. From Daniel we gather that the children of Lot will either actively or passively resist the wilful king on his last and fatal invasion of the Holy Land. Though many kindred nations are enumerated as accompanying when he invades Palestine, the Ammonites are not mentioned, and hence we may infer that they are adverse to his pretentions. Nor is this negative indication of their antagonism the only proof we have of the opposition of the sons of Ammon; for we read that (Dan. xi. 14), these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. If we may regard Isaiah x. 28-32 as an itinerary of his last march to Jerusalem, of which there can be but little doubt, we can well understand how the princes of Ammon will escape the grasp of the universal Autocrat. For not only will the territory of Ammon be out of his line of march, but in his fierce hatred of the Jews, maddened, in fact (Dan. xi. 44), by the daring revolt of the Syrians and the Hebrews he will probably regard the Ammonites as too insignificant to send even a detachment of his vast army to crush them, and hence will defer their punishment until after he has wreaked his vengeance on the chosen people. But we see on the other hand, it is quite possible that they will find in their impenetrable desert a natural fortress against the forces of this wilful king, just as it has been a barrier for long centuries against the Ottomans. But, whatever the reason for their escape out of the hands of his countless forces, before he can crush them for their revolt, he himself will be totally defeated in the valley of Jehoshaphat, and come to his end and none shall help him. Dan. xi. 45.

It is noticeable how Revelation supplies foreshadowings of the glory which will be given to most of the Bible nations in the last days. David in prophecy says (Psa. lxviii. 31), Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God. Isaiah xix. says, Assyria shall be the work of God's hands, Egypt my people, and Israel mine inheritance. Though the sons of Lot are now so amalgamated with the Ishmaelites and Midianites as to be difficult of separation, yet the omniscient God has his eye upon them for good; and hence at the time in the latter day they will reappear as two distinct nationalities. For as God has said by Jeremiah xlix. 6, "I will bring again the captivity of Ammon," we may feel assured that inasmuch as the curse has been fulfilled to the letter, so the restoration of Ammon to more than his prestine dignity will come at the very hour, neither sooner or later, fixed in the divine counsels. For, as in the analogous curse of the house of Israel, (Rom. xi. 29,) the gifts and calling of God are without repentance; and having given an assigned territory unto the children of Ammon, Jehovah has never revoked the grant, which is consequently now only in abeyance.

The explorations of Lieutenant Warren and his colleagues in Jerusalem and the Holy Land constitute the analogues and the proof of the literality of the Psalmist's prediction, and tell us with trumpet tongue that the end of Gentilcism draweth nigh.

THE JEWISH PERSECUTIONS.

The Rev. Dr. Salomon, preaching at the Great Synagogue, Cheetham, on Saturday, took as his text the words of Isaiah, "Hath he smitten him as he smote those that smote him?" and connecting this passage with the Egyptian bondage, where the Almighty prepared the Jewish people in the hard school of adversity for national existence, and also for the mission which they were destined to fulfil, he rapidly sketched the history of Israel between the two periods. He went on to remark: Judaism has been divided socially and politically into three great epochs. Firstly, the Patriarchal Judaism—the family organization. The patriarchs left as a legacy to their descendants the Jewish family life, which with its strict morality and implicit subjection to the parental authority remains to this day one of the most salient features of Judaism. Secondly, Mosaic Judaism, the religious and natural organisation formulated and partly developed by Moses, further developed by Samuel, which, however, even under David and Solomon never reached the extension of which it was capable. Thirdly, prophetical Judaism, or Judaism as a world's religion. This grand conception had presented itself to the mind of the great King, as shown in his magnificent prayer at the dedication of the temple. Similarly, Alexander conceived the idea of a universal Hellenism, and Napoleon the Great, that of universal monarchy. But the time had not come. On the contrary, heathenism acted with destructive effect on the political and religious organizations of the Jewish kingdom, and eventually led to their temporary overthrow, in spite of the glowing appeals and fiery denunciations of the prophets. But through all their mournful declarations of impending disaster there ran a thread of consolation in the assurance that the Lord would not forsake his people, and that the time of banishment could only be a season of preparation and purification. The prophet Isaiah speaks of the Jewish nations as a tree which shall take root, and declares that "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." And immediately after follow the words of the text, "Hath he smitten him as he smote those that smote him?" In these declarations lie the greatest hope, for the nations of antiquity—Greeks and Romans, Babylonians and Assyrians—who smote and wasted Israel are extinct, dead and buried, and yet "Israel stands living by their tombs, and gazes with wonder and hope on the Assyrian spear, once steeped in the gore of his forefathers, and the broken Roman sword that once reeked with their hearts' blood." Such reflections form a warrant for cherishing the brightest hopes. Alluding to the cruel sufferings of the Jews in Russia and Germany, notably to the expulsion of 800 unoffending citizens from Orel, and the savage cruelties lately enacted in other parts of Russia, the preacher drew a parallel between the present situation of their Russian brethren and the ancient Batavians as described in the speech of Claudius Civilis: "We are delivered over to their officials and governors, who, when satiated with blood and plunder, are replaced by others, who renew the same outrages and violence under another name. And even if Rome sends a procurator he oppresses us with an ostentatious and costly retinue, or yet more intolerable pride. The conscriptions are at hand, which tear children from parents and brethren, and deliver our blooming youth to Roman licence and uncbastity." Dr Salomon contrasted the conduct of Russia with the hospitable reception accorded to the refugees on the soil of Albion and America, and, appealing to those who in Germany had sanctioned the persecutions of the Jews, asked—What is it that excites your ill-will? It cannot be our faith, for we obey Moses and the prophets, and your own teacher himself set his seal to that creed which we constantly profess when he declared that the two commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," and "thy neighbor as thyself" embraced all the law and the prophets, and further testified, "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." And again, "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Perhaps a few unworthy ones amongst our number may have called forth your anger, but consider what it means to stigmatise a whole community because of the misdeeds or faults of a few worthless members. Would you call a tree rotten because a branch here and there may be worm-eaten and withered? Do not cause us to lose faith in the human heart, which God has planted in us, nor take away from us that blessed hope of the better time, when we shall become "one fold under one shepherd." Referring to the projected colonization of Palestine by a portion of the Jews expelled from Russia, the preacher said: How my heart thrills, and how the heart of every Jew that feels love for the cradle of his religion rejoices, to hear that measures for the colonization of the Holy Land are now being earnestly considered. A report from Vienna states that both the "Alliance Israelite" in Paris and the Vienna "Alliance" are now devoting themselves fully and completely to the idea of the colonization of the Holy Land. The following is an account of the affecting scene witnessed on the departure of 28 Russian boys for the sacred land of Palestine:—"After they had entered the train a lad of twelve years old began to chant a very plaintive hymn, in which the small company joined in the most pathetic manner. The text of the strophe was Russian, the song a farewell hymn on leaving home. Tears stood in the eyes of the bystanders. Have these children, with the patriotic feelings which still animate them, deserved the Muscovite tyranny?" Although I am aware of the great difficulties which are inseparable from such a work as the colonization of the Holy Land, yet I believe this is the only anchor which can save our brethren from destruction. Such an undertaking was already commenced about eight years ago, the founder of the scheme being David Gutman, of Zala Egerszeg, in Hungary, who devoted to it the whole of his means, in the hope that he would find men of like mind, versed in agricultural science, to continue the carrying out of his long-cherished plan. The success has not yet fully answered the expectations of the founder, not because of technical difficulties, but from financial hindrances, which have temporarily delayed the prosperity of this "oasis in the desert." In Palestine it is only possible to work with one hand; the other is needed to protect oneself against the rapacity and violence of the Arabs. The question whether the future Jewish State should be perfectly independent, or should seek temporarily the protection of other powers, may be left for later solution. I will not go so far as Mr. Laurence Oliphant, and speculate on the advantages which might accrue to England or any other European power from an alliance with the reconstituted state, but simply state my opinion that the colonization of Palestine is the soundest and most effective proposal for the relief of our needy brethren in Russia. In the month of February there will be held in this city a meeting of the Anglo-Jewish Association, for the purpose of assisting our foreign brethren, which should receive our earnest support and hearty co-operation.—From Manchester Guardian of Jan. 16, 1882.

JEW-BAITING IN RUSSIA.

Horrible Treatment of an Unfortunate People.

The minute accounts published in London of the persecution of the Hebrews in Russia cannot fail to excite the compassion and indignation of the English-speaking world. The Pall Mall Gazette has given startling emphasis to the meagre references made in the officially revised dispatches from St. Petersburg to the riotous disturbances of the last nine months, and its scathing invectives are fully justified by the details furnished by a correspondent of the Times (London). It is a most hideous record of rapine, lust, and inhumanity. If the Turkish butchers in Bulgaria were more bloodthirsty and barbarous, the Russian mobs are every whit as cruel and debased, swayed as they have been by a passionate hatred of the Jews which is distinctively medieval in spirit. Moreover, the authorities have not only been wholly as supine as the Turkish government was after the massacres in the Balkan peninsula but they have openly abetted and officially justified these hateful and frenzied outbreaks of savagery and fanaticism.

The signal for these atrocities was given a few weeks after the assassination of the Czar. At Elizabethgrad, a town in South Russia, where the Jewish community formed at least a third of the population, a mob, having sacked a wine shop and become inflamed with liquor, attacked the synagoge. For forty-eight hours the rioters remained in possession of the Jewish quarter, the soldiers who were called out to suppress the revolt, joining heartily in the work of destruction, pillage, and lust. As many as 100 shops and warehouses and 500 houses were demolished, the losses of the victims being estimated at $1,500,000. This was the first outbreak. It was followed in a week by riots in Smiela and Kieff, where the troops and police again supported the mob, participating fully in this double assault upon property and virtue. At Kioff the attack was deliberately announced in advance, and when the Governor was called upon to protect 20,000 Hebrew residents of the city, he refused to give his soldiers any trouble "for the sake of a pack of Jews." The consequence was that 2,000 of the hated race were left without shelter, and in the sight of husbands and fathers married women and young girls were made the victims of the most brutal assaults. From this time until the end of the year there was scarcely a town in Southern and Southwestern Russia where similar scenes were not enacted. As many as 160 villages and towns were at different times during eight months at the mercy of a besotted rabble. The frenzy spread from town to country until it reached the pettiest hamlet where there was a single Jew with a little ready money to lend. It finally flamed out in the ancient capital during Christmas week, when an alarm of fire was raised simultaneously in two synagogues, and a thousand houses and shops were plundered and destroyed.

Space will not permit us to illustrate adequately the cruelties and indignities to which these wretched victims of persecution were exposed, much less to catalogue the horrors by naming the places and reckoning the losses in life and property that were sustained. Many of the incidents are heartrending and revolting. We read of a heartless mob breaking into a house, and finding neither Jewesses nor treasure in the empty rooms, sullenly wreaking its disappointment on a baby, which is hurled out of a window and falls dead at the feet of a platoon of Cossacks. Then follows a recital of an attack upon a Jewish congregation, the women who escaped a worse fate in the synagogue being driven into the river and forced to drown themselves. A mob admitted to a Hebrew innkeeper's wine cellar ends by cutting the throats of his wife and six daughters; a child crouching in a ditch sees a band of ruffians murder its mother and set fire to the house; an innkeeper is cooped in one of his empty wine barrels and cast into the Dnieper; men, women and children are roasted alive; a father defending his daughter from stairway to roof is hurled to the pavement; and women who have been suicides of the silks and satins which wealthy Jewesses have flaunted before their eyes outrival the rage of the Paris Communo in malevolence and shamelessness.

The Russian authorities have in almost every instance openly encouraged the rioters, and have only intervened with any energy when the riot was three days old and the mob had exhausted its resources of wanton cruelty and barbarous atrocity. The attacks have invariably been planned in advance. Saints' days and Sundays being generally chosen and wooden crosses being sometimes erected before the doors of Christians as a sign that they should be spared.

The Jews have known when they were to be persecuted, and have begged for military aid, but it was never granted. Many of the mobs believed the government had handed over the property of the Jews to the impoverished classes, and that the movement had received the sanction of an imperial ukase. This shameless apathy of the local and imperial authorities is the most disheartened feature of this relapse into mediæval Jew-baiting.—N. Y. Tribune.

Live for Something.

Live for something, be not idle,
Look about thee for employ,
Sit not down to empty dreaming:
Labor is the sweetest joy.
Folded hands are ever weary,
Selfish hearts are never gay;
Life for thee has many duties—
Active be, then, while you may.

Scatter blessings in thy pathway,
Gentle words and cheering smiles,
Be they than gold or silver,
With their grief-dispelling wiles.
As a pleasant sunshine falleth
Ever on a grateful earth,
So let sympathy and kindness
Gladden well the darkened hearth.

Heart-there are oppressed and weary,
Drop the tear of sympathy;
Whisper words of hope and comfort,
Live, and thy reward shall be,
Joy unto thy soul returning,
From the perfect fountain head;
Freely as thou freely givest
Shall the grateful light be shed.

Mark This, Boys.

Did you ever know a man who grew rich by fraud continue successful all through his life and leave a fortune at death? This question was put to a gentleman who had been in business forty years. After reflecting awhile he said:

"Not one. I have seen many men become rich, as if by magic, and win golden opinions, when some little thing led to the exposure of their fraud, and they have fallen into disgrace and ruin. Arson, perjury, and suicide are common crimes with those who make haste to be rich regardless of the means."

Boys, stick a pin here. You will soon be men and begin to act with those who make money. Write this good man's testimony in your mind, and with it put this word of God, "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him."

Home.

How varied are the sensations which this word awakens in different individuals—different because of the character of the homes!

Whatever the combined sensations may be, that of tenderness is prominent among them. For whether the object affected has ever had a home or not, he has heard of or seen homes wherein peace and happiness reign supreme; and there exists within him an intense longing for such a refuge in which to hide from the petty cares of worldly life.

How pleasant it is to have such a place to go to after the harrassing cares of one's business, where, if they do cling to him even to the house-door; there they are obliged to succumb to home influences, and baffled by the bright faces of the family that rushes to meet the loved one, await outside until the victim again appears.

Then let us make our homes the pleasantest of all pleasant places, pervaded with that delightful restfulness so highly prized by all; and seek, by love, to crowd out the cool indifference, tormenter—Care.—Emma Campbell.

My Influence.

"Gather up my influence and bury it with me," were the dying words of a young man to weeping friends at his bedside, as stated to the speaker a while since, by one to whom it was dear.

What a wish was this! what deep anguish of heart there must have been as the young man reflected on his past life!—a life which had not been what it should have been. With what deep regrets must his very soul have been filled as he thought of those young men he had influenced for evil!—influences which he felt must, if possible, be eradicated, and which led him faintly but pleadingly, to breathe out such a dying request—"Gather up my influence and bury it with me."

My young friends, the influence of your lives for good or evil cannot be gathered up by your friends after your eyes are closed in death, no matter how earnestly you may plead in your last moments on earth. Your influence has gone out from you; you alone were responsible; you had the power to govern, to shape; your influence no human being can withdraw. Such a request cannot be fulfilled. It is impossible. Your relatives and friends cannot "gather up your influence and bury it with you." Young men, live noble, true, heroic lives. Possess this "moral courage" in full proportions, and at all times—everything.—W. A. Baldwin.

Night of Life.—Young Men.

One night often destroys a whole life. The leakage of the night keeps the day forever empty. Night is sin's harvesting time. More sin and crime are committed in one night than in all the days of the week. This is more emphatically true of the city than of the country. The street lamps like a file of soldiers with torch in hand, stretch away in long lines on either sidewalk; the gay colored transparencies are ablaze with attractions; the saloons and billiard halls are brilliantly illuminated; music sends forth its enchantment; the gay company begin to gather to the haunts and houses and gardens of pleasure; the gambling dens are aflame with palatial splendor; the theatres are wide open; the mills of destruction are grinding health, honor, happiness, and hope out of thousands of lives. The city under the gaslight is not the same as under God's sunlight. The allurements and perils and pitfalls of night are a hundredfold deeper and darker and more deceptive. Night life in our cities is a dark problem, whose gloomy depths and abysses and whirlpools make us start back in horror. All night long tears are falling, blood is streaming.

"They that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken are drunken in the night. But let us who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation." 1 Thess. v. 7, 8.

A Mother's Love.

Happy is he who knows a mother's love!

What is so pure? The patriot expects fame, the friend sympathy, and the lover pleasure. Even religion, while she waters her faith with tears, looks forward to the best fruit of her love. But maternal affection springs from the breast uninvoked by the touch of interest. Its objects are the weak and the woful. It haunts the cradle of infantile pain or hovers near the couch of the faint and forsaken. Its sweetest smiles break through the clouds of misfortune and its gentlest tones arise amid the sighs of suffering and of sorrow. It is a limpid and lovely flow of feeling which gushes from the fountain head of purity, and courses the heart through selfish designs and sordid passions unmingling and unsullied.

What is so firm? Time and misfortune, penury and persecution, hatred and infamy, may roll their dark waves successively over it, and still it smiles unchanged; or the potent allurements of fortune, opulence, and pride, power and splendor may woo her—and yet she is unmoved! Mother "loves, and loves forever."

What is so faithful? From infancy to age, "through good report and evil report," the dews of maternal affection are shed upon the soul. When heart-stricken and abandoned, when branded by shame and followed by scorn, her arms are still open—her breast still kind. Through every trial that love will follow to cheer us in misfortunes, support us in disease, smooth the pillow of pain, and minister at the bed of death—a mother's love is supreme. Happy is he who knows a mother's love.

How a Little Girl Suggested the Telescope.

Nearly 300 years ago, there was living in the town of Middleburg, on the island of Walcheren, in the Netherlands, a poor optician named Hans Lippershein. One day, in the year 1608, he was working in his shop, his children helping him in various ways, or romping about and amusing themselves with the tools and objects lying on his work bench, when suddenly his little girl exclaimed:

"Oh, papa! see how near the steeple comes."

Half startled by this announcement, the honest Hans looked up from his work, curious to know the cause of the child's amusement.

Turning toward her he saw she was looking through two lenses, one held close to her eye, and the other at arm's length: and, calling his daughter to his side, he noticed that the eye-lens was plano-concave (flat on one side and hollow on the other), while the one at a distance was plano-convex (flat on one side and bulging on the other). Then taking the glasses he repeated his daughter's experiment, and soon discovered that she had chanced to hold the lenses apart at their exact focus, and this had produced the wonderful effect that she had observed. His quick wit and skilled invention saw in this accident a great discovery. He immediately set about making use of his new knowledge of lenses, and ere long he had fashioned a tube of pasteboard, in which he set the glasses firmly at their exact focus.

This rough tube was the germ of that great instrument the telescope, to which modern science owes so much. And it was on October 22, 1608, that Lippershein sent to his government three telescopes made by himself, calling them "instruments by means of which to see at a distance."—N. Y. Witness.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

ELLEN P. ALLERTON.

Beautiful feet are those that wear
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty painted there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where heart-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterance prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest and brave and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down sunniest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Cheerless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose fountains but few may guess.

Beautiful twilight, at set of sun.
Beautiful goal, with race well won,
Beautiful rest, with work well done.

Beautiful graves where grasses creep,
Where brown leaves fall, where tears drift deep
Over worn-out hands—oh, beautiful sleep!

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Six.

J. B. COX.

In the last part of Paul's admonition to Timothy, we read, "But shun profane and vain babblings," or, "But profane, empty declamations resist." Paul felt the keen edge of the shameless sword when he was battling for the truth, for he said concerning the Galatians, "I marvel that ye are so quickly removing from him that called you in the grace of Christ unto a different gospel: which is not another gospel: only there are some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ." New Version, Gal. i. 6-7. Here we see the importance of Paul's admonition to the young student of the Holy Scriptures, lest he should be led astray by these perverters of the gospel of God. Whenever a substitute is offered in place of the true gospel, there is of necessity a perversion of the gospel. Hence it is a counterfeit, and a counterfeit is something forged; fictitious; spurious; feigned: not genuine; deceitful. Consequently counterfeit teaching is profane and vain babbling, declamations that are unsound, empty, nothing in them, worthless. Such teaching is common among us, as it was in the days of the apostles, and may be summed up in one expression viz: The immortal soul doctrine. The term immortal soul cannot be found in the Bible, neither is there any expression throughout the book to prove that man has a soul within him that is immortal, and will live in a conscious state separate from the body, when it (the body) is dead. Yet the doctrine is freely taught from our pulpits, and is received by the people who are led astray by the Reverend D. D's., of the day.

But occasionally one of these great teachers will admit the truth, as in the case of Elder Burgess a few years ago, while we was president in Butler University, he said, "The immortal soul doctrine, is nowhere taught in the Bible. It is the doctrine of Plato, a heathen philosopher." Lecture on the resurrection. He then denounced the pulpit orator for advocating such a doctrine. But we may go a little farther back, and trace the idea to the time when our first parents dwelt in the garden of Eden, when Satan added the word "not" to the word of God. Here he inculcated the mischievous idea that they should not die. Adam and Eve may not have understood the matter as we have been taught by our elegant divines; as death had not then entered into the world, they may have thought that their whole person should continue to live. But after this death came, so the children of the devil, or they that do hold of his side, established the idea that when God created man, he created two men, one inside the other, the inside man is styled the "Immortal soul," some call it the inner man, or, the man proper. As Mrs. Cobby, a noted spiritual medium, said in a lecture, she once delivered in the city of Indianapolis, in my hearing, "If we shoot a man we he dies, we do not hurt the man proper, we only make a hole in him, (the body or shell) for the man proper to come out of." Hence the mind becomes deluded. We are taught from childhood that when God breathed the breath of life into the nostrils of man, that that breath was an immortal soul, or that it became such, and that soul being immortal can never die, therefore, it must exist in a conscious state when the body is dead. This doctrine was not taught by Plato alone, but it was endorsed by the Romish church. So those teachers located a heaven as the abiding place for the righteous, until the resurrection of the body, (for they believed in a reunion of the soul and body,) they also had a place of torment for the wicked which is often called hell. But a middle place is also arranged by them, called purgatory, a place or state in which the souls of the wicked are, that they, by certain punishment may be purged from their impurities, and make fit for heaven.

The same doctrine is also received by the Protestant church, except that they ignore the half way place, (purgatory.) They locate the souls of the righteous in heaven, with God and the Elohims, there to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, for ever and for ever. But the souls of the wicked they thrust down to regions of abyss, there to suffer the vengeance of an offended God, in a lake of fire and brimstone. But modern spiritualists have taken a stand, which differs from both Roman Catholic and Protestant. They locate the soul or spirit in air, within a communicative distance, and sometimes so as to become visible. But reason teaches us that in these differences there must be a wrong, it is impossible for all to be right, they may however all be wrong. And a close study of the Holy Scriptures will at once prove these positions all to be built upon sandy foundations, even upon the lie of the old serpent, "Thou shalt not surely die." Hence, the immortal soul doctrine is a fable, an empty declamation, an erroneous idea.

Then what is man? Answer, Shall mortal man be more just than God? Job iv. 17. Thus we see at once that man is mortal, and therefore he is subject to death. What is death? the orthodox, (as the sects are called,) tell us, "Death is the separation of the soul from the body." But Worcester's Dictionary says, "Extinction of life." The later is in harmony with the word of God. "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." Ecc. ix. 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4.

When God said, "thou shalt surely die," he referred to the whole man, it was the whole man that God made of the dust of the ground, and when God breathed the breath of life into his nostrils he became an active being, whereas before this he must have been an inactive creature, thus it is said a man becomes a (chayiah nephesh) living soul. If therefore, the communication of the breath of life constituted a man a living soul, the privation of that breath would constitute him a dead soul, we have an example of this in Num. xix. 13. "Whosoever toucheth the (meth nephesh) dead body of any man that is dead." Here we have the word nephesh translated "body," if the word nephesh was translated in this place as in Gen. ii. 7, it would read "dead soul" thus the Bible teaches that the soul is subject to death.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ez. xviii. 4. But the Psalmist says, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he will receive me." Psa. xlix. 15.

Thus, the immortal soul doctrine as taught by the popular theologians, is an empty declamation, a heathen dogma, inasmuch it cannot be supported by the word of truth. Out of it grows the vain idea of a deathless spirit, such an expression in connection with man is inconsistent. And the death that that never dies, is also one of its branches, but can who conceive of such a thing, a reasonless idea.

The sky kingdom, is also the outgrowth of the immortal soul doctrine. Inasmuch as it is endorsed by the people, that an entity (called the immortal soul) exists in man, and that it leaves the body at death, they must of necessity have a place for it to exist, so they quote the Scripture, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Ecc. xii. 7. Thus making the soul and spirit synonymous, forgetting that the Hebrew character for spirit is Ruach or Huach, which signifies wind, air, breath.

I once made use of this expression before a body of Methodist ministers, when Dr. Andrews (of whom the Cincinnati Commercial once said, he is the best Greek and Hebrew scholar among all the Methodist ministers in the state of Indiana) said to me, Your positions are correct.

So we find it now as it was in the time when Jesus was here among men. Nicodemus was a scholar, and when he came to Jesus by night, He "said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God." John iii. 2. So likewise we sometimes meet with a scholar who understands something of the word of God even if they do not preach it before the public.

But the popular idea concerning the soul or spirit, which is supposed to leave the body at death is, that it will (if righteous) ascend up to the kingdom of God in heaven, and sometimes if rich in this world's goods, and have been liberal in church matters, (even if a little wicked,) the Reverend gentleman, in preaching the funeral sermon of such, will comfort the bereaved friends, by telling them that his body has only fallen in death, but his soul has gone to heaven, and is glorified in the presence of God.

These Reverend gentlemen, even boast of going to heaven themselves at death. I once listened to the great Evangelist, Dr. Hammond, when he had taken for his subject, "The recognition of friends in heaven." He selected for his text, "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Psa. cxii. 6. Inasmuch as the word heaven does not occur in the Psalm, he added it to the word, to make it read, "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance in heaven." (What a perversion of the word of God.) He then told the audience, that when he died he was going right up to heaven, and told what a good time he was going to have, he would meet good old Noah there, and what a time he would have with him, he would inquire of him how he got all these animals into the ark. Then he said he would meet with Paul there, and he would talk with him for days and weeks. Such was the character of his discourse, and the congregation seemed to like to have it so. Such pulpit droppings are vain babblings, empty declamations, all arising from the immortal soul doctrine which Paul told Timothy to resist. How different is such teaching, to the saying of Job, when speaking of man in the death state. "Yet shall he be brought to the grave, and shall remain in the tomb. The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him, and every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him." Job. xxi. 32-33.

Also the Psalmist says, "Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish. This their way is their folly: yet their posterity approve their sayings. Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling." Psa. xlix. 12-14.

How sad to think that in this country, called an enlightened country, a Christian country, a land of Bible, there should be so much ignorance manifest, especially by the leaders of the people, who are leading the multitudes astray, by teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Modern spiritualism, also issues forth from the immortal soul doctrine. How many people have been deceived by those who propose to converse with spirits of the dead. Modern spiritualism must be of evil origin, inasmuch as it was abominable in the sight of God, when the children of Israel were about to enter into the land of Canaan, God said, "Thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination in the sight of God." Deut. xviii. 9-12. When God said to the representatives of the human family, "Thou shalt surely die," he did not mean that part of them should die, while the other part should dwell in the air, and converse with the living on the earth, in the form of a ghost. For he said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The same "thou" is referred to in each case.

Modern spiritualism is therefore, nothing more than demonology, and sprang forth from the little word "not." It is a profane and old wives' fable, which Paul exhorted Timothy to refuse. "Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." 1 Tim. iv. 1. "Spirits of devils, working miracles." Rev. xvi. 14.

The positions taken by the Roman Catholics, and also the Protestants, as well as modern spiritualists, are not in accordance with the word of truth. Therefore, the immortal soul doctrine, is a God dishonoring doctrine, it is a fable; a vain profane babbling, and well may it be said, that a preacher tells a lie as though it was the truth, when advocating this doctrine. For this doctrine ignores the resurrection of the dead, as taught by Jesus and his apostles, without which we have no promise of a future life. Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain? Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God: because we have testified that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not." 1 Cor. xv. 13-15. So it is plain that eternal life depends entirely upon the resurrection from the death to life. Then the man that is now a living soul, (if obedient) will then be made an immortal soul. "Seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. ii. 7. "Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51-52.

In my next I will refer to the importance of Paul's admonition to Timothy in building up the church of God.

P. S.—In the fourth chapter of my article, please read "tithes" instead of this, in my reference to Malachi iii. 8, and in Ezek. xxxiv. 10, it should read, Behold I am against "the" shepherds, instead my shepherds; also, add the word "not" to the quotation of Matthew xvi. It should read, but can ye "not" discern the signs of the times? This correction will give better sense.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

Editor Restitution:

The Times, weekly edition, which I mail with this will, I hope, reach you. Were the extract from the Jewish Chronicle, (p. 18) all the paper contains concerning the Jews, there would be enough indeed to move our hearts: but look at p. 9, you will be horrified enough at the reading of the piece without remarks of mine thereon. Thank God, that Russia cannot hide wholly her atrocities from other nations. The loud voice of the Times tells the fact to the world: and its editorial will be read with gratification. We may think the Royal Family of England will almost feel ashamed of any connection with Russia, which exists in the wife of the Duke of Edinburgh. Yet the Duchess may revolt at the crimes as much as others. Yes, her relationship with the Emperor may be turned to good account on behalf of the persecuted Jews. As I never heard anything in disfavor of the Duchess, let us hope that she especially is grieved at the abominations.

With a feeling of regret I mention that my health being too poor to bear much interest in any matter at the time Brother Weethee began his communications on the Apocalypse—and continuing so—I have not perused his articles: my preference being to go straight through them, if I took hold of them at all. But just now I am better than usual for years past; and can read and write with less stress on the frame—though still feeble truly.

If there is any part of prophetic Scripture which I desire especially to understand, it is the Apocalypse. God grant all his seeking ones increasing light therein.

I saw Brother Hobbs' piece, and read it. I have had thoughts somewhat as his are—still no one as yet appears to write (only in parts) convincingly enough—taking the wonderful book throughout.

There are those in America who think with the Christadelphians of Britain, the Anti-christ is certainly Popery: and if any dispute this view, such persons are in the dark! Nevertheless wisdom and knowledge would not be quite extinct in the world if Christadelphians were all dead. Actually, some few men and women, not "Christadelphians," have light on revealed truth! One of these exclusives confessed to me that he should not shed tears if God did permit some, not of themselves, to enter the kingdom: though he seemed doubtful indeed if he would!

Now, are not some prevalent, conspicuous verities worth looking at?

Here is one. The Pope, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, and other Catholic dignitaries have faithfully—yea, I may almost say, vehemently—declared and testified against the open infidelity of the day. On the other hand the Secularists placard Manchester (and I presume London, Birmingham, etc.) with such startling words as these:—The Great Christ is dead! God dies, but nature remains. The wickedness of God. Character of Jesus—a creature of ignorance, weakness, ambition, malice, etc. A godless life the happiest, and most useful. And more of the same sort. "Discussion invited," is at the bottom of the placards.

With all the rubbish of Romanism, which looks more Anti-christian—these open blasphemers, or the Catholic church?

With all the assumption of Popery, there has never been denial of the Father and the Son, in its history from first to last. But both are denied and blasphemed by Secularists in Britain!

Stirring times are anticipated at the opening of Parliament. Petitions are being prepared in behalf of Bradlaugh. Never in England's history was antagonism to the Bible more manifest: and although many of the clergy would fain not grapple with it, the fearful hold that scepticism and downright Atheism are gaining on the male population, will, despite of preference, challenge the clergy to face the dread facts, as the Bishop of Manchester is now openly doing.

In one of the Guardians I mail you, you may observe further indication of the disposition of the French Government to ignore religion wholly. In Italy also there is a deep hatred of Popery manifest in multitudes of the people.

In short, the spirit of the day is to godlessness more and more in Europe and America. It is now thirty-five years since the late Professor N. N. Whiting said to me, that before the Advent a hatred to God would be displayed in the world more than was at that time apparent. The great man was right there.

Let us ever pray to be accounted worthy to escape the evils and judgments approaching.

"THY KING COMETH."

Earth is in rebellion, and is subject to misrule. In the beginning God gave to man dominion, and appointed him to be the earth's ruler; but the ruler turned to a rebel, and from that time to this the world has been subject to strife and disorders of every kind. Above it hangs "a flying scroll" on which is written the curse of God against sin and disobedience. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against unrighteousness. Instead of peace, earth has turmoil; its governments for ages have been temporary expedients for the restraining of lawlessness and disorder, and the chastisement of sinful people by rulers no less sinful than themselves. Every form of government has been tried, and has failed. The administration of Adam, the first ruler, ended in revolt. The antediluvian period, with its unity of race and uniformity of language, develops such a growth of vice and lust and ungodliness that the deluge was required to prevent the utter corruption of the race. The patriarchal administration of government affords no better results; and from that time down the various forms of human administration—tribal, regal, imperial, ecclesiastical, republican, confederate and communistic—have all proved defective: each contains the elements of its own decay, the materials of its own destruction.

Governments by conquerors are cruel and unsparing, governments established in the principle of hereditary succession fall through the decay of ruling families or the restiveness of misgoverned people; governments based on suffrage are tainted and destroyed by the corruption of the masses who control them; ecclesiastical governments are usually the worst, they being administered by ecclesiastics who have never learned to govern anything; while governments born of communistic ignorance and violence may be regarded as possessing the worst feature of mob rule, and proving destructive alike to the rulers and the ruled.

Meanwhile a crushed and bleeding humanity pours forth cries that can not be hushed, and groans with unutterable longings for the reign of truth and righteousness and peace, where might and right shall be no longer antagonistic; where wisdom shall no longer be linked with wickedness; where injustice shall no longer bear sway, and iniquity shall no longer be enthroned; where God shall be honored, and man, his creature, shall enjoy the blessings and benefits of a control wise, beneficent and kind.

But this cannot occur under the existing state of things. Mankind are, to a great extent, in love with misrule. They hate their friends and love their enemies. They have killed God's prophets, and digged down his altars, and have lent a willing ear to the words of deceivers and wrong-doers. The best men that have lived on earth have often fared the worst. Righteous Abel dies a martyr, while Cain lives to build a city and found a nation. Barabbas, the robber, is released and honored, while Christ, the Savior, is crucified between the thieves. There is no help in man. God from heaven has looked down to see if there were any that were righteous, and has declared that "all have gone out of the way," that "there are none righteous, no not one."

In such a case man's only hope must be in the living God, and it is the messenger of that God who cries in the ears of lost humanity, "Behold, thy King cometh!" Above the tumult of the heathen that rage, and the people that imagine vanity, the Lord most high proclaims, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion," and declares that he will give him the "nations for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." Psa. ii.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Written as a Novel Eighty Years Ago, and Used to Delude the Credulous.

A correspondent writing to the Chicago Times from Steubenville, Ohio, says that in the beautiful valley of Ten Mile, in the southern part of Washington county, Pa., lives Mr. Joseph Miller, Sr., now in his 92nd year, with whom the Times correspondent has just had an interview. Mr. Miller is an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and a man of unimpeachable veracity. In answer to the question if he knew Rev. Solomon Spaulding, the author of the Book of Mormon, he quickly turned, and his face brightened as his mind turned back to the events of the past, and he said with considerable emphasis, "I most certainly do."

"Did you ever read a copy of the work?"

"Yes. Some years ago," he continued, "Rev. J. W. Hamilton, a Presbyterian minister, now living in Steubenville, Ohio, presented me with a copy, which I read carefully."

"Is it your opinion that you ever read or heard read any portion of it before?"

"Yes, I am quite positive that I did."

He then referred to a passage on page 148, which, he said, was so strange that, at the time Mr. Spaulding read it to him from his manuscript, it fixed itself upon his memory, and that he had never forgotten it. He said that about 1812 Spaulding came to Amity, a small village about five miles from his present home, where he kept a hotel; that Spaulding was in delicate health, and that he (Miller) often spent his evenings at his house. While there, upon several occasions, Mr. Spaulding would bring out a large roll of papers, and read select portions of their contents to amuse of evenings. He told me that he wrote it for a novel, and intended to have it published as a means of support for his family. He called it 'The Lost Manuscript Found,' and he said he wrote it to pass away the time when he was feeling unwell. I am confident," said Mr. Miller, "from what I know of Mr. Spaulding's manuscript and the 'Book of Mormon,' that Joseph Smith by some means got possession of the novel and issued it under the name by which it is known to-day."

Mr. Miller said that Spaulding was an enthusiastic archæologist, and that he often indulged himself in the belief that the American continent was at one time peopled by a colony of ancient Israelites, and that his manuscript was only a fictitious history of the race which had built the mounds. Mr. Miller is the only man living at this time who was acquainted with Spaulding—at least, the only person who has any knowledge of the correct origin of the "Book of Mormon" or who ever heard it read from the lips of the author. He said to the correspondent during his stay that, as he neared the grave, with but one breath between him and heaven, he hoped that last breath might carry a message that would prevent people from being led into Mormonism, that most seductive delusion of the devil. "Spaulding was a good man," said Mr. Miller, "and I would not cast a shadow upon his memory, for it never was his intention to create a false religion by anything that he wrote. I attended him through his last illness, and when death called him from earth, I, with my own hands, made the coffin that contained his sleeping ashes. He was buried in the churchyard of the village, and his grave remains unmarked, while the work of his idle hours eighty years ago has grown in the country he dearly loved, until the eyes of the nation are turned with horror upon its magnitude."

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal to the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 16, 1878.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 30, 1877.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested, amply, would, put mildly the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1878.

"I have read it diligently again and again, and it is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—E. M. P., Mo.

"I do and know that I have crystals from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and of the names than one better suited to general information on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom,' advocated in a series of Ten Discourses."—E. # The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 15, 1882. NO. 7.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, an immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING ARE—ITS PROXIMITY.

Delay of the Seventh Trumpet. Apocalypse. Analysis of Chap. xi. Reed. Measurement, the Act. Temple. Altar. Worshippers. Court. Nations. City. Tread Under Foot. Forty-Two Months.

No. 101.

J. P. WEETBEE.

That the seventh trumpet marks the time of the personal advent of Christ, a resurrection, and terrible judgments on the nations, cannot be well questioned. We are, however, more particularly interested with those events which immediately precede its sounding, since they are more intimately connected with our own times. There are various lines of prophetic history shown to John, and by him recorded; synchronical, and terminating in one great epoch. They also span the same, and equal duration. Those chains of events are:

1. The two witnesses.
2. The sun-clad woman.
3. The beasts of Rev. xiii.
4. The harlot of Rev. xvii. and xviii.

Their agencies, as to character and duration, are distinctly noticed in John's survey with his measuring reed.

Peruse any ecclesiastical history: Dupin, Spanheim, Mosheim, Milner, Gregory, and Dr. Howeis, or any other of note. What course does the unity of their subject oblige them to pursue? Their theme; or, their subject is, the Christian Ecclesia-Church—Congregation, or Family, from the days of the apostles to their times. They all go over nearly the same ground, and the same facts are to be narrated, though their reflections and conclusions are wide apart.

What are chief actors: we might say, the chief actors in history, by each author?

The most interesting character, with each author, is, what he is pleased to term:

1. the true church of Christ as distinguished from all heretical sects.
2. Paganism.
3. The apostacy in the Christian church.
4. The Roman empire.

These are their great, and we may say, their only chiefs. After you have made yourselves familiar with their histories, compare them with the Apocalyptic history of John. The one is history in advance; the others are history transpired. No one can escape the conclusion that they all describe the same great transactions.

These synoronical chains of the Apocalypse we propose to follow to the noted judgment era; and we shall do it for the purpose of ascertaining more distinctly our present location. In tracing these synchronical chains, we shall be led into an era of judgment, which first begins at the house of God: the church of the living God. 1 Peter iv. 17.

The first of these synoronic chains is a narration of the prophesyings (teachings) in sackcloth, the death, exposure, resurrection, and ascension of the two witnesses, found in Rev. xi. 1–14. We now submit the character to a critical analysis.

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod." xi. 1.

John is called upon to do a small, but rather difficult job of engineering. To this end he is furnished with a measuring reed. When Jerusalem was being rebuilt by the children of the Babylonian captives, the angel of the Lord carries the measuring line, who directs another angel to read to the prophet some of its future dimensions, "Jerusalem shall be inhabited (as) towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein: For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her." Zech. ii. 4, 5.

When Ezekiel's vision temple is about to be measured by an angel with a line and measuring reed, the prophet is called upon to act as a reporter to the house of Israel: "Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thy heart upon all that I shall show thee." Ezek. xl. 3, 4.

When the Jerusalem, out of heaven, is to be measured, by a celestial engineer with his golden reed, John is simply a recorder of the angel's measurements. Rev. xxi. 15. But the measurement under review has this peculiarity, that the prophet records the data of his own engineering. This fact induces us to infer peculiarities, both in the object, and its measurements. A temple, with its foundation of one precious living stone, with its whole frame-work outlined, and its materials gathering, and being built upon the foundation, looms up before the prophet. Still further, it is a temple of which John is one of its builders and a noted pillar, it is quite proper that he should make and record its measurements. 1 Cor. iii. 9; Rev. iii. 12.

Verse 1. "And one said, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein."

Three things are to be measured: temple, altar, and the worshippers.

"One said, Rise." He was not commanded to go, but simply to rise. He was in the temple; built into the temple, and seated upon its foundation; all that was required could be accomplished by rising, and entering immediately upon the work of survey. His official duties were descriptive; similar to those of David:

"Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell (describe or count) the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell (it) to the generation following." Psa. xlviii. 12, 13.

Rise, John; walk about, and through this living, rising temple; survey the whole and examine all its parts; note if it is sea-worthy. Can it weather ocean tempests, or the earthquake shocks. Follow its history and note well its progressive developments. Measurements may be of heights, and distances; of magnitudes, and other attributes of physical objects; or they may be applied to living structures, and to masses of living intelligent beings. We can survey divisions of land and water; and with equal propriety can we survey their living organisms. We can survey the globe and its population; the earth and its inhabitants. We measure kingdoms by surveying—describing them—their location—chief and subordinate officers; their laws, their institutions, civil and religious; their manners and customs; their resources; and finally trace their history—from their birth through all their varied fortune to their death, or to the present time. Survey includes all these subordinate ideas. Russia, for instance, is the name of a thought, which, at the same time, is both complex and compound. In the word are three inseparable thoughts, forming one thought. When the word is named, three subordinate thoughts wake into being—territory, or location; a people; and a government. With these are associated many subordinates. To survey, therefore, or measure, (which is the same act) the Russians is to name and define the primary thoughts, with its subordinates. The measurements would include the inorganic and the organic Russia; countries, bodies of water, cities, towns, districts; beasts, birds, fishes and man. These surveys would be followed by a history of the empire.

John is commanded to rise, and measure. Both of these acts were understood; the one by its constant repetition; the other by having a measuring reed placed in his hand. I am, thought John, to measure something; what, I am not yet informed: I shall soon learn; for, the one that gave me the measuring reed knows what he wants measured. He rises, and is ready for work as soon as the task is assigned him.

"Measure the temple of God." John must have known the nature of the command, since no explanation is given no question is asked; neither is it called a mystery as are the stars and lamp-stands in Rev. i. 20, which are explained.

Temple of God, is an expression, which, in our times, is such a profound mystery as to require a volume to make it plain. We have, in previous numbers, investigated the temple subject. Let those investigations be carefully examined. It remains that we here present a brief summary of what we there stated.

1. "Temple of the Lord," "temple of God," and "house of God," are synonyms, since they are the names of the same thing. Temple is defined to be, "A house or dwelling of God." Wherever God dwells, is his dwelling house, or temple: whether in the universe; in any part of the earth; or in any inorganic or organic structure: such as the tabernacle made after the pattern of God's first temple—the universe; Solomon's temple and its successors; or the living beings set apart for his service, and occupied by his Spirit.

John could not have understood by the expression, the temple of God, any temple constructed by man, or to be constructed by him, at some future time; such as the temple built by Solomon; or the once commenced and finished by Zerubbabel, and rebuilt and beautified by Herod the Great. That, called Herod's temple, was destroyed by the Romans, A. D. 70. John was ordered to measure the temple of God A. D. 96—twenty-six years after the destruction of the Herodian temple. The apostles, after the death of Christ, never called that structure God's temple, since God had abandoned it.

The temple of the Lord is to be built by the Branch, Christ, as declared by the interpreting angel (Gabriel) to Zechariah.

"Behold the man whose name (is) The Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord. Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne." Zech. vi. 12, 13.

Where is the evidence that Christ has ever built a temple out of inorganic materials? Is there any Scripture to authorize us to say that he ever will erect such a temple?

It is true that he went to prepare a place; but, in the capital of that new earth, John said, "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the temple of it." Rev. xxi. 22.

Any temple which the Jews might erect in Jerusalem would not be the temple of the Lord, since the Branch would not be its builder. The proposition we state as follows:

The Branch is Christ the Messiah; but the Branch shall build the temple of the Lord; consequently, Christ the Messiah shall build the temple of the Lord.

Again: a temple or house, built by any other person or persons, is not the temple of God; but a temple erected by the Jews, would be built by other persons; therefore, it would not be the temple of God; for the Jews are not Christ.

Having stated what John could not have understood to be the temple of God: what temple did he consider that he was commanded to measure?

1. John knew that Christ was to build the temple of God, since he must have been familiar with Zech. vi. 12, 13.

2. John knew that the temple of God was then in existence, although it was not finished.

This we propose to demonstrate from the testimony of inspiration. This proposition is controverted. We have before us these words from the editor of the Christian Chilliast:

"In no other city than Jerusalem could a temple be built, in this age, to which the title 'temple of God' would properly apply. This temple that John measures was not a reality in A. D. 96, for at that time no temple existed; for, twenty-six years before, the Romans, under Titus, destroyed the last one, since which no other has been built—hence it is evident that the 'temple of God,' viewed by the prophet, is among 'the things which must shortly come to pass.' A temple (literal) will be built, or the prophecy will be proven—a lie."

It would have been better, perhaps, if our brother had said, "Or I am mistaken." "To err, (in opinion) is human."

Ever since the unholy tread of the Archtempter—the great Anti-christ, the presiding chief of all Anti-christs, desecrated the lovely Eden temple, God has purposed to erect, through his Son, a living temple from whose courts Satan shall be forever excluded. This Divine thought radiates from every part of inspiration. Each century since the fall has furnished material for the living structure.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

Or the Principle of Life in Man and Beast.—No. 3.

H. H. HALL.

"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward?"

The great error of the orthodox church, so-called, upon the nature of man, is that some have failed to see that he is a unit being, and suppose him to be a dual being, whilst others affirm him to be an immortal being inhabiting the body—which they say has no life of itself—as the bird inhabits the cage. And Mr. Morris expresses the latter idea when he further says:

"As he, therefore, who occupies the house is more honorable than the house, so this spirit of man is of a far nobler nature, and presents infinitely loftier displays of creative wisdom and power, than the body which it inhabits."

It is certainly very remarkable, if what Mr. M. and others of his class say is true, that we do not find in the Bible something about the creation and existence of such a wonderful, etherial, immaterial, immortal being which has thus taxed an "infinitely loftier display of creative wisdom and power than the body which it inhabits." But not one word, by implication even, from Genesis to Revelation, in regard to such a living being inhabiting "the clay tenement."

From whence, then, comes this knowledge that is above and beyond what is written in the Scriptures of truth?

I answer, from the heathen. Herodotus, the most ancient historian whose works have come down to us, testifies as follows:

"They (the Egyptians) are the first of mankind who have defended the immortality of the soul."

It is said this writer lived at least in B. C. 400, and that his history of the Egyptians extends as far back as B. C. 700. Bunsen, in his book on Egypt, says:

"The Egyptians were the first who taught the doctrine of the immortality of the soul—a fact mentioned by all writers, from Herodotus to Aristotle."

The question now arises, how are we to harmonize the inspired declaration of St. Paul in 2 Tim. i. 10, that Christ brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, with the uncontrovertible evidence of standard history that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul was brought to light in Egypt at least 700 years before Christ and his gospel? One of two things is absolutely certain, either Paul was mistaken in his statement, or the immortality taught by the Egyptians, heathen philosophers, papists, and by the orthodox church, and believed in by the masses, is very far different from that which was taught by Christ and his apostles.

Let us, then, compare and ascertain, if possible, what difference there is, if any, between the theory of the Egyptians on this point, and the doctrine of the gospel. For if we can show, as I think we can, that the former is one, and the latter another and altogether different theory, the declaration of the great apostle to the Gentiles is not invalidated, and we must receive, without the glimmer of a doubt, his inspired testimony that life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel, and not through the heathen or heathen philosophers.

1. What, then, was the Egyptian idea of immortality? Herodotus tells us that "they (the Egyptians) believe that on the dissolution of the body, the soul immediately enters some other animal;" and that, "If a house was on fire, the father of a family would take more pains to save his cats than his wife and children."

While it is a fact that they believed in the transmigration of the soul—the souls of men at death passed into dogs, cats, rats and crocodiles which were made sacred objects of worship on this account, it is also a fact that the primary element of their theory of immortality was, that the soul survived the stroke of death. It is a very easy matter to recognize the similarity that exists between this ancient Egyptian doctrine and the commonly received doctrine of immortal-soulism. Their is, however, only this difference is apparent, that whilst the Egyptians believed the soul, at the death of the body, passed into some other animal, we have been taught to believe by papist and Protestant theologians that it goes directly to a heaven of happiness, or a hell of torment. And let me here say that the Bible teaches the former just as clearly as the latter, for there is not one word in all the Scriptures about "immortal souls" going to heaven or hell at death.

It is stated that The American Tract Society publish a tract giving the facsimile of a picture over an Egyptian tomb (I now remember having seen the tract) which represents the dead body of a man lying on a couch, while hovering over it is a small figure with a human face and body and wings of a fowl, representing the immortal soul just escaped from the body, thus clearly illustrating the character of that immortality which the Egyptians were the first of mankind to defend.

It would seem from this that the A. T. S. has thus endorsed this heathen notion of immortality. But

2. Let us now examine the character of the "life and immortality" brought to light by Christ through the gospel. If it be true, as alleged, that any part of man survives the stroke of death, we shall expect to find it definitely so stated; but if, on the contrary, immortality is "the gift of God," to be conferred on man at the resurrection, we shall find it explicitly so stated in the Scriptures of truth. Then unto the Scriptures we go, and if their testimony be not satisfactory, it is because there is no light in them on this subject.

First let me say, if it be true, as I shall show, that Christ is the great Life-Giver of the world, it will most certainly follow that man does not possess natural immortality as claimed by theologians. And again, if it be found that man has to do something in order to obtain eternal life, it follows again that, if the condition is not complied with, the soul not believing will certainly perish.

Christ says: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish (apollumi, to be destroyed, to come to naught,—Greenfield; to nothing, to cease to have existence,—Grimshaw), but have eternal life," (zoee aionion, endless animated existence). "I am the bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven that a man may eat thereof, and not die (the second death). I am the living bread.... if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life (zoee, life, i. e. animated existence, or the state of being alive,—Greenfield; not happiness, but for the life) of the world." John vi. 48–52.

Would Christ have uttered the above language showing most explicitly that he, and he alone is the only source of eternal life or immortality; and that in order to "live forever" man must eat his flesh, which is the bread that came down from heaven, and which he gave for the life of the world, if all men—those who are out of Christ as well as those who are in Christ—are in possession, as claimed, of this precious boon of immortality? No indeed, never.

Mark these words of Christ—"If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." But if a man do not thus eat, then what? will he also "live for ever?" If he will, as most of the Christian world affirm, then I ask in the name of our common Master, where is the force, the significance, or the sense of this most precious promise of Christ? But Christ further says, v. 54, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

Here the gift of eternal life is predicated of the resurrection at the last day. We shall see this more clearly, perhaps, by a reference to the conversation between Jesus and Martha concerning the death of her brother Lazarus. "Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Here was a glorious opportunity for Jesus to reveal to the world the true state of the dead, and to comfort Martha with the assurance, if it were true, that her brother was not really dead, but was still alive, and had gone to heaven where he was singing praises to God. Although our ears have been saluted with this kind of comfort upon funeral occasions all our life time, we receive no such words of comfort from him who "spake as never man spake." But here are the words of comfort given to Martha: "Jesus said unto her, Thy brother shall rise again."

Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (be raised); and whosoever liveth (at the last day) and believeth in me shall never die, but shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump. If Christ, then, is the resurrection and the life, the only source of the future life, and the resurrection is necessary in order to a future life, all of which Christ has here most clearly taught, there can be no truth in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

But the resurrection of Lazarus makes it still more evident that the doctrine of a spirit entity in man is nothing but a myth.

Let us look at it. That Lazarus had died as others die cannot be doubted, for Jesus had "said unto them (his disciples) plainly, Lazarus is dead." And he had been dead four days when Jesus came to the grave. But that Lazarus, or the "spirit" or "immortal mind" of Lazarus had been judged and received into heaven according to the popular belief, and had been recalled by Jesus from that "happy abode," does not appear by the least intimation in any of the circumstances connected with his resurrection. But on the contrary, after the stone was taken away, "he (Jesus) cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. And he that was dead (not a living Lazarus from heaven, but a dead Lazarus from the grave) came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes," and "Jesus said, Loose him and let him go."

Again, what a glorious opportunity to learn from Lazarus all about his happy experiences amid the glories of the heavenly world—something about meeting the old patriarch Jacob who, when he supposed Joseph had been slain by some wild beast and refused to be comforted, said, "For I shall go down into sheol—hell—grave unto my son mourning;" and something about David, the sweet singer of Israel, who said, "The dead praise not the Lord," and of whom Peter wrote saying he was "both dead and buried," and had "not ascended into heaven;" but not even an intimation from Lazarus after his resurrection, as we can learn, that he went to heaven.

But the great apostle of the Gentiles settles this whole question of immortality, as to whether it is a natural endowment of the soul as claimed, or is a gift of God, bestowed on man in the future. He not only gives us the true source of immortality, but tells us upon whom and when it is to be conferred.

He says, 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16, "Which in his times he (Christ) shall show the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath (athanasian, deathlessness) immortality."

If, then, God is the only being possessing immortality, and all created beings are dependant upon him for this precious boon; and that it is never conferred upon a being when created in very evident from the fact that even the angels of heaven did not possess it, for many of them, as Jude says, "kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation," and are "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day," when we are assured they will be destroyed by the "everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Christ) also himself took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had power of death, that is, the devil." Heb. ii. 14.

"And they (wicked with the devil leading) went up on the breadth of the earth, and encompassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured (consumed, annihilated) them." Rev. xx. 9.

But Paul in speaking of the righteous judment of God "who will render to every man according to his deeds," further says, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." And this immortality, so far from being possessed in this state of existence, is to be put on at the resurrection of the last trump. "For the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (Christians) shall be changed, for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished"—have ceased to exist, Grimshaw; have come to nothing, Greenfield.

What, Paul! do you mean to assert that if there be no resurrection of the dead saints there will be no future life for them?

"If the dead rise not, then they who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus what benefit to me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Why Paul, if the popular theory be correct it would be of great advantage—your immortal soul can't die; and when it is separated from its cage it will fly up to God and heaven, "where there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand where are pleasures forevermore." You certainly must have forgotten all about these immaterial, indissoluble, indestructible spirits in heaven, for which those saints who are asleep in Jesus were formed to dwell in!

No, says Paul. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things (dia) through the body (not in a disembodied state), according to what he hath done good or bad." 2 Cor. v. 10. I write this verse—omitting the word "done" supplied by the translators, and which makes nonsense of it—as it stands in the original. For how can we receive at the judgment seat "the things done in the body." This verse has reference to reward and punishment; and the apostle teaches here as elsewhere that we are to receive our reward or punishment "through the body" at the resurrection. Christ says: "For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then (not before) shall he reward every man according to his works." Peter also says: "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Paul too, says: "And when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Of "the unjust" Peter says they "shall be reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished." These Scriptures, with many others that might be quoted, settle the question so definitely that men are neither rewarded or punished until after the resurrection and judgment, that any attempt to prove to the contrary by other passages only serves to make thinking men believe that the Scriptures are contradictory in their enunciations, and are, therefore, unworthy of credence. And that no one goes to heaven at death is settled beyond all controversy by the explicit words of Christ (if Christians would believe them) John iii. 13, where he says: "And no one (oudeis) has ascended into heaven, except the Son of Man who descended from heaven."

In view of this investigation thus far, and in the light of the Scriptures already quoted, I ask in the name of my Master, what becomes of "immortal-soul" happiness in heaven and soul-torment in hell before the resurrection and judgment? And as to "the intermediate state," the words of the inspired king of Israel ring out so loud and clear there ought not to be any doubt of their true import. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in (sheol—hades—hell) the grave whither thou goest."

THE RESTITUTION.

B. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 15, 1881.

SOME communications are of necessity deferred to future numbers.

No room for lengthy editorials. Paper full. All right. Let one go to the waste basket.

THE first number of Watchman's Alarm, a new monthly published by I. K. Lombard, Holland, Vt., is received. Terms 50 cents a year. Able articles on the Millennial Reign of Christ promises a fair hearing.

Our Rest for February is among the papers received this week. This journal is specially interesting to us for its articles on the scientific and religious features of the Great Pyramid. If its stupendous magnitude placed it among the wonders of the world, its mysterious symbolizations make it a marvel of admiration in these last days.

THE TIME WHEN THE LORD WILL COME TO RAISE HIS SAINTS.

J. CAMERON.

A great deal of speculation has been indulged in as to the exact time of our Lord's second coming. Dates have been calculated and signs discovered with the view of determining when this event should take place. For many years the period 1864-66 was looked forward to as the nearest approach to it. Then again 1843 or 1847 was fixed upon by Edwin Irving and others, the most noted of whom, judging by the success of his labors in making proselytes to his opinion, was Mr. Wm. Miller, of New York state. In 1833 Mr. Miller promulgated this belief, in a work of 64 pages, entitled—"Evidences from Scripture and History of the Second Coming of Christ about the year 1843, and of his personal reign of 1000 years." About nine years later he said—"I am fully convinced that some time between March 21, 1843, and March 21, 1844, according to the Jewish mode of computation of time, Christ will come and bring all his saints with him."

A more recent as well as a more exact date was fixed by Mr. Wm. Thurman, editor of The Time Appointed, United States. He declared on the authority of Scripture and astronomy "that our Savior will return on the 19th of April, 1875, at midnight." So confident were Mr. Thurman and his followers of the accuracy of this calculation, that they held a meeting on the night mentioned, and were doomed to a severe disappointment.

To show the diversity of opinion which can be honestly entertained on such a subject, it may be mentioned that about the same time Mr. E. Hine, editor of Life from the Dead, stated publicly in his paper that "before there could be the slightest possibility of the second advent taking place," a series of events must come to pass "which must consume at least a hundred years, or, far more likely, for several reasons, nearly two hundred and fifty."

The data upon which such diverse conclusions are based are professedly derived from the Bible, and are worthy of closer consideration than they obtain. Without, however, referring specially to the reasonings of the writers named, I would beg to draw attention to certain facts which appear to me to enter deeply into the subject, and which set the matter before us in its true scriptural position—CERTAIN as to the event, but UNCERTAIN as to the time.

It should not be surprising that those who have a firm faith in the personal reign of Christ upon the earth, and feel a deep interest in the stupendous events and blessed results connected with his coming and kingdom, should seek by all proper means to ascertain as nearly as possible the time of that coming. For this purpose various periods of time and certain sign-events have long been diligently studied, and many conflicting conclusions arrived at.

Two principles—the symbolical and the literal—have obtained in this work; but the purpose of the present paper does not require that either of these be specially referred to. I simply wish to look at the various periods and signs in relation to the events to which they point, in order to ascertain whether they afford any information as to the time of the Lord's coming, or to the resurrection of the dead in Christ—two events which are very closely related.

It is very evident that certain events connected with the glorious appearing of Christ, are pointed out by the lapse of certain periods of time. That appearing is also more or less connected with the resurrection of the dead in Christ. But none of the periods alluded to expressly point to the resurrection itself as taking place at any given period. So far as they indicate any event belonging to the introduction of the coming age, they invariably stretch beyond the resurrection. Let us briefly glance at the periods referred to.

1. The "seven times" thrice mentioned in Lev. xxvi., intimating the punishment of Israel, are understood by many to signify 2,520 years, and to extend to Israel's final restoration. But is this not to be accomplished only after the glorious appearing of Christ with his saints, Zech. xiv. 5, and, consequently, after the resurrection?

2. The "seven times" spoken of in Dan. iv., supposed to signify 2,520 years, and to refer to the duration of the dominion of Babylon, as represented by the various powers which succeeded the dynasty of Nebuchadnezzar. This period is supposed to extend even beyond that referred to in paragraph 1, and therefore, also, terminates subsequently to the resurrection.

3. The three and a half times in Dan. vii. denote the period during which the saints are given into the hand of the power represented by the little horn, and that is stated to be "until the judgment shall sit, and they (the saints) shall take away his dominion." This, again, must be beyond the resurrection; because the saints are to have no power against their enemies during their present mortal condition.

4. The 2,300 evening-mornings in Dan. viii. 14, extend to the cleansing of the sanctuary. There can hardly be a doubt that this event shall take place after the glorious appearing of Christ, and consequently after the resurrection.

5. The last week of the seventy in Dan. ix., if still future, as some think, is to extend to the pouring out of that determined upon the desolator. As this must be effected by Christ and his saints after their glorious manifestation it also must be after the resurrection.

6. The three and a half times in Dan. xii. extends to the end of the wonders which had been made known to Daniel. Of these wonders, one is the awaking of "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth;" and another is, the "wise shining as the brightness of the firmament." And so there can be no doubt that this period extends beyond the resurrection.

7. The 1,335 days of the same chapter terminate with Daniel standing in his lot (or portion). The resurrection and award of honors must, therefore, have previously taken place: for the portion or inheritance of Daniel could not be possessed by him till after the resurrection.

8. The 42 months in Rev. xi. refer to the treading—under-foot of the Holy City, which, if it be an event still future, and relating to the period of the advent, must terminate after the glorious appearing.

9. The 1,350 days in Rev. xi. refer to the prophesying of the two witnesses in sackcloth; but as the beast makes war against them after their testimony is finished, this period, although it should expire before the resurrection, has no certain bearing on the date of that event.

10. The 1,260 days and three and a half times in Rev. xii. 6, 14, both refer to the "feeding of the woman in the wilderness." Whatever the precise meaning of this, it is very evident that it has no express bearing on the date of the resurrection.

11. The 42 months in Rev. xiii. 5, is the period during which the beast is to continue, or to make war. From chap. xix. this is seen to run on to the time when Christ, as the rider on the white horse, and his army, appear in battle array, and when the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies make war against him that sat on the horse. This shows clearly that the 42 months extend beyond the glorious appearing.

These are all the prophetic periods that seem to require notice. Those of them that have any distinct bearing on the events connected with the advent extend not only BEYOND the resurrection, but even beyond the glorious appearing itself—and especially as are spoken of in paragraphs 8, 4, 5, 7, and 11.

But the circumstances of the advent itself show us that we have no certain knowledge of its exact date. Thus, it is distinctly declared, that when Christ appears in glory, the saints appear with him. Jude quotes the prophecy of Enoch—"Behold the Lord cometh with myriads of his saints." Paul referring to the same event says: "The coming of the Lord with all his saints," 1 Thess. iii. 13, and Zechariah xiv: "The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee." The condition of the saints when they thus come with Christ shall be, identical with that of their Lord—"fashioned like unto his glorious body." "When he shall appear we shall be like him."

But this public appearing of Christ "with his saints," fashioned like his glorious body, must of necessity be preceded by the resurrection of those who shall be dead, and by the change of such as shall be alive. The resurrection and change take place in connection with the coming of Christ, as is distinctly intimated in 1 Thess. iv. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout.... And the dead in Christ shall rise first.... Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." The interval between this meeting, and the public coming of Christ with his saints may be of short or long duration, but an interval undoubtedly there is. And unless that interval can be infinitesimally reduced or computed to a nicety, which I very much question, there is no possibility of pre-calculating the date of the resurrection from the termination of the prophetic periods.

Take, for example, period No. 11, where the duration of the power of the beast extends to his destruction. That destruction takes place after he has contended in open war with Christ and his saints. The events, therefore, which intervene between the resurrection of the saints and the close of the period of the beast are these—namely, the appearing before the judgment seat; the apportionment of honors; the coming forth in visible manifestation to the world; and the contest, short or long, which ends in the beast's destruction.

It would appear that there is a stage in the advent at which the dead in Christ are raised and the living changed; and that an interval takes place between it and the public manifestation of Christ and his saints in power and glory. It seems to me that this accounts, so far, for Paul's telling the Thessalonians, "Of the times and the seasons ye have no need that I write unto you; for yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." They had "perfect knowledge," not of "the times and the seasons," but of the unexpectedness of the day of the Lord, as well as its absolute certainty. They were, however, not in darkness; for "knowing perfectly" that the event should occur, and that without warning, they were all the more required to "watch and be sober," as the apostle exhorts them. And so did the Lord himself teach: "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

It is thus evident that, so far as the dates are concerned, the Lord might have come to raise the dead not only on the 19th of April, 1875, but at any time prior to that, even from the days of the apostles. Unless there be a known, or knowable, interval between the saints meeting the Lord in the air, and their visible appearing with him, who shall say that such interval may not be prolonged beyond what is generally supposed?

On the other hand, such events as the restoration of Israel, referred to by Mr. Hine, cannot be shown to take place before the visible coming of the Lord to Zion. There is nothing here therefore to delay the advent for a single day, far less for two hundred and fifty years.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

Editor Restitution:

In a letter I recently sent I mentioned having looked over Brother Hobbs' piece. It is not to comment that I write just now. Facts are said to be stubborn; they are also invincible. It is remarkable that Professor Whiting, who avowed his faith in the advent in 1843, directly opposed the 1844 movement, and to the time of his death he viewed no subsequent date reliable.

Dates have been published to the world by many Adventists and others since 1844. All have failed. Dr. Thomas and other prominent and learned men have failed both in times and the issues of wars; no none had the wisdom and understanding they thought they possessed. We feel sadness in disappointments, and the future views are not gladdening to such as are hoping for deliverance speedily. However, truth alone will stand. Let us patiently endure—if we are only instrumental in turning some to righteousness, our disappointments result in joy.

The darkening of the sun in the United States more than a hundred years since must now be given up by all as a sign of the advent in that generation. So none of us know "how long." Psa. lxxiv. But as John prayed Come quickly, let us still pray, and wait and watch.

The short statement purporting to be the account of the damage done at Warsaw is hard enough; yet we may view the matter really worse than reported. Russian authority is not trustworthy in such statements. You will see by another slip that Russia is displeased at the publication by The Times of the atrocities; and is jealous of interference. Abominable Russia!

Germany too has disgraced herself; but, of course, her civilization would not admit of proceedings as in Russia. There is a meaning in this outburst of hatred to the Jews: may their day of deliverance soon arrive!

What I have cut out of the London Globe, on Sir Moses Montefiore, will interest you; as also that from the Warrington Guardian, on the Assyrian discoveries; and the piece "With the Salvation Army at Winsford." The "Salvationists" have been roughly handled in some parts; but they are undaunted, and are telling on the lower classes, as Methodists did a century ago. Some of us have erred in our views of the operations of zealous men and women. Is not making roughs, honest; drunkards, sober; and filthy people clean, good work? We and the Christadelphians are not affecting the masses, but minutely indeed. Those who fear God's name are to be rewarded as well as prophets and saints. Rev. xi. 18. May God set us right where we are wrong. Let us ponder on the first part of Matt. vii.

H. HEYES.

ARE YOU IN EARNEST?

Are you in earnest who refuse to meet the friends of Jesus at the house of prayer?—in earnest when by your careless indifference, you hinder others from meeting together?

Are you in earnest who say, "There is no use in having preaching," that it does no good?—in earnest, when by getting in the way of others, you are causing the work to stand still?

Are you in earnest, when instead of "seeking first the kingdom," you are seeking first to look well in the eyes of your neighbors, seeking first to prosper in your business, seeking first to supply all your wants, whether real or imaginary—seeking first to fill the cup of your pleasures?

In earnest, when all your time, all your means, is used for self, when you have not a cent, not a word for the cause of truth?

Do you mean it when you say so? You are surely deceiving yourselves if you do. We cannot live in the direct violation of God's commands and yet be in earnest. It is by God's appointment that his followers are to meet together and exhort one another. It is by his appointment that preaching must be done. We have only to do his commands, the fruit will come in his own good time. We have been called to work for him. Each one of us has a post to guard. Be watchful lest the enemy take the ground.

Be in earnest.

INSURRECTION IN ARABIA.

ATHENS, Feb. 6.—The insurrection in Yemen, Arabia, is gaining ground. Numbers of Arabs have deserted the Turkish standard. The insurgents are in possession of the principal interior towns and in positions from which they can only be dislodged by a large force.

A RELIGIOUS WAR.

The insurgents in Yemen, Arabia, have proclaimed a descendant of the Prophet as the Caliph.

A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Daily Telegraph says: The murder of the Jewish family of six persons near Novidvor was committed by a body of peasants without the smallest provocation.

THE REVOLT INCREASING.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—A dispatch from Pdene says the Herzegovinians have established a Provisional Government. The revolt is increasing. Sixty Mork houses have been destroyed.

THE SUFFERINGS OF RUSSIAN JEWS.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The Lord Mayor's Jewish Relief Fund now amounts to £43,000. The widow of Baron James Rothschild subscribed £1,200. A special grant from the fund of £6,000 has been made to assist 873 refugees who are now journeying from Hamburg to Liverpool en route to America.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 10.—A Jewish refugee who has arrived here from Kief says he recently saw a number of Jewish maidens stripped naked and flogged through the town. The police refused to interfere. A soldier from Nikolaief says his regiment was not allowed to suppress riots against the Jews. Many women with infants appear to have endured great suffering.

VIENNA, Feb. 12.—General Calkos, of the Austrian army, has been placed on the retired list for executing 180 Bosnian insurgents. The Government had directed that only the leaders of the insurrection should be executed. Three of the insurgents were hanged yesterday.

Two thousand and thirty-nine actual shipwrecks occurred throughout the world last year, and the estimated value of property lost was $1,400,000,000. As compared with the previous year, there was an increase of 359 in the number of wrecks, and an increase of about $500,000,000 in the value of property lost. One hundred vessels sank through collision, and 4,134 person perished. This includes officers, crews, and passengers in all parts of the world, and is considerably in excess of the number reported during the previous year.

SELECTIONS SENT BY BROTHER H. REYES.

[The following notes and longer articles are the ones alluded to in Brother Heyes' letter. We gave something last week on the discoveries at Bagdad, but as the one appended is more in the language of the discoverer, Mr. Rassam, we give it a place. Something extraordinary may be educed from these inscriptions when interpreted by competent scholars. Stones and ruins are crying out against the blind infidelity of these last days.—ED.]

The Jewish Question in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 19.—An inspired article in the Novoe Vremjia replies to the Times' comment on the Jewish question in Russia, and says that the object of the Times is to excite English public opinion against Russia and provoke intervention. The Jewish question is, however, the Novoe Vremjia declares, one absolutely of internal order, in which no foreign interference can be permitted.

The Warsaw Riots.

A statement purporting to give an account of the damage done during the recent Warsaw riots shows that there were 2,011 families ruined, numbering about 10,000 persons. They include 246 publicans, 231 tobacconists and other retail shopkeepers, 198 eating-house keepers and others engaged in the supply of refreshments, 316 workmen, and 434 employers of labor. During the riots there were wrecked 292 liquor shops, 603 eating-houses, warehouses, and synagogues, and 393 private houses, all the property of Jews.

Baghdad.

During a discussion which took place on a paper, read at the Victoria Institute by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins, on Biblical proper names, Mr. Rassam, the well-known discoverer of Assyrian relics, who had been called upon to address the meeting, made the following statement in reference to his recent researches in the neighborhood of Baghdad. He said:

Mr. Tomkins has alluded to the discoveries I have been enabled to make among the ancient cities of the East. I am sorry I cannot at present say much about what I have recently been doing, or I should have given the account elsewhere. Indeed, with one exception, I have not very much to tell you since the lecture I delivered here two years ago. I will however, offer you a brief statement of what I have lately discovered. In March last I went out again to the East, as you know I am always doing, for the purpose of finding out the old cities which lie buried there. As I was journeying on one occasion in pursuit of this object, I met with an Arab who told me that he knew of an old ruined city, the remains of which were to be found within five hours of Bagdad—that is to say, taking the computation at three miles an hour, the place he knew of was fifteen miles from Bagdad. As I am one who never refuses to act on any information likely to lead to some practical result, I said I would go with him to the place indicated. I therefore accompanied him; and as we were travelling along the route pointed out by the Arab, we came at a distance of four hours journeying upon an old ruin that I had never seen before—a ruin of great magnitude—so large, indeed, that it must be about three miles in circumference. I at first thought that this was the place of which my guide had spoken, and I said to him, "Oh! is this the place?" He replied, "No; that is not the place I told you of, it is further on." Then I said, "What is this place?" He answered, "I do not know." However, I made up my mind that I would certainly explore it when I came back. We consequently went onwards, and at last the Arab showed me a most wonderful ruin. I set to work and excavated there, but I found nothing of any antiquarian value. I afterwards went back to the place I had first seen and commenced a thorough search there. The result was that after digging for four days we came upon the top of some walls. This induced us to persevere with increased ardor, and we soon found that we had come upon an enormous building, in which we began to find inscriptions. I may here say that I am not an Assyrian reader. I am a discoverer of Assyrian relics, which I send to the British Museum, where those who have made Assyriology a study interpret the inscriptions I find. We first of all discovered four rooms, and then came upon a fifth. They were what I should call generally the Assyrian or Babylonian order, and paved with bricks or stones; but the fifth room was paved with asphalte, the discovery of which brought to my mind Solomon's saying—"There is nothing new under the sun." Previous to this I had always thought that asphalte was a modern invention. Singular as this discovery was, we dug through the asphalte, and in a short time we were rewarded by coming upon a coffer on which we found inscriptions. From this coffer we took two cylinders. These were covered with inscriptions, which are supposed to be the most important records of the oldest city in the world, founded, as historians tell us, by Noah after the Deluge, and where, according to tradition, Noah buried the antediluvian records. [Cheers]. Well, I had to come home; but I left some workmen continuing the operations at the spot, and I have ascertained that they have found after a few days' more digging, that in one of the rooms there was a channel, and inside that channel there were records inscribed on nearly ten thousand tablets. [Cheers.] These tablets are all coming to England, but we cannot of course as yet say what they contain. They may contain something of even greater value than anything that has hitherto been discovered in the course of our Eastern researches. It may be, indeed, that we shall really find on them the antediluvian records of which I have spoken. After I have been out there again I shall be happy to give you further information as to this interesting discovery on my return. I hope to be going out in another month, and then I trust I shall be able to make still further advances on what we have already discovered. [Cheers.]

Sir Moses Montefiore.

Sir Moses Montefiore (says a writer in Truth) is among the most interesting and venerable of existing British institutions. He was born the 24th of October, 1784—that is, in the first year of Pitt's long Premiership, while Canning still learned "repetition" at Eaton, before Wellington had entered the army or Byron had seen the light, while Frederick the Great still reigned over Prussia, and Catharine II. wielded the sceptre of the Czars, and while the French Revolution was yet a thing of the future, though dimly foreseen by a few shrewd observers. It is wonderful to think of the men with whom Sir Moses might have conversed, and of the historical events concerning which he might be able to relate the testimony of eye-witnesses. As a child he might have seen Wesley, Reynolds, Mansfield, Burke, Burns, Horace Walpole—to take at random a few names of celebrities who disappeared from this earth in the last decade of the eighteenth century. He might have been a spectator of the execution of Louis XVI. Indeed, if one supposes him to have traveled in boyhood, there is no end to the list of notable men on whom he might have been privileged to gaze. William Molmoth, the translator, who died in 1799, at the age of 83, might have told the lad (already old enough to understand) anecdotes about the South Sea Bubble, the insurrection of 1745, the change of the calendar and the outcry at the loss of the eleven days. Molmoth lived in times when women were occasionally burned alive and men drawn and quartered. Four lives like that of Sir Moses Montefiore take us back, beyond the Reformation, into the reigns of Henry VII., Isabella the Catholic, and Alexander VI. Three more, and we are among the contemporaries of Isaac of York and Sir Brian de Bois-Guilbert; from whom, moreover recent occurrences in Germany and Russia seem to show that we are not quite so far removed in spirit as could be wished. Sir Moses himself declares that religious intolerance is scarcely understood out of England; which proves that, if a Jew before all things, the Baronet is certainly, in the next place, an Englishman, and a thoroughgoing one. On the other hand, the seniority of his birth has reason to be proud of him. His life may, roughly speaking, be divided into two parts. During the first he was making money; during the second he has been giving it away. The Jews are proverbially generous with their money—no matter how they have come by it; but few persons are aware of the numerous claims which a wealthy Jew, as such, must be prepared to satisfy. The thrift of the race, as Mr. Dickens observes, has been much overrated. "Fond of display, extravagant in their habits, and given over to good living, the Jews are often poor." Now, though Jews cheerfully contribute to Christian charities, Christians have been in no hurry to return the compliment; and the wealthy members of the Hebrew community are pretty severely taxed in consequence. Sir Moses, like his old friend, Lord Beaconsfield, belongs to the Sephardim branch of the Israelitish family. In fact, he is a kind of unofficial head of the English Sephardim, exercising the authority which must fall to high character and great wealth. And yet, so numerous and splendid have been his acts of benevolence, that he is probably a poorer man now than he was forty years ago. As Sir Moses is the first of his faith who has borne the Ulster hand, so he was the first to receive the accolade. The Queen dubbed him a Knight on the occasion of her first state visit to the City, in 1837, when she went to dine with the new Lord Mayor (Sir John Cowan), and the Sheriffs, of whom Sir Moses was one. Only two years before, the first Jew Sheriff of London had been elected in the person of Mr. David Salomons, when Lord Melbourne succeeded in passing an Act of Parliament to enable him to serve. Sir Moses Montefiore is at least as well known abroad as in England. When he was a little younger, any Continental Government that worried the Jews had to reckon with him, and found that he was not to be trifled with. This mild-mannered, yet rather positive, Hebrew seemed always to have the English Cabinet behind him—the Chancellor of the Exchequer being possibly a link to connect the interests of Sir Moses with the action of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. No amateur diplomatist ever effected so much for the cause he had at heart. Pius IX. was the only Sovereign who ever defied Sir Moses—an act of courage the more astonishing, in that the latter was backed by the Governments at once of France and of Great Britain. The moral of the Mortara case is contained in one or two dry dates. On the 28th of April, 1859, Cardinal Antonelli announced the final decision of the Vatican, justifying the course taken by the Archbishop of Bologna, and refusing all redress; on the 7th of September following, the Assembly at Bologna voted for annexation to Piedmont. Post hoc is not, one grants, the necessary equivalent of propter hoc. But it is worth bearing in mind that "the Jew may govern the money market, and the money market may govern the world."

Book Notices.

THE FLORAL GUIDE.—This beautiful annual has come to hand. It is a large and elegantly illustrated pamphlet of more than 125 pages. In which hundreds of flowers and flowering plants are accurately delineated and described. The work also contains a full catalogue of all the vegetable seeds used in gardens and farms. To all who want either flower or garden seeds of first years' growth, reliable and true to name, we can recommend this pamphlet and its publisher, as we speak from experience. For the annual send ten cents to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

A CHART OF HISTORY.—This is a sheet of 22x66 inches, intended to show the principle events affecting the Church of God from B. C. 700 to A. D. 1903. The author aims to prove that the rise and fall of empires, nations, and systems of religion, have all occurred according to the periods of time given in Daniel and Revelation; and that the whole structure of history is based upon and arranged in accordance with the events of the life of Christ and the institution of Christianity. 1866 is indicated by the termination of the coincident periods, and 1873 by the termination of 45 periods. The price of the Chart, on thick paper and mounted is 50 cts. On thin paper unmounted 10 cts. Address the publisher John Collom, Golden, Jefferson county, Colorado.

We have just received the LIFE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT, published by the Useful Knowledge Publishing Company. It is from the pen of Macaulay, well known as an author of great literary power and brilliancy. It is a volume of 127 pages, and is sold at the low price of 25 cts., by mail in handsome cloth binding. Address Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, 167 William street, New York City.

This company also advertises the following: THE WORLD'S CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY.—The first volume of this great cyclopedia is announced to be ready in a few days. If it reaches the standard indicated in its prospectus it will be altogether unrivaled in its magnitude, comprehensiveness, and scholarship, and at the same time will be placed easily within the reach even of any industrious laborer. Instead of being made up of brief sketches by unknown authors, as are commonly the historical portions of cyclopedias it will contain, unabridged, the great standard works of such authors as Green, Macaulay, Grote, Carlyle, Gibbon, Guizot, Mommsen, and others. A very comprehensive alphabetical topical index, covering all the works embodied in the cyclopedia, will make ready consultation upon any subject convenient, and will group together such wealth of knowledge and interest as will surprise the ordinary reader and delight the profound student. Specimen pages received at this office show handsome typography, good paper press-work. Each volume will contain about 1000 large, double column octavo pages, and will be sold at $1.50 for cloth binding, and $1.00 in half Russia, sprinkled edges. The amount of matter in each volume, and for so low a price, seems almost startling! Vol. I contains, unabridged, Green's Larger History of the English People, Carlyle's History of the French Revolution, Schiller's History of the Thirty Years' War, and Creasy's Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World—all for $1.50. No payment is asked in advance by the publishers, but books will be sent to any part of the United States by express, with the privilege of examination before payment is required. It will be wise for those who want to purchase to write to the publisher immediately, as at these prices, the edition will be limited by the number of orders received before publication. Specimen pages and full particulars sent free upon application to the publishers, the Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, 167 William St., New York City.

My Sleeping Children.

L. D. SANTEE.

The light of the day is departed,
The night is still and deep.
And I stand beside the humble couch
Where my darling children sleep.
As they rest in calm and quiet,
To the future my thought is led,
And I wonder what paths, in time to come,
Shall the feet of my darlings tread.

I stand beside my loved ones,
As they lie so calm and still,
And I pray our Heavenly Father
To guard them from every ill;
Oh! may the loving angels
Direct their tender feet
Beside the waters calm and still,
Through pastures green, and sweet.

The Father's Will.

Several gentlemen were visiting a French school, in which was a boy both deaf and dumb. One of them asked him who made the world. The boy took his slate and wrote the first verse of the Bible:

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth."

He was then asked, "How do you hope to be saved?"

The child wrote, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

The last question proposed was, "How is it that God has made you deaf and dumb, while those around you can hear and speak?"

The poor boy appeared puzzled for a moment, and a suggestion of unbelief seemed to pass through his mind; but quickly recovering himself, wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Johnnie the Newsboy.

Some time since, as the writer was seated in the railway train, a pleasant voice sang out:

"Paper, sir?—paper, sir?—morning paper, lady?"

"What is your name, my boy?" I inquired, as I reached out my hand for a paper.

"Johnnie ———," the last name I did not catch.

"You can read?"

"O yes; I've been to school," glancing about from the window to see if there was necessity for haste.

I had a little brother once whose name was Johnnie. He had the same brown hair, and tender loving eyes, and perhaps it was on this account I felt very much like throwing my arms around Johnnie's neck and kissing the thin cheek. There was something attractive about the child standing modestly in his patched clothes, and little half-worn shoes, his collar coarse, but spotless white, his hands clean and beautifully moulded. A long shrill whistle, with another, short and peremptory, and Johnnie must be off. There was nothing to choose; my little Testament, with its neat binding and pretty steel clasp, was in Johnnie's hand.

"You will read it, Johnnie?"

"I will, lady, I will."

There was a movement—we were off. I strained my eyes out of the window after Johnnie, but I did not see him; and shutting them, I dreamed and thought of what there was in store for him, not forgetting to ask God's love and care for the destitute, tender-voiced boy.

Some months after, I made the same journey, and passed over the same railroad. Halting for a moment's respite at one of the many places on the way, what was my surprise to see the same boy, taller, healthier, with the same calm, clear voice.

"I've thought of you, lady, and I wanted to tell you it's all the little book."

"What's all the little book, Johnnie?"

"The little book has done it all. I carried it home, and father read it. He was out of work then, and mother cried over it. At first I thought it was a bad book to make them feel so, for the more they read it the more they cried—and it's all been different. It's all the little book. We live in a better house now, and father don't drink, and mother says it will be all right again."

Dear little Johnnie! he had to talk so fast; but his eyes were bright and sparkling, and his brown face was all aglow.

"I am not selling many papers now," he continued, "and father says I can go to school this winter."

Never did I so crave a moment of time. But no, the train was in motion. Johnnie lingered as long as prudence would allow.

"It is all the little book!" sounded in my ears—the little book that told of Jesus, and of his love for perishing man. What a change! A comfortable home, and no more a slave to strong drink. Hope was in the hearts of the parents; health mantled the cheeks of the children. No wonder Johnnie's words came brokenly. From the gloom of despair to a world of light, from being poor and friendless, the little book told them of One mighty to save, the very Friend they needed, the precious Savior with a heart all love, all tenderness.

Would that all Johnnies who sell paper, and have fathers that drink, and mothers that weep over the ruin of once happy homes, took to their wretched dwellings the little book that tells of Jesus and his love.—Dawn of the Morning.

Talks with the Boys.

Boys are like monkeys in some respects, one of which is to imitate what they see others do. This faculty of mind is stronger in the young than it is in grown up persons who have learned to reason and experiment more.

A large part of the education of children comes through this power of imitation. Now this faculty was given by an all-wise Creator for a noble end, when rightly used; but it can be abused like every other faculty of the human mind, and then evil follows as certainly as effect follows cause.

Boys you are surrounded on all sides by examples. Persons older than you are, are setting copies for you to follow, and this has already been going on from your earliest infancy. Many things you have copied into your lives. Your parents were your first teachers in this school. If their examples were good you are blessed with an advantage vastly in your favor in all after life. If they have led blameless Christian lives and you have been influenced by their goodness, kindness and wholesome instruction, you will be better prepared through the remainder of your days to resist temptation to evil.

It is not the happy fortune of all boys to have Christian parents, but on the contrary, many lead lives totally unworthy of imitation, whose vices and bad habits it would be dangerous to follow, for moral ruin would be the result. I trust none of you, my young readers, have parents of this kind.

Boys soon discover the faults, imperfections and sins of father and of mother, as their knowledge of the moral law increases, but often instead of shunning the evil before them, they learn to practice the same things, and plead as an excuse father's and mother's example. If your parents possess good characters, follow in their footsteps, but let me forewarn you against the temptations to all manner of evil which others will throw in your pathway. The baits of vice, some of them sugar-coated, will meet you at every turn. There are boys in every neighborhood no older than you are, who are far along on the wrong road of which I spoke in my first talk. They have been apt scholars in the school of vice. Shun their company, but if unavoidably thrown among them, remember the words of Solomon: "My son, if sinners entice thee consent thou not." Prov. i. 10.

Most boys think there is no danger in traveling some distance on this road. I tell you solmenly there is danger. Let me illustrate.

In Switzerland, in the Alps, is a mountain pass which before it was improved was dangerous to travel over. Now if the greater number of travelers and tourists in attempting to scale the mountain by this pass were to tumble over some frightful precipice and be dashed in pieces on the rocks below, you would say such a road is dangerous to travel over.

Now the wrong way in life, called by the Great Teacher "the broad way" is just as dangerous. The majority of those who travel on it go down to ruin, in other words, they die sinners, there is no hope in their death. In the first stages of the route some leave it and pass over to travel on the good road, but the number who do so become fewer and fewer as the end of life is approached.

The tree of deepest root is found
Least willing for to quit the ground.

UNCLE JOHN.

Sea of Galilee.

Riding by the foot of Hattin, over the place where, 700 years ago, Saladin annihilated the crusader's power in Palestine, we at length reached a ridge where we looked out on the distant hills of Bashan, and down far below us upon a dark blue pear or harp-shaped sheet of water, lying snugly in a deep inclosure of high brown hills. Though less than thirteen miles long and seven miles broad, yet, measured by the events it has witnessed, it is a kind of Pacific Ocean. It was the Sea of Galilee.

As we moved over the long way downward to its level—650 feet below the Mediterranean Sea—we had time to grasp and fix its whole aspect and surroundings. It lacks boldness of outline, for its hills slope gradually back from the shore, or leave a narrow plain as at Gennesaret and Buthia. But the lights and shadows lie sweetly on the hillsides at night and morning; the northern end is broken into pleasant little bays, and Hermon looms grandly up beyond, far off, yet seemingly near. The whole aspect of the lake is one that suggests the thought and the lack of beautiful homes.

It was still a long ride to the lake. The region we were passing, once brimful of life and activity, was utterly forsaken now. The entire lake lay spread before us, and nearly the whole coast line, along or near which once lay the cities of Tarichea, Tiberias, Hippo, Gamala, Gergesa, Bethsaida, Chorazin, Capernaum, Magdala, and Beth Arbel.

Of these cities, Tiberias once had its senate of 600; Gamala was able to resist and defeat Vespasian at the head of three legions, and when captured by Vespasian and Titus it lost 9000 in the fight, and 5000 who hurled themselves or were pushed down the precipice; while Tarichea, according to Josephus, was able at one time to furnish 16,500 for slaughter in a sea fight with the Romans. 1,200 slain in cold blood in the stadium, 6000 captive youth to dig for Nero in the isthmus, and 30,000 to be sold into slavery.

The only existing visible representative of all this strength and activity were the little cluster of huts called Mejdel (Magadan) and the shrunken Tiberias, with its 2,000 inhabitants. From our path not a vestige of the other places could be seen.

It was near sunset when we entered Tiberias. We followed the road through the gate, but could easily have passed through rents in the walls. The now squalid city, mentioned but once in the New Testament, has been the chief home of Jewish learning since the destruction of Jerusalem. Here the Jerusalem Talmud was completed, and here is now what may be called the present theological school of the Jews. —Prof. Bartlett.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY.

A New Science in Its Practical Applications—How Lost Vitality May be Restored.

A. B. M.

The recent sudden death in Washington of such estimable and beloved citizens as Thomas J. Hume and Dr. John B. Blake, and the liability to the recurrence of similar disasters, naturally quickens our desire to discover some means available by human sagacity to postpone or avert for a time the inevitable hour. As one step in the right direction, and at the risk of being considered Utopian, the writer asks leave to record his personal knowledge and experience of three instances in which the Destroyer's fatal power was intercepted for the time and the calamity arrested.

Before relating the particulars of the instances referred to it is well to say that in some investigations made more than twenty years ago into the new science of Electro-Biology the writer came to the conclusion that the mysterious and still unknown power of life in all breathing animals is to be found in what science calls the forces of Light, Heat, Electricity, Magnetism, etc., but which the Bible expresses comprehensively as the Spirit of Life from God. Man is a splendid electrical machine, fearfully and wonderfully made, which, when acted upon by the external force of God's power, manifests the various diversities of vitality which we call animal life. The leading attribute of all life is motion. That which moves lives or manifests action; that which never moves is dead, inert matter. We learn from Holy Writ that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. As long as his physical structure is set in motion by the breath or Spirit of God his vitality continues. When this spirit is withdrawn or intercepted, motion ceases, death ensues and the structure dissolves into its parent dust. To live and to preserve life the frame must be invested with and driven by the spirit of life which is the Spirit of God. Experience teaches that this spirit comes to us through the medium of the air, in which it is everywhere diffused. St. Paul taught the Athenians (Acts xvii.) that we are the offspring of God, that we live, move and have our being in him, and Job tells us (xxxiv.), "If he (God) gather to himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together and man shall return again unto dust," declaring also "The Spirit of God is in my nostrils," while Moses declares "that man became a living soul by breathing the breath of life."

Modern science teaches us that the most potent vital force with which we are acquainted is electricity, and it is familiar knowledge to us all that the first act of the new-born infant is to breathe the breath of life and thereby become a living soul. Thus it is through the medium of the atmosphere in marvellous combination with the spirit of life from God that all breathing creatures have their life and being. To create and to preserve life, it is indispensable to keep up the free access of air, charged with divine electricity, to the lungs. When by injury, disease, etc., the connecting links of the human battery are broken and insulation is produced, breathing ceases and death ensues. Now if by external artificial means this suspended vital connection is restored in time, resuscitation takes place and the human machine continues in operation as before. The question then recurs, How is this to be effected in the case of sudden suspension and apparent cessation of life?

The discoveries of modern science instruct us that all objects have their auree or atmosphere surrounding them. This is proved by the scent of animals, the fragrance of flowers, etc. These emanations are electrical and have a tendency to impart their own moveable properties, to surrounding objects with which they come in contact. It is also known that all electrical influences move, or are impelled by wave-like vibrations and proceed onward in circuits. All vigorous, healthy bodies charged with positive electricity placed in contact with feebler organizations impart their superior power and as there is a strong tendency in bodies thus brought into contact to get into sympathetic equilibrium with each other, we should aim by bringing them into appropriate relations to restore the exhausted organism and thus impart a common life to both. How this is to be done is now to be considered.

Dr. J. Mortimer Granville, of England, in a recent article in the Nineteenth Century, says: "The residual air in a lung is the basis of the respiratory process. The sustained tension of the smaller arteries transforms the pulsating current of blood thrown into the system by the heart to a continuous circulation; the equilibrated tonicity of opposing muscles gives stability to the apparatus of motion and renders specific combinations of movement possible. What is true of the physical is also true of the mental constitution, the residual force, the tension, the tonicity of mind form the basis of intellectual action. It is not necessary to discuss the relations of mind and matter; even if the mental being is no more than a formulated expression of the physical organism, the continuity is so complete the same law governs both."

This "residual air in the lung" when acted upon and propelled by percussion, through the sudden blows applied externally between the shoulders and down the spinal column, is made thus artificially to resume the process of natural respiration. This end is sometimes sought to be reached by the application of the galvanic battery; but the slight success which has attended such experiments shows that some element in the remedy beyond mere metallic and mechanical action is still wanting. This desideratum we venture to suggest, is supplied in the homogeneous animal electricity with which all living human bodies are strongly charged. Applying these conceded scientific truths to the cases I am about to relate, I submit that the successful results obtained were due to the virtue of that animal magnetism or principle of electric life of which we have spoken, applied in the manner now to be described. The writer, impressed with the conviction that in all cases of suspended animation or sudden death some effort should be made to restore the lost vitality by the prompt application of animal electricity, had resolved to test this theory by actual experiment on the first opportunity. This occurred not long after, as related in case No. 1.

1. An aged domestic, a negro manservant in my own family, was one day suddenly reported to be dead or dying in the kitchen. Repairing hastily to the spot I found that old Adam, aged more than seventy years, had fallen on the floor and lay apparently dead, his system relaxed, his jaw fallen, eyes thrown back and, pulseless and breathless, the death-pallor seemed settled on his face. An effort was made to arouse him to consciousness by vigorously shaking him and calling him by name, but without success. He was to all appearances dead. Placing his body upon a bench, reclining upon his right side, I grasped firmly his left hand in my own, pressing my thumb upon the ulnar nerve and stretching out my open right hand, with the fingers in contact, I applied a number of sharp slaps or blows in succession down his back beginning at the base of the brain and thence down the spinal column, repeating and renewing the process with energy, occasionally intermitted by a vigorous friction of the hand down the back, at the same time calling him by name and trying to arouse him to consciousness. Continuing these successive smart slaps or shocks, always carefully completing the electric circuit by the tension of his hand in my left hand, I had the satisfaction, within ten minutes, of witnessing, at first feeble and then deep and successive acts of respiration, and an almost immediate return to consciousness. Opening his eyes as if after a troubled dream, he sat up and asked why I continued to strike or hit him. Thus before a doctor could be summoned he had been restored from what seemed to be the death-state. Administering some stimulating drink, he soon retired and lived for years afterward.

2. Case second was that of a married lady. She had been long in bad health and under the care of a physician. Summoned as a neighbor by the alarm of her family, I found her apparently in the agony of death. Two physicians were standing quietly awaiting her last breath. Seeing they did nothing for her, I asked her husband if I might make an effort to restore her to consciousness. He assented, and the doctors, supposing no harm could be done, as they thought her beyond all hope, did not oppose it. I proceeded at once, as in the former case, by a succession of taps or blows down the spinal column. The result was immediate increased vitality, gradual and at length full respiration, and resumed blood circulation. She soon regained consciousness and partook of some tonic drink, and was finally restored to health and still lives.

3. The third case was of more recent occurrence, during the past summer. A neighbor, also a lady, aged about forty-five years, and usually in good health, was suddenly prostrated by excessive grief, occasioned by the distressing death of her child. This with the intense heat of the weather produced prostration amounting to syncope. She was found senseless on the bed, apparently in a dying condition, breathless and motionless. The announcement that she was dying determined me, with the consent of her husband, to make a similar effort for her restoration. The result was quick and successful. After a series of percussive electric taps or shocks from my stiffened arm and hand she was brought to and speedily recovered.

Following up these hints we know that in cases of suspended animation from drowning, choking, freezing, etc., friction applied by a living body is freely used and often with successful results. Why not use the same means in all cases of sudden asphyxia and death as in diphtheria, croup, strangulation, apoplexy, epilepsy, etc? Whilst there is warmth in the patient, before there has been time for the blood to coagulate and while the nervous currents of the living and the dead may be brought into contact, there is every reason to hope that the suspended electrical force may be restored and the vital current resumed.

In all such cases the following mode of proceeding may be adopted: Lay the body of the patient on a bed or table, reclining on the right side. By means of a pillow raise the head to its natural level, loosen the necktie, shirt or dress, or anything that may impede circulation, and remove the outer coat from the shoulder and back. Then clasp the left hand of the patient closely in your own pressing the thumb upon the ulnar nerve, between the middle and third finger, then bending over the patient with your right arm extended, the palm of the hand open and fingers closed laterally, direct a succession of vigorous taps or blows, beginning at the base of the brain and the head of the spinal column, downward to the small of the back, repeating the blows in quick succession and stroking the back downward. Repeat this process with earnestness and vigor until signs of respiration and motion appear. This should be continued until respiration and consciousness are fully restored. By this means it will be seen that an electrical current is established, every blow of the right hand renewing the circuit and charging with the positive electricity of the operator, the negative body of the patient. As a valuable adjunct to this practice, the free circulation of the air would tend to inflate the lungs and restore respiration.

If these facts, hints and suggestions can be properly applied and improved by physicians and men of science whose means and opportunities for successful experiments are always at hand, is there not good reason to believe that many valuable lives may be saved? Thus a new departure may be taken in our investigations of the science of life, and some better means of preserving it obtained as to which we are now confessedly in the dark.

MORAL CONDITION OF FRANCE.

France is to-day in a very critical, political and religious, or politico-religious condition. The Republican Government has been organized at the command of her people, who are without any proper or adequate political, religious, or educational training for self-government. The hierarchy of the Roman Catholic priesthood is committed to Legitimism, to Imperialism, and its influence, instead of broadening, elevating, and ennobling its adherents, contracts, narrows, depresses, and subjects them. There is an almost entire absence of the spiritual element in the training of the masses, and the moral sense is consequently blunted, and in very many entirely absent. A missionary, who has great experience, says: "The conscience is dead—almost. It has been sung to sleep for the last six centuries and more. This is what makes preaching so difficult in France. There is no sense of sin, and no Scripture knowledge to work upon."

Massimo d'Azeglios said: "To make Italy, Italians must be made, and with equal truth it may be said of France—to assure the permanency of the Republic, Republicans must be made: some high ideal substituted for self, and a foundation laid, 'whose maker and builder' shall be God."

There is a class in the social scale with educational advantages, who think that because France is a Republic she can dispense alike with laws, and with God. A leader among these was the notorious Blanqui, who edited a newspaper entitled No God—No Master, and who is now dead with his paper. I learn, however, that a feeble attempt is being made to revive it.

The walls of Paris are daily placarded with announcements of "Atheistic Conferences." The venal press, led by such publications as the Republique Sociale, strikes at the very of all good government and society. Illustrated papers offer to the gathered crowds at the newspaper stands on the Boulevards the most disgusting, obscene, and demoralising engravings; prints, which I am glad to say the healthy, moral sentiment of the American people would not allow to be exposed for sale in any city of our country.

"Paris is France," said the first Napoleon, and it is the common centre from which every thing good, or bad, radiates in France, and these poisonous productions of a venal and immoral press can penetrate to every corner of the Republic.

THE ANTI-CLERICAL MOVEMENT.

Religious considerations have little to do with the "Anti-Clerical" movement. It is more a political than a religious movement, based on the fact that Roman Catholicism is anti-Republican, and opposed by its history, its traditions, and its daily teachings, to personal liberty and independent thought.

There is yet another, and a larger class than either of those mentioned, a part of which is nominally in the church, but not heartily of it, and a larger part neither in it, nor of it, which, disgusted with the arrogance and annoyed by the ignorance of many of the Roman clergy, has begun to breathe the spirit of freedom and to seek for a more spiritual or more heartful worship, and greater personal liberty than Romanism or Materialism can furnish. It is this class which affords the most encouraging feature of the religious question in France."

And here is the grand opportunity in God's providence, lying before us, for sowing the seed of a simple, Christian, unsectarian faith, an opportunity which, I think I do not exaggerate in saying, has not been equaled since the great Reformation itself. The opportunity offered is remarkable, because, "under the new laws, religious meetings can be held without previous consent of the Prefect" without surveillance or espionage. "Bibles, Testaments, and Christian literature" can be distributed without restraint. "Foreigners can engage without fear in all branches of evangelistic work." In fact, all reasonable liberty is allowed.

But religious liberty has its shadow, as well as sun; its good and its bad side; it gives precisely the same advantage to error as to truth. We would not wish it otherwise; but in the present condition of religious and political thought in France, error, unless confronted with a more powerful truth, will temporarily triumph. In the present instance, it is certainly much better to take the field at once with error, on an equal footing, than to oust the enemy after he is thoroughly intrenched.—George R. Sutton, in N. Y. Observer.

News has just reached this country of a terrible earthquake in the Kashow district of China, last July, by which many lives were lost, followed by a deluge by which many others perished.

Society of Biblical Archæology.

On Tuesday the anniversary meeting of the Society of Biblical Archæology was held at its rooms, 9 Conduit street, W., the Rev. Canon Beechey in the chair. The report, which was read by the secretary, stated the present number of ordinary members to be 559, in addition to 35 honorary members. Mr. Rylands reproduced from the Egyptian correspondence of a French journal the latest accounts of Professor Maspero's exploration of the mysterious step-pyramid of Moydoum, which is thought by some not unlikely to prove that of the Protomonarch Menes himself. Maspero had discovered the entrance at the summit of the supposed artificial mound on which the pyramid was thought to have stood, but which turned out to be its first storey. According to M. Gabriel Charmes, writing on the day of his visiting the pyramid, with Maspero as his cicerone, the opening now uncovered forms an entrance by an admirably constructed corridor sloping downwards about 40 metres, absolutely the same length as that of the Great Pyramid. At the end of this long slope the path is as yet blocked up by debris. Maspero had already found in the corridor two hieratic inscriptions, in the style of the 20th dynasty, recording the names of a couple of scribes who had visited the pyramid at that date, at least 1000 B. C.—London Times, Jan. 13, 1882.

Editor Restitution:

I have been much interested in reading THE RESTITUTION for the past year on the different subjects discussed in its columns. I hope it is proving a benefit to earnest inquirers for the truth, in the liberal manner in which important truths are discussed in it: the articles on the gifts of the Spirit (or rather the gift of the Spirit) were plain, and interesting, and I hope they will lead some to ask God for his holy spirit, for, as Peter said on the day of Pentecost, "The promise is unto you; and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." If the gifts of the Spirit are not given why is it so? have we no faith as little children? or has his word returned to him many centuries ago? so that we are left "without hope and without God in the world," or has it come to us only to condemn? if so, "let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." I hope and believe there is something better for us if we keep his commandments even the gift of the Spirit, or Comforter. Therefore "let us examine ourselves and see whether we are in the faith," for fear we miss the rest promised, and they without us be made perfect.

I was going to write for a pound of those free tracts and on receiving my last RESTITUTION I find that the supply is exhausted. I am sorry, although I hope I will be able to do more than merely distribute some tracts by aiding some preacher to come to this place and preach the gospel, as we have as much intelligence in this place as any inland town of the same number of inhabitants. We number about six hundred souls, and three churches—one Campbellite, one Methodist, and one Presbyterian; and as to the one faith can't say how many members, although am satisfied there could be a church organized if we could have some able preacher to come here and preach the gospel in its simplicity and purity. The Campbellites are somewhat divided, and there is a goodly number that has a pretty good knowledge of Scripture, and if an able preacher of the one faith can come here and spend a week or more, I think there can be some good done; and I will do all in my power to aid any one. We can have preaching every night as we have a good, roomy school-house that can be had any time. We have one of the healthiest places in the United States, and a pretty place to live, although we have sin and perplexity. We live in hope that our Redeemer will soon come to cleanse this place together with the rest, and then we will have a new heaven and a new earth. So we live in hope, looking for our Master.

A. C. BENDER.

The Lord willing I will be at the Roose neighborhood on Friday, Feb. 10, and continue over the second Sunday. From there I will go to Brother Kinnie's, three miles southeast of Three Oaks, Mich., the 16th, and continue over the third Sunday.

BENEDICITE.

E. ROXANA WINCE.

AFFECTIONATELY DEDICATED TO MISS ALICE MCLAREN.)

Ah, if wish of mine might be Answered here on earth for thee,
What dear question should I claim,
Pleasure? gold? or earthly fame?
Troops of friends? or earthly cheer?
"All of sight and sound to please?"
Costly home and jewels rare?
All of earth that's good and fair?

Nay! not these. I meekly plead
Something for thy utmost need,
Heavenly manna day by day,
Strength to give for tedious way,
Calm of Elim, Hermon's dew,
Love of God, unchanging, true,
Guiding staff-rest from fields of pain,
Worldly ... but heavenly gain.

Hand to hold there, true and strong,
All life's lonely years along,
Friendship of the good and wise,
Foretaste sweet of Paradise:
Grace, to work for holy ends,
Her for Jesus making friends,
Peace, that ebb in vain may try,
With all life hoarded stores to buy.

Riches, tried and made secure,
For the life that will endure,
Victor's crown, of deathless hand,
Palm and song of Canaan's land,
Stone of beauty, throne of might,
Name of God, and robe of light,
Home, where never death may be,
—Glories of Eternity.

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Seven.

J. B. COX.

How forcible is the reasoning of the apostle, in his admonition to Timothy. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

In order to be approved unto God it is necessary to have a knowledge of God's will as revealed in his word, and this can only be accomplished by a study, or an investigation into that word, and it is impossible to do any work aright except we have a knowledge of it, how then could Timothy or any one else, expound or rightly divide the word of truth, except they understand it? Timothy had a great work before him. As an evangelist going forth before the world to preach the gospel, which consisted in the things made known in the oracles of God, such as the kingdom of God, and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ, and by rightly dividing the word of truth, the hearers would become intelligent disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ.

After they received the word, and become obedient to the faith, it was necessary to form a church organization for the building up of the body, in the most holy faith, and grow in the knowledge of the truth.

When the apostles had received the commission from the Lord Jesus to teach all nations, they were to remain in Jerusalem, until endued with power from on high, so while waiting at Jerusalem, they "were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God." Luke xxiv. 53. This temple consisted of an upper room. For we read, that after the apostles had witnessed the ascension of Jesus, and were comforted by the "two men (angels) that stood by them in white apparel: Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Then returned they unto Jerusalem .... And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James, . . . and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James. These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren .... the number of names together were about a hundred and twenty." Acts i. 10–15.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts ii. 1–4.

Thus the apostles were endued with power from on high, and preached the word (in different languages) as the spirit gave them utterance, and that in simplicity and truth. "And they (the audience) were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?" Verse 12. For they (the apostles) "speak the wonderful works of God." They speak of those things which God had promised in the person of Jesus the Christ, and how they put him to death, and as part of their discourse they said, "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." Verse 36. This brought to their remembrance the deed they had done. For, "when they heard this, they were pricked to the heart." Then they began to inquire what they should do. Peter then instructed them to repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins. He also exhorted them with many other words.

"Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers .... And all that believed were together, and had all things common. And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Verses 41–47.

Here was the foundation of the Church of God, under the Christian era. And so interested were the multitude of believers in the apostles' teachings that those owning lands even sold them, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet, or put it in one common fund, that all should share alike, (this however was not done by commandment, but by mutual consent). But when Ananias and his wife sold a possession, they acted deceitfully, they kept back part of the price of their land, and brought part and laid it at the apostles' feet. The evil consisted not in keeping back part of the price of the land, but in the fraudulent act, in bringing part and representing that as all. As members of the church of God, they were not compelled to sell their land, it was their own choice, and when they had sold it, they were not obliged to deposit it into the fund. For Peter says, "Whilst it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing into thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Acts v. 4.

So an example was made of them; that should be remembered through the Gentile age.

"And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things .... And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." Verses 11–14.

By this reading we see that this fund was not established by divine commandment. For as this fund died away, the church of God still grew. And the gospel was preached, and the apostles did many signs and wonders among the people. The high-priests rose up against them, and put them in the common prison. But they could not be holden of it, for the angel of the Lord delivered them out of it, that they should speak to the people the words of this life. They were again brought before the counsel, "and the high-priest asked them, saying, Did not we straitly command you, that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine?" Verse 28. Then Peter and the other apostles boldly spake in the powerful language to them, the things that God had done, concerning this Jesus which they had slain. Then they (the high-priests) were so cut to the heart that they took counsel to slay them. But through the intercession of a Pharisee, Gamaliel by name, a doctor of the law, they were let go, but not without stripes, and a command that they should not speak in the name of Jesus. "They therefore departed from the council rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer dishonor for the name of Jesus. And every day, in the temple and at home, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ." Verses 41, 42.—New Version.

But as the church increased in numbers, and the fund of equalization had become defunct, it was necessary to adopt some plan for the sustenance of the poor among them. So they appointed "seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom," to whom this business was committed. Stephen, a man full of faith, was one of the chosen for this purpose. And some that were of the synagogue, disputed with him, but they were not able to withstand the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake, and when he had preached the word unto them in its purity, they stoned him, and when he had prayed for his enemies, he fell asleep." Verse 60.

"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. As for Saul, he made havor of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison. Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down into Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." Acts viii. 3–5.

Thus the church was scattered, and all arrangements for organizing appeared to fail. But Saul the zealous persecutor of the saints was stopped in his wild career, and a dispensation of the gospel was committed unto him. "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God" Acts ix. 20. After this, Saul (who is also called Paul) preached the gospel of Christ in many places with great success, for many received the word with joy, and became obedient to the faith But Paul was much persecuted, and also them that accompanied him, they were driven from place to place, and were despitefully used, and stoned, and on one occasion they drew Paul out of the city, "supposing he had been dead." But after he had recovered, he with Barnabas came to Derbe. "And when he had preached the gospel in that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch. Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed." Acts xiv. 19–23.

Now as Paul built up the church of God, he desired to "let all things be done decently and in order." 1 Cor. xiv. 40. So he ordained elders in the churches which he visited. And when Paul was at Laodicea, he addressed a letter to Timothy whom he besought to abide "at Ephesus, that he might charge some that they teach no other doctrine, neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than Godly edifying, which is in faith." 1 Tim. i. 3, 4. He also gave him instructions to set the church in order. The officers of the church are elders, or bishops, or overseers, and deacons. And so cautious was Paul to establish order in the church, that he gave Timothy a specification of standing, necessary to qualify men for the good work of bishops and deacons. "The bishop therefore must be without reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, sober-minded, orderly, given to hospitality, apt to teach, no brawler, no striker: but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money: one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; not a novice, lest being puffed up he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover he must have good testimony from them that are without: lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." 1 Tim. iii. 2–7.—New Version.

The deacons also must bear a character like unto the bishops, as will be seen by reading the next six verses. Their wives also must be in good standing. Then Paul says, "These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly; but if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the church of the living, the pillar and ground of the truth." Verse 14, 15.

We observe then that Paul was very careful to instruct Timothy in all these things, that he should be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. For he must educate the church to this standard, for when men have been enemies to Christ, they are not prepared to take the oversight of the flock at once, but they must be taught the will of God, as set forth in his word; or else it will be a church without order: and Timothy as an evangelist had that work to do, therefore, he too must have a good knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, to accomplish this end. These bishops were also to become teachers themselves, for they must be apt to teach, they were not to depend upon an evangelist all the time.

When Paul left Titus at Crete, that he should set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, he instructed him in a similar manner, that he should educate men to such a standard of character and ability, "holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." Titus i. 9. And when Paul was on his way to Jerusalem, he came to Miletus, and "sent to Ephesus, and called to him the elders of the church. And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye yourselves know from the first day that I set my foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time, serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind, and with tears, and with trials which befell me by the plots of the Jews: how that I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching publicly, and from house to house. .... For I shrank not from declaring unto you the whole counsel of God. Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in the which the Holy Ghost (Spirit) hath made you bishops. Overseers, to feed the church of God, which he purchased with his own blood." Acts xx. 17–28.—New Version.

With these things before us, we see the importance of Paul's admonition to Timothy, that he should diligently search the Holy Scriptures, that he might succeed in building up and setting in order the church of God. So zealous was Paul in this great work, that he gave his whole life to the cause. He admonished the elders of the church at Ephesus, (as well as Timothy) night and day with tears, and then commend them to God, and to the word of his grace. This he did freely, for he says, "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel." Verse 33.

Thus Paul is a great example to the model church, he followed the footsteps of Jesus the good shepherd who gave his blood for the sheep. Paul entered in by the door into the sheepfold. And Timothy also has taken an active part in building up this model church, which has never been changed by God, it has only been perverted by man.

So in my next and closing chapter I will apply Paul's admonition to Timothy more to ourselves, for our own benefit.

THE OUTLOOK IN THE EAST.

It appears stormy enough. There is trouble brewing in the air, and the thunders of war begin to mutter all around the political sky. So foreshadows the old words of divine prophecy. But there is sunshine beyond the storm.

Ireland is in distress, sorrow, anger and defiance. Poverty presses, and royalty threatens. Commercial credit is broken, the spirit of hope sinks, and the year opens on confusion, contention, and a war of classes. An outburst of frenzy may any hour precipitate a carnival of blood.

The German emperor's assumption of absolutism has thrown all over the empire a feeling almost of consternation, and suppressed anger. The English and French are surprised and comment unfavorably. A conflict impends. The liberty-loving element, now grown strong, will not brook an absolute monarch. Socialism still honeycombs beneath the surface, and the future looks uncertain and serious.

There is blood on the face of the moon in the direction of Russia. The condition is calculated to occasion the gravest apprehensions. German, English and French newspaper correspondents all agree that a crisis is coming—coming soon. The army cannot be depended on. The Czar is a virtual, if not an absolute prisoner at Gatschina. The outburst will not alone be Nihilism, but revolution and anarchy. Things grow worse every day in Ireland, Germany and Russia. All can see this.

The Papal thistle still rankles in the Italian body Germany intimated an interference in the matter and Italy's king hurled back defiance. The sensation was profound. But Bismarck answers that steps are being taken to guarantee the Pope's independence—all the powers consenting. Guarantee what? How? We wait to hear the reply of Italians and their king. The mayor of Rome recently said in a public speech he had rather see the Eternal city burned to ashes than again in Papal hands. Will it be burnt?

France with her hand on the sword-hilt is ill-disposed toward Germany, and is making vast preparation for war. She has Tunis under foot. But behind Tunis in Africa is a rising cloud, and nine millions of Mohammedan Arabs cry, "Vengeance!" Paris, a city of two millions, is rotten with sin and immorality, and like Sodom and Pompeii provokes divine wrath.

Turkey is dismembered, effete, rotten, in debt, without reform, desperate and muttering. "The Turk must go," all declare. But his steps will be marked in blood. He will die hard.

Egypt is under Turkish rule but Franco-English protectorate. Faction and discord are rife. The Sultan provokes against the two great powers. They resist him. The situation becomes grave, and all is apprehension. The Mohammedan element disturbs the divided parties.

But the blackest cloud in the East is the vast Mohammedan uprising. The Moslems number 180,000,000. Of this hordo Africa has 100,000,000, and India 40,000,000. Think of these in united hostile array against Christendom! Is such a conflict at hand? All fingers point that way. Well armed, they could slay every Englishman in India. With 9,000,000 Arabs in North Africa every French army would be annihilated. Determined to hold Egypt the combined forces of France and England could not resist them. All Turkish newspapers demand resistance to the death against the great powers who so crowd the Turk. In the Moslem world all is excitement. Their expected Messiah is to be revealed Nov. 12, 1882. He will establish an autocracy. He will restore the glory of Islam. He is to rule all nations. Nothing else is talked of in the Mohammedan world to-day. Violent appeals are everywhere made to the people in India and everywhere else, to rise in their might and destroy their infidel oppressors. The nations are alarmed at these omens and there is fear and wonder in the East and West.

What impends? Is Turko-Mohammedanism yet to accomplish the words: "He shall go forth with great fury to utterly destroy and make away many?" —Dan. xi. 44. Does not the Hebrew here show this to be a religious war? Does it not exhibit this power in its last bloody struggle for place and power? Is the fierce strife at the very door? As a finality shall we see Islam entrench his forces on the holy hills in Palestine?—Dan. xi. 45. Does not the "end" noted come by miracle, and supernatural revelation of the archangel Michael, rather than by the sword of Christendom? Is there to be a rallying of the forces of Popery (the beast) and Islam (the false prophet) against the Christian word? Is this the war against the Lamb?"—Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 19. Instead of national battles and a victory over Islam and Popery by fleets and armies, is it not the "last advent" of Jesus that ends all?

The hastening, nearing future will answer. Meanwhile the aspect of things stirs the blood of every student of prophecy. It may be that the King of kings is nearer than we dream. Lo! the sound of his chariot and the flash of his glory is heard and seen over the hills of the East.

"Come, Lord, and tarry not."—D. T. Taylor, in Messiah's Herald.

Brevities.

The Journal de Geneve states that according to the table prepared by the President of the Swiss Seismological Commission, Prof. Forster, fourteen well established shocks of earthquake occurred in Switzerland during December.

A puzzle for Orientalists has turned up in the shape of an inscription in an unknown character, not Phœnician, nor Cypriote, nor Lycian, nor Hamathite, which has been found on a contract-tablet from Babylon, dated in the reign of Artaxerxes.

A well-known antiquary has discovered in an Athenian monastery a papyrus which is nothing less than a MS. of the Iliad written about the year 308 B. C. The writer of this treasure was an Athenian named Theophrastus. Andronikus, the nephew of the last Byzantine Emperor, Constantine Palæologus, took it with him to Mount Athos when he went there to end his days.

A great Mohammedan gathering, known as Magh Mela, was recently held at the junction of the Ganges and the Jumna, at Allahabad, in India. It was particularly crowded this year, owing to its being what is called Khumb, or twelfth year. The number of visitors was estimated at 1,000,000 to 2,000,000. The cholera broke out among them, threatening a general pestilence, to prevent which the Government had, at last accounts, ordered the dispersal of the multitude to their homes.

At the last meeting of the Paris Geographical Society, M. A. Raffray, the French vice consul at Massowah, gave an account of a discovery of a series of temples, carved out of the solid rock in Bogos, the mountainous region to the north of Abyssinia. Charged with a mission to the King of Abyssinia, he succeeded in exploring the Qeboui mountains and the country of Gallas-Raya, previously unknown, the discovery in question being one of the results. M. Raffray also exhibited an entomological collection which includes some entirely new types.

A special description of the bronze implements found at Corcelettes, on the Lake of Neuchatel, has been published by M. Victor Gross (Neuveville; Godet). The station is on the right bank of the lake, about one and a half miles from Granson. The implements are attributed to a period about 1,000 years before the Christian era. The memoir is illustrated.

At a recent meeting of the French Academy of Medicine, a communication from Dr. Dubrouilh, of Pau, was read, announcing the discovery of a case of spontaneous cowpox at Eysines, in Gironde, by Dr. Loudheau. A number of heifers have been inoculated, and one of these has been sent to the Academy of Medicine, where it has been utilized by Dr. Depaul to regenerate the vaccine supplied to the public. A similar case was reported from Beaugency 18 years ago.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

The Observer understands that the Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinal Manning, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Dean of Westminster, and Canons Liddon and Farrar are in communication as to a scheme of setting on foot a conference or committee with a view of calling public meetings in the metropolis and throughout the country, in order to raise a fund for the relief of the homeless Jewish families in Russia, and to facilitate emigration. We are informed that one member of the Jewish community has volunteered to head a list of subscriptions with a donation of £10,000, and that he considers £1,000,000 is necessary to do any effectual good.

The secretary of the Anglo Jewish Association, the Rev. A. Loury, preaching the sermon at the Berkeley street Synagogue, London, devoted the time of his discourse to a description of the intense sufferings of the Jews in Russia at the present time, growing worse from week to week, and surpassing, he remarked, all the ancient Israelites endured in Egypt. He was in a position to give the congregation knowledge of what was going on, from official as well as private information which he had received. New laws restricting Jewish labor were being enacted, and those Russian Jews who were rich men are now reduced to absolute poverty through spoliation countenanced by the authorities; the intellect of his co-religionists was regarded and treated as an offence. The rich man was persecuted for being rich, the cultivated intellect despised because superior, and the laboring man hunted down because he works industriously. He appealed to the Jews of England to use their influence to suppress these ills.

The seventh volume of the reports of the United States Geographical Surveys, west of the one hundredth meridian, has been issued. The bulk of the volume is devoted to the archæology (pre-historic) of Southern California. Professor Putnam, who has mainly prepared the volume, regards the Eskimo and the Innuit as the purest continuation of the primitive American stock. Their inferior development must is to be accounted for on the supposition that they became separated before the highest degree of development had been reached in California. The Eskimo element is, however, still pronounced both in the physical characters and in the arts of the Californians.

THE JEWISH PROBLEM.

One of the first honor men at the Commencement of the University of this city was a Hebrew. A Hebrew gave the valedictory at Yale. A Chinaman carried off the prize in oratory at New Haven.

These are pleasant incidents to mention. They are signs of that common enjoyment of privileges which is a feature of American institutions. It is also an indication that the Jews are coming to the front. Their success in every department they enter, is evidence of the talent of the people. It is so in all countries except their own. They have gone out into the earth, and appear to be seeking distinction and power everywhere, while Judea is almost deserted by Jews.

Can any one who does not believe in the New Testament, say why this is so?—Kentucky Church Chronicle.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal the important information they it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 15, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 30, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to any one who have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. . . . Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again, . . . It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which Brother Jones gives us in his book. The Gospel of the Kingdom, Expounded in a series of Ten Discourses."—R. H. T., Va.

It is elegantly bound in cloth, and printed in clear type on good paper, 214 pages. Price only $1.00, postpaid. Address WILEY JONES, Bedford, Va.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 22, 1882. NO. 8.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE.—ITS PROXIMITY.

Analysis of Rev. xi. Continued. Living Temple. Its Foundation. Stone Kingdom. Dan. ii. 34, 44. Stone Temple. Isa. xxviii. 16; 1 Peter ii. 6-8; Rom. xx. 33; Eph. ii. 20. Process of Construction Under Various Names. Theocracy, Ecclesia, Age-dah. Congregation. Temple Views of Christ and Prophets and Apostles.

J. P. WEETBEE.

Our analysis of Rev. xi. requires us to name the temple John was required to measure. This we cannot do without fully understanding the nature of the idea or thought, which has originated the phrases, Temple of God," "House of God." This thought we have traced with some degree of attention.

Temple of God, when properly understood, conveys a unity of thought, God's dwelling—the universe. He never showed but one pattern of that house—the one seen by Moses in the Mount. Moses was commanded to form a house precisely like it in all its parts. That was the Lord's house: occupied by him till Solomon's temple was completed. This house was called tabernacle. In 1 Sam. i. 9, it is called temple. Solomon's temple was an enlarged tabernacle. It will appear from the meaning of the word temple, (God's dwelling) that a living, organic structure is as literally the temple of the Lord; or, at least, a temple of the Lord while he occupies it, as that of any inorganic structure; and that the entire body of living organisms, while thus dwelt in by Jehovah, would be as literally the temple of God as was the tabernacle or Solomon's temple. [illegible] two propositions the Scriptures fully establish:

1. Persons, individually, who are occupied by God through his Spirit, or otherwise, are a temple of the Lord—an organic living temple.

2. Persons, collectively, or forming one general assembly, are a temple of God.

These two propositions we shall proceed to establish; for, why should organic matter, when occupied by Elohim, be any less a literal temple of God than inorganic matter? Does its organism exclude it?

Prop. I. Persons, individually, while occupied by God, through his Spirit, or in any other way, are a temple of the Lord. Our proof now follows:

1. The [illegible] answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he spake of the temple of his body. When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the Scripture, and the word which Jesus had said." This proves the correctness of our definition of the temple of God; since, "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Col. ii. 9. "For it pleased (the Father) that in him should all fulness dwell." Col. i. 19. Jesus said, "That ye may know, and believe, that the Father (is) in me, and I in him." John x. 38. He was God's temple, for God dwelt in him. With such language as this, and John ii. 19-22, this same John that was commanded to measure the temple of God, was familiar, since he had heard it from Christ's own lips.

2. Paul.—"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and (because) the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (believers individually). 1 Cor. iii. 16. "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost (which is) in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" 1 Cor. vi. 19.

On this passage Dr. Whitby remarks: "The two things necessary to constitute a temple belong to the bodies of believers. They are consecrated to the use of the Deity; and he resides in them. In the bodies of the primitive Christians (individually) God resided by his Spirit, who manifested himself by his miraculous gifts; and he still resides in believers by his ordinary operations. From this Tertullian draws the following inference: 'Since all Christians are become the temple of God, by virtue of his Holy Spirit sent into their hearts, and consecrating their bodies to his service, we should make chastity the keeper of this sacred habitation, and suffer nothing unclean or profane to enter it, lest the God that dwells in it being displeased, should desert his habitation thus defiled.'" (What of tobacco and whisky slaves?)

"And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in (them): and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." 2 Cor. vi. 16.

Prop. II. Persons collectively, constituting a general assembly, or body of believers, filled by the Spirit of God, are a temple of God. The following inspired testimony is introduced to establish this proposition:

"Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion (he occupying the throne of David) for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner (stone), a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste." Isa. xxviii. 16.

That Christ is this stone we have the testimony of God, given us by many inspired men. A stone, having special attributes, is the usual symbol of the Messiah. He is the "stone" of Israel. Gen. xlix. 24. "Head stone of the corner." Psa. cxviii. 22. "A stone cut out of the mountain without hands." Dan. ii. 34, 35. "Tried stone," "precious stone," "sure foundation stone." Paul and Peter apply the symbol to Christ in the following passages:

"Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe (he is) precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders (Jews in their national temple) disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, (even to them) which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed." 1 Peter ii. 6-8. Peter adds the following: "To whom (Christ the foundation stone) coming, (as unto) a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house (temple), a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Paul says, "We are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, (ye are) God's building (temple). According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus the Christ (anointed). Now if any man (teacher) build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. Know ye not that ye (collectively) are the temple of God, and (because) the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. If any man defile (individually) the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which (temple) ye (collectively) are." 1 Cor. iii. 9-18.

"Now therefore ye (believers) are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief (top) corner (stone), in whom all the building (temple) fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple of the Lord (Zech. vi. 12, 13—He the Branch, builds the temple of the Lord). In whom ye are also builded together for a habitation of God through his Spirit." Eph. ii. 19-22.

"If I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house (temple—church) of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground (support) of the truth." 1 Tim. iii. 15.

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go out no more: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the city of my God, (which is) new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and my new name." Rev. iii. 12.

It is said, "All did eat of that spiritual (typical) meat: and did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ." 1 Cor x. 1. On this Mocknight has the following.

"And all did drink the same typical drink: for they drank of water from the typical rock, which water followed them; and that rock was a type of Christ, as the source of all the revelations of God."

In these numerous passages we have specimens of the temple teachings of prophets, of Christ, and of his apostles, relative to which we are authorized to draw the following conclusions:

1. The body of believers, which may be denominated, The General Assembly, or Christian Congress, assumes various names, according to the various attributes exercised in its various positions, and offices: as a worshipper, under Christ its High Priest, it is called Ecclesia—Church, or Congregation. As a civil body, having governing power, under Christ as its great King, it assumes the name and exercises the prerogatives of a Kingdom. As the dwelling of God by his Spirit, it is denominated a Temple. When it puts forth its energies to sustain and propagate that pure system of truth taught by Christ and his apostles, it is a Pillar. It is a pillar in the highest sense as pillar in the holy sanctuary of the heavens; in the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. Heb. viii. 2.

It is not perhaps far from the truth to say, that in the expression, "In my Father's house are many mansions," signifies, In my Father's great temple—the universe, are many subordinate temples, viz: one in each planet, star, or heavenly body; that each of these lesser temples is a pillar in the universal temple; that when each subordinate temple is completed a shout will pervade a purified universe. Of other worlds, we are not at liberty to speak. Of this earth's origin and destiny, God has seen fit to make his servants a revelation, "As truly as I live (saith Jehovah), all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. xiv. 21. Human glory will fade at its approach like the moon's rays before the rising brightness of the sun.

As there was only one tabernacle, formed after a single pattern of one great temple, so there will be but one King over all the earth; one kingdom, one set of officers, one seat of empire, and one living temple; for God and the Lamb are its temple. Zion will be the seat of that temple; Jesus its Royal High Priest. This temple of God has been in process of construction ever since the fall. Living stones have been gathering, from all nations; children of faith, zeal, and purity, have been selected and prepared, as the material of Solomon's temple. Some of these were prophets, some priests, some kings, others were found in the walks of private life; hated by the world because not of the world. When the fulness of the time came, the living foundation stone of this living temple was, by the Deity, cut out of the mountain and conveyed to the site of the future building, it was rejected by the builders, God was angry with those builders, since it was the stone of his own selection. Matt. xxi. He removed those builders, and let the unfinished job to other builders for completion. Material is now to be gathered from all nations: Go ye into all the world. Success followed the new effort. God sent his laborers to gather out of them living stones. The building began to rise with great rapidity—some built in gold, some silver, others, precious stones, (these were the right kind for a stone—fire-proof building); another class was so anxious to make a "big count," that hay, wood and stubble were piled on to the foundation. Thus the work progressed till John was commanded to rise and inspect the building and the material that was being built into it. Who but Christ himself could have made a better inspector? He had been taught of Christ: was familiar with the plan of the great masterbuilder, and knew perfectly what material was suitable for the building.

Editor Restitution:

I write a few lines for the encouragement of the brethren. There is a sentiment gaining some ground among the brotherhood that the work of calling out a people from the Gentiles is accomplished, and they have come to this conclusion from the fact that we do not see the truth producing the same effect now as it did when preached some years ago. Now, what is the cause? It appears to me the fault is with ourselves. If we go back twenty-five years we find a multitude was waiting for and wanting the truth; hence, when it blazed out thousands were standing ready to receive it, and all were ready to work with a will. We saw the work move on and love was depicted in the face of every brother and sister. Those were joyful days. We had that charity that would cover a multitude of faults. But we now see a wide change in many places. It is all reversed—many have that charity that will take a small fault and so magnify it as to make many.

Now, brethren, it appears to me that if we would return to the old paths, and take the Savior's admonition—"Occupy till I come"—let brotherly love continue, and go to work with a will we might yet see a few more gathered out for his name.

May the Lord help us to realize the shortness of time, and the work that is before us, and may we work while the day lasts. Let us take the apostle's admonition—"Exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

Now I will make a report of the Eagle Creek Church. We organized with four members, Feb. 26, 1881. During the summer there were nine additions—four by immersion and five by application, making the number thirteen in all. We visited Eagle Creek again Dec. 30, and commenced a meeting which closed Jan. 20. We commenced by giving three practical discourses, and then followed with four lectures on prophecy. The people became deeply interested, the house being filled every night. I then spoke on the gospel of the kingdom and what we must do to inherit it, and the interest continued to increase, and men and women began to obey, and although we had to give way for two sermons from the Dunkers, and one from a Mormon, the progress of our meeting was not impeded; it only gave a little rest so that I could take hold with renewed vigor. I expected some help from brother Wince, but for some reason he was unable to come to my aid. But the Lord was sufficient, and in spite of all the opposition that could be brought to bear against us, we had twenty-three additions, of whom eighteen were immersed into Christ, and five were received on their former immersion. We believe that meeting will tell when the Lord comes to make up his jewels.

At our last meeting on Friday, at one o'clock P. M. the house was crowded, and we again went to the stream, and buried eight souls with Christ in baptism. We held a church meeting the following evening to more fully complete our organization. The house was again crowded. We appointed two elders, two deacons, and a secretary. Brother Wince is expected in February.

Your brother in Christ hoping for the coming kingdom.

I have just returned from Stark Co., where I held a series of meetings commencing on Friday evening, Feb. 10, and continuing over Sunday. It was at this point that brother Carter's labors were so signally blessed of the Lord, as reported by brethren Cochenour and Fairchild. Most of the brethren were strangers to me, but our first meeting was a happy one—a greeting so kindly and cordial that I felt as if at home with brothers and sisters, members of a common household, that I had known for years. This meeting and salutation will be one of the sunny spots in life's dreary waste. I never met with a more sociable, warm-hearted and hospitable people in my life. My prayer is that they may never falter in the warfare on which they have entered, that the crown gleaming in the hand of the Great King may inspire and strengthen them for the hardest service in the conflict before them, and that they may gain the victory at last and share the glory to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

On Saturday P. M., a goodly number of the brethren assembled on the bank of a stream near brother David Reed's house, to witness the baptism of sister Hoffrick who had come forward the evening before. Some others will soon follow her example. Quite a large proportion of the church are young men and women in the bloom and vigor of life. How I like to see the young start in the service of the Master!

The brethren here are greatly comforted and encouraged. Brother H. R. Kendall (Dr. Kendall of Lawton) and Sister King continued meetings after our Conference, Jan. 6-8, two weeks, and Brother Bower preached for them Sunday, Feb. 5. I "entered into their labors," and yesterday baptized fourteen young persons, and there are sixteen others who have made a start in the religious life.

I have been in the field some this winter. Elder Foster and myself were at Minonk, Woodford Co., and immersed four into Christ, and there are more who will follow. I came home on the 13th, and left Elder Foster at a new place. Have been asked to go to three new points and hold meetings, and will comply as soon as I can.

My prayer is may God bless his people, and I hope to meet all of the dear brethren that I met at conference at Argos, Ind. May we follow the Master's footsteps. If I never meet those dear ones again in this life, I hope to see them all in the age to come.

I wish to say, that as there are many places where only a few brethren are located, and they not able to pay for a preacher, I will go to such places if they can pay my railroad fare. All I want is to save the lost ones that are scattered.

Your brother in Christ.

Please find enclosed my subscription for the past year, and accept my earnest thanks for your patience in bearing with me so long. I have been sorely afflicted in that it has pleased God to take my dear wife from me last August. But I greatly rejoice in that she died looking for the coming of the Lord and the establishment of his kingdom in the earth. We had both hoped to be among them that live and remain to that time, but I rejoice in the hope that when he shall appear she too will appear with him. So I sorrow not as they that have no hope.

THE RESTITUTION contributed largely toward bringing both of us to the knowledge of the truth, and I thank God I have been thus blessed by it. After I have read it I send it 200 miles further south to awaken and enlighten others.

Yours in the hope set before us in the blessed gospel.

We are here yet, on the frontier of Kansas, blessed with a reasonable portion of health, for which we are very thankful. We are still laboring in the Master's vineyard, setting forth the truth, and trying to make our light shine. We have aimed to set before men the unadulterated word of God in its simplicity with sincerity and boldness; making no compromise with error. When we look about us and see members of the body of Christ using the poisonous weed we are pained in our heart. We do think that next to drunkenness, the filthy and degrading habit of chewing and smoking tobacco is the worst. Oh, that the child of God would control his appetite, and learn to overcome, for the promises are to them that do overcome—seven times repeated in Rev. ii., iii. We are confident that enough money is expended for tobacco by those of the One Faith to make all our poor and suffering ones comfortable, whether found in the crowded thoroughfares of the east or in the wilds of the western lands.

We are striving to make ourselves pure. We want to be counted worthy that world and the resurrection to eternal life. Times with us are close. A few have been mindful of God's poor ones. May he bless them. We cannot but speak well for THE RESTITUTION and its Editor. May our Father give him strength and health to continue to fill its pages with truth, so much needed in these days.

Having just returned from a lecturing tour in the coal regions of this state, whither I went at the earnest request of brother Wm. Brittle of St. Nicholas, a brief account may be of interest to those of like precious faith who are readers of THE RESTITUTION. Brother Brittle was led to write for me through reading the lectures "Reasons why I believe the Bible to be the word of God," and "Man as he was, as he is, and as he will be," I being unknown to him as he was to me.

I responded to his request, and leaving Pittsburgh Friday evening, Jan. 27, I arrived at St. Nicholas a little after eight o'clock Saturday evening, and made my first acquaintance with brother Brittle and sister-wife. He is a worthy and efficient brother in the cause of truth, whose labors have resulted in bringing several in that vicinity into the family of God.

In the morning we took train for Mahanoy City, two miles distant, where lectures had been announced for morning and evening. The brethren here have rented a fine hall at an expense of some forty dollars a year. The hall was well filled both morning and evening with a very intelligent and interesting audience. There was much interest manifested and the best of attention given to the subjects discussed. The subject for the morning lecture was "The Bible Doctrine of Immortality;" in the evening "The Coming Reign of God on Earth." After the morning lecture the brethren broke bread, in number some ten or twelve. As yet there are no brethren in Mahanoy City, as it is but a short time since brother Brittle commenced to proclaim the truth there. The brethren reside at St. Nicholas, two miles distant, and at Shenandoah City, four miles distant.

Tuesday night following I lectured again at the same place; subject, "The destiny of the world from a stand point of reason and Scripture." As the night was very stormy—a severe snow storm—the audience was small. The following morning brother Robbins of Shenandoah took me with horse and cutter to Berwick, some thirty miles distant, where I gave two lectures; one on Wednesday evening and on Thursday evening. Subjects: "The Church not the kingdom," and "The two natures, mortal and immortal." Here the audience was small. I formed the acquaintance of brother Hosler and family. Brother Hosler and wife are sound in the truth, and a daughter, still residing at home, is interested and will doubtless become obedient. Bro. Robbins, who is a well to do brother of Shenandoah City selected his wife from this honest and truth-loving family, she too being a believer.

Leaving Berwick Friday morning, we went to Bloomsburg, a distance of fourteen miles, where brother Robbins' parents reside. His mother and one or two sisters are in the faith. Gave two lectures in a private house, friend Winkoon, Mrs. W. being deeply interested in the truth. The audience was small but gave the best of attention. Subject: "The Bible contrasted with popular belief."

After the lecture some time was given to asking the lecturer questions, one intelligent young lady appeared deeply in earnest. I am sorry to say that the believers here are tinctured a little with Russellism, which is subversive of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Leaving Bloomsburg Saturday morning, we arrived at St. Nicholas in the evening, stopping with brother Thompson, who is an intelligent brother, and ought to let his light shine by instructing others. We met here two brothers, Cook by name, and their wives, all believers, and others friendly to the truth. Brother Thompson's wife is a believer, but in delicate health and unable to attend the lectures. Sister Cook is also in poor health. In the morning I lectured again at Mahanoy; subject, "The One Faith," and in the evening on "The word made flesh, or Jesus Christ, who is he?" As on the previous Sunday there was marked attention and good interest manifested. The brethren here are all intelligent and sound in the faith. They call themselves Christadelphians, and meet every Sunday at Knapp's Hall, where brother Brittle announces the things of the kingdom and name for the obedience of faith to an intelligent audience. Several have become interested and have withdrawn themselves from the surrounding apostacy, with a view to being immersed for remission of sins as soon they are sufficiently enlightened in the things required. Of these I may mention friend Richards and wife at whose house we dined both Sundays.

Any speaking brother, thoroughly intelligent in the truth, with no crotchets or hobbies, if passing near St. Nicholas, would do well to visit the brethren. He would be gladly received and hospitably treated, and have an opportunity of announcing the truth to those who are willing to hear.

So far as I know there are no brethren nearer than Philadelphia, ninety miles, to this Ecclesia of earnest believers, domiciled among the hills and coal pits of this state, and directly on the route from Harrisburg to Philadelphia by the way of Reading. There are here as elsewhere, many small towns where the truth has never been proclaimed. What a pity! Are there no speaking brethren who are able to push their way to such places where there are some famishing for the truth that saves? Are not speaking brethren too much given to visiting Ecclesias where the truth has already taken out all or early all it will, and passing by the almost innumerable towns and villages where it has not been proclaimed? Ought not the truth to be made more aggressive, with kindness; more uncompromising, with love? Is there not too much affiliation with those who hold the truth in part, while they make void the promises of God by traditions? How readeth the words of John? "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." Let us examine ourselves and see if we be in the faith, and take good heed that we compromise not the truth for gain, for numbers, or for popularity, but earnestly set forth the things of the kingdom and name, as the only saving truth—truth to be understood and heartily believed before immersion for remission of sins.

I must not forget to say that the brethren and friends were exceedingly liberal, bearing all my expenses and more, donating liberally to the cause of truth, one brother giving $10 to assist in publishing two lectures in tract form; may he not lose his reward.

Bidding them adieu on Monday morning, I arrived safely at home at twelve o'clock, night. That brother Brittle may yet see the fruit of his labor in Mahanoy City is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Feb. 22, 1882.

SOME deferred articles will soon appear. Brethren must have patience as we are crowded.

WE shall not occupy much room editorially till we have disposed of some communications now on hand.

WE have received a book entitled—The Restitution of All Things—By W. M. Willett. Will notice more fully hereafter.

WE have, with much sorrow, to state that we have learned that sister Sarah Barnhill, wife of Elder H. Barnhill, died quite sud lonly Monday morning. Fuller particulars next week.

WE would impress charity and forbearance on all our brethren who write for the paper. Let each one, in the spirit of love, present his own reasons for the conclusions to which he may arrive, and extend the same privilege to others of different opinions.

Sententions.

Genuine benevolence, like the Savior, goes about, doing good.

No man was born wise, but wisdom and virtue require a tutor, though we can easily learn to be vicious without a teacher.

A sinner's time is wasted if he does not repent. A saint's time is wasted if his heart does not grow in grace.

Health, beauty, vigor, riches, and all the other things called goods, operate equally as evils to the vicious and unjust, as they do as benefits to the just.

"Hark! down through the starry portals,
And over the land and the main,
Glad tidings are ringing and rolling
The Bridegroom is coming again."

There is only one thing which makes it worth while to live on earth, and that is, that we may glorify God where he is so much and by so many dishonored.

No man ever served God by doing things to-morrow; if we honor Christ and are blessed, it is by the things we do to-day. Whatever you do for Christ, throw your whole soul into it.

What human nature requires is a religion for dying sinners—a mighty remedial system, and a personal Redeemer; and the work of Christ is marvellously fitted to meet its requirements. We are sick of a deadly sickness, and our first want is a living physician.—John Charles Ryle.

Our God hath marked each sorrowing day
And numbered every secret tear,
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here.
—Bryant.

Wealth and social position, unfortunately, go farther to determine one's standing in most of our churches than real piety and active godliness.—Spurgeon.

The act of praying, as fast as it is encouraged, is found to fit itself in, by a remarkable and beautiful harmony, with all our better moods and all the higher states of the soul.

Sir Humphrey Davy is credited with the saying, "Life is made up, not of great sacrifices and duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness and small obligations given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort."

"God hath a presence, and that ye may see
In the fold of the flower, the leaf of the trees
In the sun of the noon-day, the star of the night;
In the storm-cloud of darkness, the rainbow of light;
In the waves of the ocean, the furrows of lands
In the mountains of granite, the atom of sand;
Turn where ye may, from the sky to the sod,
Where can ye pass that ye see not a God?"

We are so created that we must regard our own welfare. Self-love is implanted in our natures. If it could be destroyed there would be nothing to which God or man could appeal. Neither threatening nor promise would move such a soul. Moreover, self-love has the approval of Christ in his epitome of the moral law. He makes it the measure of love towards our neighbor. "Love thy neighbor as thyself." But selfishness differs from self-love in this, that self is exalted into the supreme law of action. The well-being of others and the will of God are not regarded. This is the self that is to be crucified.—Love Enthroned.

The Hon. George R. Wendling, in his lecture on Robert Ingersoll, says: "The most notorious outlaw known in the criminal annals of the West, Frank Rands, stood a few months ago at the bar of his cell in St. Louis, the very impersonation of every crime, and with the air of a braggart, said to preachers, priests, and policemen—to throngs of men and women—'I am a Bob Ingersoll man;' and every man and woman in the land believed him."

THE TIME WHEN THE LORD WILL COME TO RAISE HIS SAINTS.

J. CAMPBELL.

I now propose to enquire whether any well defined event has been predicted as a sign of the descent of the Lord to the air to raise the dead—distinguishing this stage of the advent from his appearing with his saints in power and glory.

Much has been written on the "signs of the times;" but they are generally treated as mere characteristics of the times, and supposed to be fulfillments of certain prophecies alleged to relate to the French Revolution of 1789, and subsequent events in Europe. I might refer the reader to two works by Bicheno (Signs of the times, 1794, and Fulfillment of Prophecy Farther illustrated by the Signs of the Times, 1817), and one by Alexander Keith, D. D., (Signs of the times, 1832,) as ill ustrations.

Horatius Bonar, D. D., in a chapter on "The Signs" in his work, Prophetical Landmarks (1848), gives fourteen signs as a few out of many. They may be briefly expressed thus:—maturity of Antichrist, diffusion of infidelity, increase of immorality, formalism in religion, mixture of opinions, dissociability, religious deceivers, wars, earthquakes etc., restlessness of the world, missions, Israel, disbelief of advent, efforts at self-regeneration, spread of knowledge. It is remarkable that, while Dr. Bonar gives these as forerunners of the "Lord's appearing," he admits that of some "of these it might be said that they have been found in former days;" an admission which materially lessen their value as signs of our times.

Another way of viewing "the signs" is to regard them as forecasting their contraries in the future. Thus, a writer in the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy (1848 gives four such signs:—disorganization pointing to consolidation, individualism to brotherhood, dispersion to gathering, insubordination to obedience. But it is easy to see that such schemes throw no light on the question we are asking—that of date.

Peter Jurieu, in his Accomplishment of the Prophecies; or, the Approaching deliverance of the Church (1687), held that that event should take place about 1710 or 1714; and that the division of the Great City into three parts, under the seventh vial (Rev. xvi. 19), denoted the division of the Latin Church into Papists, Lutherans, and Calvinists.

Dr. John Thomas has given in his Herald of the Kingdom (1860), seven signs, of which he says: "Jehovah has told us of certain signs characteristic of the end." These are: (1) "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." (2) Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people. (3) At the time of the end there shall exist a king of the South, or Egypt, and the land be remembered. (4) The political Euphrates dried up. (5) A frog-power in existence, contemporary with a dragon-power, a beast-power, and a false-prophet power. (6) The nations enraged and in perplexity. (7) Preparation of the Bride. "These," he says, "with the exception of the last two, were fully developed." But taking the last two as signs nearer the end, the questions arise—To what extent are the nations to be enraged? and, has not the preparation of the Bride been going on, more or less, for eighteen hundred years? And, whether or not, how are we to know when the preparation is completed, so as to use it as a definite sign of a given event? We must view these so-called signs, therefore, as mere characteristics of the times, and as affording no clear indication of the time of the advent. Dr. Thomas finds another sign in Rev. xvi. 15; "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." But the Doctor holds that his "coming" is with his saints, and it, therefore, is a sign which could be of no use to these, for their "gathering together unto him" must have already taken place. And the circumstances of this coming render it highly probable that it is the same as that predicted in Zech. xiv, where the nations besiege Jerusalem, and at that time "the Lord comes, and all the saints with him." Dr. Thomas says: "The coming one, who makes his entrance stealthily, is not merely a single individual, but a body of individuals, consisting of the kings of the earth and their prince. Rev. i. 5.....It is the body of the earth's future kings, who shall all be conformed to the Christ-image....But to whom is he to come as a thief? Certainly not to the constituents of his own body, which would be coming to himself. No; he comes upon the dragon, the beast, and the false-prophet as a thief. Eureka, vol. iii. page 532.

But supposing this coming to refer to the initial stage of the advent, when the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, and the dead in Christ shall rise—is there anything in the circumstances given whereby we can unmistakably determine the precise time of the advent? Is it during the gathering of the hosts to battle? or after they have been mustered? or after they have commenced to fight? These events may occupy months, if not years, and can thus afford no safe guide to the time of the Lord's coming.

But the disciples once asked Jesus, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" In his reply to this and other questions, he spoke of signs in sun, moon, and stars, national distress, men's hearts failing them for fear, etc., and added. "Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory." Luke xxi. 25-27. Here it is his glorious appearing that is spoken of, when "he comes with all his saints." They could not be the earthly spectators of his coming, because the resurrection must have taken place some time previously. And Jesus distinctly told his disciples that the faithful should "escape all those things that shall come to pass." Ver. 36. If they are to escape all these things, it is not easy to see how they can be observant earthly spectators of them as signs of Christ's glorious appearing, of which they form part; unless it can be shown that there is so brief an interval between the re-surrection and the manifestation as to allow of the development of the signs prior to the resurrection. But the real spectators are clearly pointed out: "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory." Here it is the men whose hearts are failing them for fear, that see the advent of Christ, and its signs.

But Jesus also said: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And also: "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The redemption here spoken of is very probably that national redemption for which the intelligent and faithful among Israel were looking. Jesus had just been predicting their national overthrow and dispersion, and it was natural that he should speak of their redemption at his coming. At his birth, Anna the prophetess "spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem." Luke ii. 38. And Zacharias, speaking by the Holy Ghost, said: "That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us," Luke i. 71. and the apostles, after the resurrection of their Master, "We trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel." Luke xxiv. 21. And we have only to suppose that Jesus addressed these words to his disciples in their character as Jews, and as representing their brethren according to the flesh, who should exist at the time when these things should be fulfilled.

In 1868, John Cumming, D. D., of London, wrote a book of more than four hundred pages, entitled, "When shall these things be? or, Signs of the Last Times;" but has done no more in answering this question than Bicheno did in 1794. He professes no more; for he says it is an "attempt to illustrate inspired prophecy by authentic history;" and as to the question, "When shall Christ come?" he actually goes the length of admitting that "we cannot determine the hour, the day, or the year." But he adds: "We can enumerate the conditions in which he will be revealed, for they are clearly unfolded in the sure word of prophecy." Page 130. He occupies fifty-five pages in dilating on the bad qualities enumerated in 2 Tim. iii. 2-5, and on "pestilence, earthquakes, and famines," as the conditions referred to. Then 117 pages on additional predicted signs of the nearing exhaustion of our present mundane economy, namely: wars and rumors of wars, time of trouble, the world's apathy, unbelief of the advent, love grown cold, scoffers, fearful agitations, time of restlessness, time of seducing spirits—defined to be rationalism, Romanism, ritualism. And, will it be believed? the question forming the title of the work, is dismissed in 6 chapter of less than three pages!

The question that occurs to me in regard to the signs above narrated is—admitting that they were characteristic of 1868—were they much more so than they were of 1858, or 1848? Or are they even now so prevalent as they must be to meet the requirement of the spirit? May it not require five, ten, or twenty years yet, to "fill up the measure of iniquity" described by the apostle?

Dr. Cumming says—Our Lord will come in a time of pestilences, earthquakes and famines." This is his own testimony. These are intimated in Luke xxi. 11, most certainly, but as preceding the destruction of Jerusalem; which Dr. Cumming acknowledges, for he says (page 15): "Jesus enumerated a series of definite signs by which believers would recognize the nearing fall of Jerusalem." He then quotes verse 20: "When ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." And yet nearly thirty pages are occupied in narrating modern instances of these calamities as predicted signs of our times!

According to Matthew, after mentioning sun, moon, and stars, Jesus says: "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven." This may mean a sign of Christ's appearing itself; for it will be a sign of great events. But if the former, what does the sign consist of?

One of the foregoing quotations from Dr. Cumming suggests an interrogative commentary on the signs of Christ's second appearing. He says: "Jesus enumerated a series of definite signs by which believers would recognize the nearing fall of Jerusalem 'When ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.'" This was truly a "definite sign" which could not be mistaken, especially when compared with the many I have quoted from himself and various other writers; and even when compared with those given by our Lord on Olivet, in relation to his appearing in the clouds; for these are held by many to have a figurative meaning, and on that supposition, it might be difficult to determine the right sense. But taking them literally, the questions arise—Are they simultaneous or consecutive? —general or local? Is darkness to be for a day and night? or for weeks or months? How are we to understand "the stars falling from heaven?" and "the powers of heaven being shaken?" The element of definiteness is certainly not so characteristic here as in the signs of the desolation of Jerusalem, excepting to this extent, that, in the popular mind, great darkness in the daytime is connected with the approach of the day of judgment.

But as there is no evidence that these signs were given to be witnessed by Christian disciples, their comparative indefiniteness is not a matter of so much importance.

Dan. xii. 4: "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased," is held to be a pre-millennial sign. But so is "darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." Seu signs given by Dr. Thomas already quoted. The doctor explains those passages as referring to secular knowledge in the one case, and sacred in the other. Why by secular knowledge in either case? And why should "increased knowledge" be immediately pre-millennial, and not rather millennial, as is "the wise shining as the brightness of the firmament" in the preceding verse?

It is generally supposed that Christian "watching" should be for the signs. Dr. Cumming says: "Christians are not only to wait, but to watch; that is, to look out for the predicted signs, and infer from their appearance where we are on the current of time." And Dr. Thomas, "We are told they are blessed who watch the signs," but he gives no text. The watching is a being in readiness—"Be ye also ready;" and is even expressly connected with ignorance as to "where we are on the current of time." "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come," "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." The illustration is given of a porter, whose watching consists, not in precalculating the time of his master's return, but in being at his post ready at any time to open the door. Hence: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." But, wherefore? Because of what goes before: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares: for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. "Watch ye, therefore." Here, the "taking heed," "watching," and "praying," are all directed to maintaining that character necessary to being "accounted worthy" and have reference to "any time," irrespective of signs.

I submit, then, that no definite, unmistakeable sign of Christ's advent to believers, is given in the Scriptures; that watching for signs of it is nowhere enjoined as a duty; and that, in the words of Edward Irving, "the perfect certainty of the event, the entire uncertainty when, is God's own device for keeping his church in a continual state of expectation, "looking not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are unseen."

(Concluded from last week.)

IN THE SAME NIGHT THAT HE WAS BETRAYED.

We need no very wide glance of imagination to send our minds back to that most touching scene of our Lord's life and ministry when summoned by his twelve apostles he partook of that last supper before his death upon the cross. We can see the shadows of evening gather as Jesus and his disciples assemble in that large upper room which they had made ready; even his most bitter enemies have for a time ceased their plotting and are engaged elsewhere celebrating the Paschal Supper, quiet reigns throughout the streets of Jerusalem; few in that great city knew, or if they knew did not believe, that the great Paschal Lamb prefigured by so many thousand victims since the exodus from Egypt was soon about to be led to the slaughter. "Now, as they were eating, Jesus said, One of you shall betray me." We can imagine the consternation that fell upon eleven of that little company, as these words were uttered by their Divine Master. we can see the start of warm-hearted, impulsive Peter, the sorrowful pathetic eyes of loving John; the questioning anger of Andrew, or the quick indignation of James—till at last their emotions are swallowed up in sorrow as they ask. "Is it I, Lord?" then Judas, fearful perhaps lest his silence should betray him, also asks, "Is it I, Lord?"—and Jesus answered, "Thou hast said"—then added, "that which thou doest, do quickly." Judas immediately went out, darkness shrouded the form of the guilty traiter as he hurried on to meet the chief priests, and receive the price of his crime.

Meanwhile the Lord and his faithful eleven continue at the table; with the breaking of bread he said to them, "This is my body which is given for you,"—and in taking the cup—"This is to the new covenant in my blood poured out for you; I [illegible] more drink of the fruit of the vine, till I drink new with you in my Father's kingdom."

In the 14th, 15th and 16th chapters of John's gospel, we have those exquisitely beautiful addresses, which our Lord delivered at the institution of that Memorial Supper—they are not recorded by either Mark or Luke, as they were not present to hear how tenderly the Master comforts them with promises which shall sustain in their coming hours of trial. He exhorts them to continued faith in him, to love one another, and closes with prayer, "Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we also are one." And when they had sung an hymn they went out into the Mount of Olives. It is midnight, and as they cross the brook Kedron the moonlight shines clear and cold upon the white sepulchres out out in the cliff, and on the lofty domes and portals of the Temple. Here Jesus withdraws himself from his disciples a short space and kneels down to pray; the knowledge of the shameful and dreadful death so near at hand awakens his delicately sensitive nature to horror and agony. Matthew tells us, he fell on his face and prayed "Father if this cup cannot pass away from me, except I drink it, Thy will be done."

Surely in the lives of all of us, we have had our own hours in Gethsemane—a loss by Death, that relentless destroyer; some life round which our own was twined so closely that when it was taken from us our hearts bled freely as if from an open wound—or worse far worse the shock of being deceived in those we have loved and trusted so long and so faithfully; it is then in the hour of our despair and darkness that we remember that lonely night on the hillside of Gethsemane, and falling on our faces we cry as our Master cried 1800 years ago. "Father if this cup cannot pass away from me, except I drink it, Thy will be done."

The Flood in the Ohio.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 10.—Rain is falling all along the Ohio, and at 7 o'clock to-night the river was 53 feet, which is within 8 feet and 10 inches of the great rise of 1832. Some of the cellars on the landing are flooded already. The water is over the sidewalks on the river front, near the suspension bridge, in Covington. Apprehensions are felt of a great and destructive flood.

WITH THE SALVATION ARMY AT WINSFORD.

On Sunday last the Winsford detachment of the Salvation Army again opened fire on the enemy. In the morning there was a sharp but not decissive skirmish, but heavy shot and shell was poured into the enemy's quarters in the afternoon, and still heavier in the evening. The action took place in the Town Hall. The attack in the afternoon was directed by a Liverpool lady captain named Jones, ably assisted by an active little Welsh lieutenant, who appeared to know the weak parts in the enemy's position. The movement was a bold and open one, and the chief points aimed at was to prevent the leader of the foe getting into a better fighting position, to stop his supplies, and to release prisoners. The army evidently does not believe in flank movements, but it goes well in for breaking the enemy's front, and for utterly routing his force. The attempt was not particularly successful in the afternoon, but in the evening the besiegers had cause for rejoicing, for they literally stormed the enemy's position, took many captives, and released numbers of prisoners, and it is worthy of note that none of the prisoners or captives wished to return to their old master.

The afternoon movements not being of great force several of the corps who once served with the enemy occupied spare time in giving their opinion in no measured terms of their old adversary and taskmaster, opinions which were heartily and loudly endorsed by numbers present. Some spoke in a simple earnest manner, and with much emotion, which showed how glad they were to have got in the hands they were now in. Others spoke strongly, and stated that they had had years of misery and unhappiness, but now they looked forward to years of joy and gladness and ultimate bliss. Occasionally a well-directed volley was sent at the enemy, and now and then several fired a little independently and somewhat wildly. It is really an impressive sight to see the 800 or 900 persons, numbers of whom had evidently been hitherto unhelped, unsought, and perhaps uncared for, some with faces pinched and worn, scanned and scarred in the battle of life. During the afternoon the detachment was encouraged by the soft, sweet solo singing of the captain, who rendered one or two hymns. In striking and effective contrast to this there was a volume of sound and harmony now and then from the whole body present, many of whom, from the way they sang, having doubtless been taught to sing God's praises at some remote period of their lives. As the cadence of the music rose and fell, and the voices somewhat blended in harmony there was no wonder at a thoughtful mind thinking and speaking of the great hereafter. Here were gathered together hundreds of human beings, numbers who never entered a place of worship, some occupying respectable positions in the town, all identifying themselves with the army, and assisting it in its object, assisting to check any breach of discipline, and aiding in recruiting from the lowest in the town, from those who were a post and a nuisance to the inhabitants, but are now valued and efficient members of the force. Where have these men been night after night and day after day before they joined this army? They said on Sunday afternoon last—at least many did—that at one time they neither cared for God nor man, and that they had before been under the banner of the great enemy. They therefore must be without doubt, a valuable gain to the good cause the army has taken in hand. It would be folly to say that the army has no weak points. There were many to be seen on Sunday, and the enemy will surely take advantage of them. An army should not be too confident of success. All military manœuvres are liable to be checkmated, more especially if the enemy's position is underrated and their own overrated. But be it as it may, the organization which can bring and keep together a detachment of 500 or 900 hitherto untrained persons day after day, and assist in making those persons honest where they have been dishonest, sober where they have been drunkards, and clean where they have been vile, deserves a "God speed" from all.

In Winsford the army may say with the great Roman, "Veni, vidi, vici." For a long time the town was, as it were, forgotten, but when it was besieged it surrendered at discretion. Some of those who spoke on this Sabbath afternoon were specimens of the good the change of masters had done for them. There were those in the room who used to be the terror of the town and the defendants in the court-room. On Saturdays they now take their earnings home, and their wives and little ones are better clothed and fed. Will this state of things last? Aye, there's the rub. It can only be hoped that it will, and that they will be assisted in all good things by all Christian denominations who have missed doing what the army has done. It is not the time, as 'twas lately said—

To ask the brave soldier who fights by my side,
In humanity's cause, if our creeds do agree.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Brother Chaplin:—I have received several letters asking me why I do not write more for THE RESTITUTION of late; and also enquiries as to how I am progressing with my book. Allow me to say in reply through the paper that my almost silence in the paper for the last six months is owing to two causes: 1. The abundance of manuscript on hands at the office has rendered it unnecessary for me to write. 2. My time has been occupied in copying and preparing the manuscript for my book. Now that this task is about finished, I will write a few articles soon, into which I will try and weave replies to several questions propounded me.

As to progress on my book, since commencing the mechanical work I find that to attend to my regular meetings, 16 pages per week is all that I will be able to issue, as I am aiming to set the type and do the folding myself. To-day we go to press with the 4th form reaching the 64th page. My encouragement on the work so far is good. I have to date received orders for 135 copies.

Brethren, you who have not as yet responded let me hear from you. This is a book which is free from the discussion of side issues and is confined to the fundemental principles of our faith.

Our sales of the Eclectic Hymn Book now in four months reaches 950 copies. We are now looking after prices and arrangements for the music for a second addition.

Yours in hope,
G. M. MYERS.

Editor Restitution:

As nothing gives me more pleasure than reading the comforting words of brethren and sisters found in the Letter Drawer, I thought perhaps a word from us might be interesting to some. We are few in number here, but strong in the faith. We feel much encouraged at present, we closed one of the most interesting meetings on the night of the 7th of February It has ever been our good fortune to hold. I commenced on Sunday Jan. 29th, at our school house. The word not being out much we only had a few the first night, but each night increased in numbers and interest, and by the next Sunday night the house was full to overflowing. We continued until Tuesday night following (ten nights in all) and closed with the most real interest I have ever seen in this community. I gave a general outline of the Faith, commencing with the creation and ending in the great consumation. Several persons attended and manifested a good interest that hardly ever attended meeting of any sort before. I had several earnest requests to continue longer but I was nearly worn out as I labored hard and earnest. Since closing I learn several were just ready to obey. I trust another protracted effort will convince all the earnest ones.

Dear brethren, let us take courage; the gospel is still God's power unto salvation to every one that believes and obeys. Much of my labor has been wasted heretofore by only speaking once a month at a place. Our school-house has been a Methodist stronghold heretofore, but we succeeded at last in getting a good hearing even from the Methodists themselves. To our Father in heaven be all the praise. This leaves all well. May heaven's brightest blessings attend you, dear brother, in your noble work, is my prayer. J. F. PIERSON.

Conference Notice.

If the Lord will the brethren of the Abrahamic faith, in Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, will meet in conference especially, at East Plum Rivel, Carroll Co., Ill., on Friday evening, Feb. 24, 1882, at seven o'clock, meeting to continue over Sunday. Bro. G. M. Myers will be at this point and hold meetings the previous week, all week if the weather permit, and will remain through the Conference. We would like to see a goodly number of brethren present at this meeting to exhort and admonish one another, and to encourage each other, as the apostle said.

By order of Conference.
J. S. ARMSTRONG, Chairman.

Lines written on the Walls of Old Blandford Church, Petersburg, Va. Built in 1735.

Thou art crumbling to the dust, old pile!
Thou art hastening to thy fall.
And round thee in thy loneliness
Clings the ivy to the wall.
The worshipers are scattered now
Who knelt beneath thy shrine,
And silence reigns where solemn rose
In days of "Auld Lang Syne."

And sadly sighs the wandering wind,
Where oft, in years gone by,
Prayers rose from many hearts to him,
The Highest of the High:
The tramp of many a busy foot,
That sought thy shrine, is o'er,
And many a weary heart around
Is still'd forever more.

How doth Ambition's hope take wing,
How droops the spirit now,
We hear the distant City's din,
The dead are none before:
The sun that shone upon their paths,
Now gilds their lonely graves,
The zephyrs which once fanned their brows,
The grass above them waves.

Oh! could we call the mass back,
Who're gathered here in vain,
Who're careless rested where we do now,
Who'll never meet again;
How would our very souls be stirred,
To meet the earnest gaze,
Of the lovely and the beautiful,
The lights of other days.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

Or the Principle of Life in Man and Beast.—No. 4.

BY H. H. HALL.

In order to a further elucidation of the question whether man is a unit being, or a dual being, let us once more return to the account of the creation of man as given by Moses in Gen. ii. 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Not half of, or a part of, as alleged, but man in all his component parts (for he is a compound, but not a double being)—his bones and flesh; his stomach to hold and digest his food; his heart to throw out and receive again his life-blood; his lungs to assist in respiration; his ears to hear, and his eyes to see the glorious works of his Maker; his brain so wonderful to manifest thought—in a word every part exterior and interior, and all adapted to every necessity—and now all ready—not for a spirit-entity, but for an element, a vitalizing principle, not the breath of air, but "the breath of life," such as is common to man and beast—that which sets the lungs to heaving, the blood to flowing and the "man" to thinking. And when man was thus formed, God blowed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man (not a part of, but the whole man) became a living soul, a living man.

Now when man thus created and thus endowed with the spirit of life is spoken of in the Bible, he is spoken of as a unit being and not as a dual being. And so when God said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, dying, thou shalt surely die"—"For out of the ground wast thou taken .... and unto dust shalt thou return," he meant just what he said—that the "man" Adam, whom he had formed of the dust of the ground, should die and return to dust as a penalty for his disobedience, and, as we learn elsewhere, "the breath of life," or "spirit" of life should "return to God who gave it" when he created him. So that theologians have no warrant from the Scriptures for ringing the changes on the personal nouns and pronouns, as they do, in the vain attempt to sustain their indefensible dogma of the duality of man, or the immortality of the soul.

To illustrate this point: They tell us it was only "the body of Adam" that died and returned to dust. Well, if so, then "the body of Adam" was the "man" Adam, for Adam was the "man" that God formed of the dust; "the man" that was turned out of the garden "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and live for ever;" the "man" that is to die and return to dust. But upon the common hypothesis the poor innocent "body of Adam" suffers death and is thus punished for the sin of the soul, which they say (though contrary to the whole Bible) cannot die.

Again, when the inspired penman says: "The dead know not any thing"—"Why that's the body that don't know any thing." When Peter says that "David is not ascended into heaven," but that "he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day," they again say—"That don't mean David, but only David's body (but Peter says David), for David, the sweet singer of Israel is in heaven singing praises to God." And when David himself, says: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence," the answer is—"It is the body only that don't praise the Lord." If it be the body only that dies and praises not the Lord in death, then it is the body that is the "man," the person that dies and praises not the Lord in death; it is the body of David" that is David who died and "is not ascended into heaven," and who does not praise the Lord when dead. So then, if it be the body only that dies and praises not the Lord when dead, it is the body only that lives and praises the Lord when alive; for whatever it be that lives and praises the Lord in life, whether it be the body alone, or the soul, or the spirit alone, or all of these united—just whatever it may be that lives and praises the Lord in life dies and praises not the Lord in death. Any other view than this would, as any one possessing a logical mind can see, make nonsense of the very emphatic enunciations of the Bible, which declare that man dies; that the soul dies; that "The dead know not anything;" that "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol (the state of the dead) whither thou goest;" that "The dead praise not the Lord."

But when we come to the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, where it is stated "That the beggar died, and (the beggar) was carried by the angels (not the angels of heaven but by the angyelon—messengers, or pall-bearers) into Abraham's bosom," where Abraham was buried, if literality is insisted on—and we ask one if he believes that Lazarus was really carried to heaven by the angels, the reply is. "It was only the soul of Lazarus and not his body that was carried." But when it is said, "The rich man also died and (the rich man) was buried," in this case it was the body and not the soul of the rich man that was buried; for it was the soul of the rich man that lifted up its eyes, being in torments, and of course, the tongue of his "immortal soul" that he wanted water to cool! That Christ did not intend to teach conscious misery in hades—here as elsewhere incorrectly rendered "hell"—by this parable, which was spoken to, and of the Jews as a nation, is very evident not only from the absolute absurdity of the common explanation, which makes it contradict the whole tenor of the Bible, as we have already seen, but for many reasons—besides the one that settles the question, namely, that "There is no knowledge in sheol—hades"—that cannot here be given. I will, however, say this—that the true explanation is that these dead men, if they all really lived and died, are represented as seeing, feeling, talking and praying on the same principle that sight, speech and feeling are attributed to inanimate matter, as of the trees choosing a king (Judges ix.); and to the king of Babylon, and the kings he had slain; to Pharaoh and his host; to Meshech, Tubal and all her multitude, who went down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war, and their swords laid under their (ghosts?) heads, with their iniquities upon their bones instead of upon their "immortal souls." See Isa. xiv. 4–16; Ezek. xxxi. 16–18; xxxii. 21–32.

Once more: One says, "My friend is dead and buried;" at another time he says of the same person, "My friend is not dead, but is gone to heaven." Now which, in the light of this investigation is true? both cannot be, for if the person is dead and buried, he is not also alive and in heaven, as a man cannot be dead and alive, and in two places at the same time. But thus are the advocates of this crooked and most absurd dogma compelled to change the personality of man from body to soul and from soul to body, from soul to spirit, and from each one of these to all as united in one man, in the futile effort to explain away the numerous passages of sacred inspiration that bear so heavily and fatally against them.

The common-sense view, and the Bible truth is that man is a unit being and not a dual being, and that personality is never applied in the Scriptures to the spirit of man, nor to any fractional part of man, but always to the dust-made man; to the thinking, accountable man; to the man that lives, sins, repents and dies; to the man who being "mortal" is a candidate for immortality. "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Hitherto we have been more particularly endeavoring to show in our articles that, "the breath of life," or spirit of life in man is not, as alleged, a superadded entity within man, or within "the body man," as the many would say, but that it is precisely what the inspired writers say it is, namely, the "breath," the neshamah, the ruah, the breath of life in man and beast and so applied to both. We have also shown that ruah—spirit does not always mean breath, but that frequently it refers to the disposition and condition of mind in man, as also in two or three places is employed as a synonym of man. And we now wish to call the reader's further attention to the Scriptural use of the word soul.

And first, let me here say that the words "immortal, deathless, undying and never-dying," as applied by Christians generally to soul and spirit, are not found in a single instance in all the Scriptures of truth. But a person not knowing to the contrary would suppose these expressions, from the frequency they are used in the pulpit and out, might be found in almost every chapter of the Bible.

The word "immortal" occurs but once in the Bible and is applied to God. 1 Tim. i. 17: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever, amen." The word "immortality" is found only five times, and is once applied to God (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16), "Who only hath immortality;" and Rom. ii. 7, to "Those who seek for honor, glory and immortality;" and to the "immortality" Christ "brought to light through the gospel;" 2 Tim. i. 10; and twice in 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54, where the saints are said to put on "immortality" at the "last trump" and the resurrection of the dead. So there is not the least shadow of evidence that immortality attaches to man anterior to the resurrection; nor is there any thing found in the Bible that justifies the use of such expressions as are referred to above; but on the contrary we have the most emphatic testimony of the mortality of man, and of the impropriety, at least, of using such phrases as "immortal soul, deathless spirit, undying soul, and never-dying soul."

Let us see. The Hebrew word enoush—meaning "a mortal man," occurs forty times, and is employed by Moses, Job, David, Isaiah, Daniel and other of the inspired writers. It is rendered "mortal man" in Job iv. 17, and the same in 2 Chron. xiv. 11, in the margin; elsewhere it is simply rendered "man," but should have had the uniform translation of "mortal man" which would accord with the definition given by lexicographers. But we are met with the old objection, so often answered, that all this mortality of man relates only to "the body of man," and not to the soul—that the Bible expressions "mortal body" and "mortal bodies" show, at least, a clear distinction between the body and the soul, and because of such distinction it is assumed that the soul must be immortal if the body is "mortal." In their haste and anxiety to sustain their cherished, but tottering dogma, Christians forget that what they call the body, and what is called "mortal body" in the New Testament, is also called "man" and "mortal man" by all the inspired writers that use these terms. In other words, they all recognize the indisputable fact that a man's body is himself.

There is also an attempt to found an argument in favor of this common dogma upon the Bible expression "my body" (how would myself do?) as though the true personality of man were in the soul exclusively, as represented by the possessive pronoun "my," thus making the soul the owner of the body. But when it is remembered that "my soul" is also a Bible phrase, it would naturally occur to a thinking person that this expression would just as truly make the body the owner of the soul, as in the other case, the soul the owner of the body. So that the argument, of its own weight, falls to the ground. And such an argument never be presented by any candid person, if such person would only duly consider what it requires to constitute a living man with one immoveable personality.

Man is an organized complex being, and it cannot be truly said of any one part of man, as the breath, or spirit, or soul of man, that it is the man, the being, the true personality; for, it takes all there, with the organism, to constitute a living, thinking man. Hence it is proper for man to say of his parts, my body, my breath, my mind, my spirit, my life, my soul. While it is true that the body or organism formed of dust is called "man" by the inspired writer, and is man, it must be remembered that he was not a living man till "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." So when this unconscious breath of life leaves man and returns "to God who gave it," man dies and returns to the ground from whence he was taken, but is, nevertheless, a man, though a dead man, just as truly as before receiving the breath of life. But, "The dead know not anything, neither have they (while dead) any more a reward."

But once more under this head: Man is a being, or he is not a being; if he is a being, as I think we have proved, he is either mortal or immortal; but if he is not a being, but only "a tenement," or "cage," as alleged, for some other being, of which we know nothing, it is very remarkable indeed that "God so loved the world (of mankind) that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish ('die, come to nothing, be destroyed'); but have everlasting life." And let it be remembered that while immortal beings cannot perish, cannot die, cannot be destroyed, mortal beings, such as we have shown the fallen angels to be, and so clearly proved man to be, can be annihilated as conscious beings. "For the Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy"—shamad, annihilate.

Having prepared the way, we will in our next article under the head of The Soul of Man notice more particularly the meaning and use of the term soul, showing from the Scriptures that it never signifies either a being within a being, or, "a tenant" for an unconscious clay tenement.

Copy of a Letter to Rev. Mr. Johnston, Pastor of Chatsworth I. M. Church.

BALTIMORE, Md.

Mr. Johnston:

DEAR SIR—I had the pleasure of hearing your discourse last evening, on "Body, Soul and Spirit," and although it may be considered altogether presumption for a simple layman like myself to address those who are recognized teachers in high places, yet in the hope of doing some good, and enabling you to more clearly elucidate the subject, I will present a few suggestions on the word "spirit."

In the first place, no word (at least in English) has any fixed, rigid, inflexible meaning. All words are qualified by their context. House, for instance, may refer to a sparrow house, a dog house, a frame house, a stone house, "Our Father's house," or "the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Man may be a good man, a bad man, a dead man, a petrified man, or a gingerbread man, and the word spirit may refer to a good spirit, a bad spirit, the "spirit of a man," or "the spirit of the beast," the creative "spirit of life from God," or the "Holy Spirit" of revelation. Any attempt to argue from the fact that the application of the same word to man and to God indicates a similarity of nature is absurd. God is a being, and so is the meanest of his creatures. God is a spirit, and so are we, even the worst of us; the same term is applied indiscriminately to all the creation of God wherein is the "breath of lives," of which you spoke.

An argument based on a similar use of terms looks to the ordinary "grounding" a most unanswerable one; it has the appearance of mathematical accuracy or geometrical precision, but it has nothing in it, and the only wonder is that after being exposed as it has so many times, the legerdemain is not more readily understood and appreciated.

A concordance will show the various and often diverse uses of the word spirit. True it is not interchangeable with soul, as you remark, but that does not by any means "fix" it as indicating a part of God as some would have us believe. As to man possessing a "triple life," I do not suppose you credit such an idea yourself in the ordinary sense, it certainly must be in a theological, pickwickian or other sense. All that a man hath he will readily give for one life.

You started in your discourse with a very clear conception of your subject, insomuch as you spoke of the frame of man being animated by the spirit of life from God producing another something, the soul, or personality. Your illustration of the gas and fire producing light, was good. But when the fire goes out the light goes out; don't forget that. "If He withdraw his spirit and his breath all flesh shall perish together, and man return to dust." True the lamp may be rekindled, but the testimony of all the prophets and apostles goes to show that in the meanwhile at least it is blown "black out," all the commentators and Reverend Fathers to the contrary notwithstanding.

The idea that man and beast or still more beastial men possess a part of the being of the Great Creator in their persons in some manner or other is too absurd. True in him and through him and to him are all things, by his creative spirit all things subsist; every tree, flower, insect, beast, man, but to suppose that he divides and portions himself out is simply monstrous, and could only be patiently heard from the pulpit, surrounded as it is by the halo of sanctity.

But sir, your error is not your own but is imparted by education, and is necessary to the support of many errors that have crept into Christian doctrine.

I am, Dear Sir, yours in love of truth.

J. F. GELLETLY.

Good Temper.

There's not a cheaper thing on earth,
Nor yet one half so dear;
'Tis worth more than diamonds set,
Or thousands gained a year.

It lends the boy a new delight,
'Tis virtue's firmest shield,
And adds more beauty to the night,
Than all the stars may yield.

A charm to banish grief away,
To snatch the brow from care;
Turn tears to smiles, make dullness gay,
Spread gladness everywhere.

And yet 'tis cheap as summer dew
That gems the lily's breast:
A talisman for love as true
As ever man possessed.

What may this wondrous spirit be
With power unheard before—
This charm, this bright divinity?
Good Temper! nothing more.

Good temper! 'tis the choicest gift
That woman, homeward brings,
And can the poorest peasant lift
To life—unknown to kings.

Our Security in Christ.

When I was in England a lady told me a sweet story illustrative of what it is to have Christ between us and everything else. She said she was wakened up by a very strange noise of pecking or something of the kind, and when she got up saw a butterfly flying backward and forward inside the window-pane in great freight, and outside a sparrow pecking and trying to get it. The butterfly did not see the glass, and expected every minute to be caught, and the sparrow did not see the glass and expected every minute to catch the butterfly, yet all the while that butterfly was as safe as if it had been two miles away, because of the glass between them.

So it is with Christians who are abiding in Christ. His presence is between them and every danger. I do not believe Satan understands about this mighty and invisible power that protects us, or else he would not waste his efforts by trying to get us. He must be like the sparrow—he does not see it; and Christians are like the butterfly—they do not see it, and so they are frightened and flutter about in terror; but all the while Satan cannot touch one who has the Lord Jesus Christ between itself and him.—Mrs. H. W. Smith.

Finding Christ.

We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews.

My Dear Young Friends:

Did you ever think how much it would mean to you to find Christ? Did you ever try to find him? Philip did. He had read about him in the Old Testament Scriptures, and he was longing to know him for himself; to see this promised Savior, who was to be so wise and good, that God would give him power to take away the sins of his people. So when he found him, he went at once to his friend Nathaniel with the good news, and they both together went to Jesus.

Now I want you to do just as Philip did. I want you to find Jesus—that means as a Savior, one who can deliver you from death—to become so familiar with what Moses and the prophets have said about him, that you will know just what he came into the world for—will feel that you are acquainted with him—that he is your Savior, that he died for you, and that he is soon going to be your King, and to take away all evil from this earth, and when you have found him for yourselves, have made him your friend, have come into him, and thus become God's children, as many young persons have lately done in Stark county, Ind., then I want you to go to your friends and telling them of the good news, bring them to Jesus.

Will you? Don't put off the good work, don't think you can live virtuous lives without striving, and without God. There is no salvation, no redemption out of Christ. Come to him. Remember your Creator now. Do the will of God now, and you will live forever more, in the kingdom of God.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

Honor thy Father and Mother.

Children obey your parents, in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment, with promise.—Eph. vi. 1, 2.

Dear children, did you know this loving command is for you? O, that you may feel the importance of obeying this divine injunction; keeping it ever in mind. You will not only reap the benefit of pure childish happiness, but when you are men and women, and those watchful, loving parents, are perhaps passed from your sight; what then will be the greatest honor?

I have obeyed my parents and my name shall never disgrace them. O, what an honor, that you, bearing the same name, should live to honor them, which will always be an unperishable honor to yourself.

If you would learn to obey, always consult your parents about all these little things that come up daily, and ask their advice; do not vainly imagine you know without their advice. Girls tell your mother all your little affairs. She has had trials, and knows best how to resist temptation.

You innocent little boys and girls may think you will never do anything to disgrace your parents. I do hope you will not, for whatever disgrace you bring upon them will be a wonderful stain on you. Right here is where I wish to warn you. The older you get, the more you will be tempted. Some people will coax you along with their children to this dance, and to that festival: then chewing tobacco, and card playing, drinking whisky, and infidelity. What next? Laugh at the heartaches of your affectionate parents. Ah, my dear children; never, never allow this heaviest of all weights to be traced upon your mother's brow. Listen to the proverb of Solomon: "A wise son maketh a glad father, but a foolish son the heaviness of his mother." How true! Again, "A wise son maketh a glad father, but a foolish man despiseth his mother."

I do not believe young men and women love their parents as they should who indulge in things they so much dislike. They may think they do, but there is something hidden; that confiding love is not there. Or if there are any who are straying away from that parental care, I beseech of you stop; yes stop, before another day is over; seek to obey your parents. How much more happy and healthy and better you will be.

There is no love equal to a mother's; while the world cares nothing for you but to lead you to ruin. They care nothing for that which will honor you.

AUNTIE.

The Snow Storm and the Lost Sheep.

The winter is upon us with its piercing winds, its ice and snow, calling up to the minds of the young folks visions of sleighrides, and many pleasant seasons with their sleds and skates. To the minds of the extremely poor, however, something of a different nature presents itself. Cold and hunger, combined with other privations and evils, do not lead many of them to anticipate much pleasure as they look at falling snow.

But children now-a-days know but little of such snows as people used to see seventy-five or a hundred years ago. Even since my remembrance the snow used to cover the ground early in the season, and remain until spring, each snowfall adding to the depth, until often the fences by the roadsides were hidden from view.

The farmers turned out with their teams and heavy sleds, and there was a busy time breaking roads. Often they were obliged to shovel through large drifts that seemed like small hills to us children, as we rode between them. Frequently the regular road was left, and one made through the open lots, to escape drifts. These snows in a short time became compact and hard, and a kind of crust formed, so one could walk upon it. When I was a child I was often drawn to school on a sled, by an older brother, riding far above fences and walls.

During the long winter evenings, my grandmother's room with its bright, cheerful fire on the hearth, was a very attractive place to me, and among the merry stories that she related to me, the following comes to my mind. The circumstances occurred many years ago, I do not know how long.

My grandfather was in the army during the revolutionary war, and it was before that—when he was quite a young man. He awoke one morning late in the fall, to find that a heavy snow had fallen during the night, and it was still snowing hard. His sheep had not yet been taken up, or brought into winter quarters, and it was no small task now to find and collect them; for in order to find a shelter from the storm they had hidden behind rocks, fences, bushes and trees. Finally they were all found and gathered in, with the exception of one sheep, a valuable one, which grandfather was not to lose. Besides, he did not like the thought of the poor dumb creature dying from hunger and exposure.

But the winter passed along, and the hay in the barn was all used. People in those days did not build barns as large as are now built, and much of the hay was stacked in the fields. With their large snow-shoes on they could go to these stacks and cut the hay from the upper part, the rest, to the depth of several feet, being under the snow.

One sunny day in March my grandfather was cutting hay from the stack on the south side, when he found the snow giving way under him, and he sank down into a large open place. He was a tall man, but he went down to his shoulders, and what do you think he found there? Nothing less than the lost sheep, alive and well, with some twin lambs by her. When the storm came on [illegible] shelter by pressing up against the hay stack, and there remained under the snow. She had plenty to eat all winter, and had made quite a little room into the stack, while her warm breath had melted the snow, so that she had room to move about somewhat. I do not know which was the most surprised by the sudden and singular visit, my grandfather, or the sheep, but he was certainly much pleased at his discovery and no doubt the sheep was very willing to be released from her wintry prison-house.

News Items.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 20.—General Ignatieff, Minister of the Interior, has informed a Jewish rabbi that the Government would neither encourage nor oppose the emigration of Jews.

According to Herr Richard Andree, there are 6,139,000 Jews in the world. Five-sixths live in Europe. Asia has 182,817. The greatest proportion is in Roumania, or twice as high as in Russia. Norway, he says, contains only thirty-four.

Certain land-owners in Florida and Texas have offered to donate land to Jewish refugees. This is a good scheme, and ought to be the beginning of important results.

Cincinnati has suffered much and will suffer more from the high water in the Ohio river. It is raining there about now, and the highest water ever known is likely to be experienced.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb. 18.—The break in the levee near Austin, Miss., is nearly three miles in length. Laconia Circle is under water. The greater portion of Helena, Ark., is overflowed to the depth of four feet.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Advices from Buenos Ayres represent that Colonel Nas, with 600 Peruvian soldiers, sacked the city of Pisco, which is about 130 miles south of Lima, Peru, killing 1,000 people, of whom 300 were foreigners, the French Consul being among the number. It is also reported that Nas was shot by Garcia Calderon's troops.

KEY-WORDS.

I beg leave to announce that my forth-coming book entitled "Key-Words," will not be ready before about the 10th of March. It is to contain about fifty pages more than the printer's first estimate, and this accounts for the delay. The price remains the same,—25 cts. a copy. Every believer of the Gospel of the Kingdom should obtain copies of "Key-Words" to lend out, as it is well suited for such missionary work, and ought to convince even our most obdurate opponents, as to the nature of the soul and spirit of man, the condition after death, the acquirement of immortality, etc. One of the features which render this book particularly useful for general circulation, is the fact that although its critical accuracy may challenge the scrutiny of Hebrew and Greek scholars of whatever creed, yet the Hebrew and Greek words are brought home in a plain and clear form to persons who cannot read any language but the English. OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 14, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 30, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy its book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again, * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'—H. ## SHE SLEPETH WELL.

BY ROXANA WINCH.

No sound may break her quiet slumber now,
No need for softened tread or voices hushed
To whisper's tone. No fear lest careless hand
Should lift the latch, or jar forgetfully
The door, or brush the rustling paper down.
She sleepeth well.

No fear of outside sounds, of storm or wind,
Or across window pane, or hail afar;
No dread of thundering trains, or peal
From the swift lightning flashing by.
No troubles mar her rest, nor dream of grief
Breaks in, nor can with heavy hand disturbe.
She sleepeth well.

Will Jesus come and call with trumpet voice
His ransomed ones, and opened graves give up
The dead, the slumbers undisturbed. O blessed rest!
The sleep of St. beloved! The night's repose,
And then the dawn, the life, the endless years!
She sleepeth well!

PAUL'S ADMONITION TO TIMOTHY.

Chapter Eight.

J. B. COX.

In examining this subject I have briefly referred to the Holy Scriptures which Paul admonished Timothy to study, and have shown that those Scriptures are perfect and convey to man the mind of God. And whatsoever God does, he manifests perfect order in all things. His order in creation, and redemption, are fully set forth in that word. I have also shown that the word of God has been greatly perverted in all ages from the time when the old serpent deceived our first parents, down to the present time, and then shown that this admonition was very important in building up the church of God. I therefore wish in this closing chapter to apply this admonition to ourselves, that we may be benefited thereby.

If it was necessary for Timothy to study to show himself approved unto God, is it not also necessary for evangelists now to do the same? A man will never make a good workman as an evangelist except he understands how to divide the word of truth aright.

This is the great difficulty among the sects: they propose to the people to teach them in the word of truth, but their knowledge of that word is so limited that they cannot rightly divide it, but bring in profane and vain babblings, and "they increase unto more ungodliness," and the word of God becomes a mystery: they often teach the law of Moses for the law of Jesus the Christ. "And consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness:" but they are "proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness. 1 Tim. vi. 3-5. "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." 2 Tim. iii. 13.

Let us therefore "try the spirits (teachers) whether they are of God." 1 John iv. 1.

We have a noble example given unto us, by Ezra the scribe, when "all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate: and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord commanded to Israel. And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding; upon the first day of the seventh month. And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate, from the morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand, and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law. And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; .... And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people, and when he opened it, all the people stood up. And Ezra blessed the Lord the great God," etc. Then Ezra and those with him "caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place, so they read in the book in the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading" Neh. viii. 1-8.

This is what we need now-a-days. A little less elocution, and a little more expounding of the word. Ezra and the Levites did not propose to deliver an eloquent self-made oration, to the people, on this occasion, but, to expound unto them, those things that God had made known unto the children of Israel, through Moses, or, to teach them how to live obedient to the law of Moses, for they "read the law and gave the sense," (or meaning).

Would it not be well for the theologians of the present time to make themselves well acquainted with the law of Christ? that they could read it unto the people, and give the sense, or explain the law of Jesus unto them, instead of dabbling in vain and profane babblings, or teaching those things they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake, and thus deceive the people?

Why should we be surprised if infidelity increases in our midst, while such dogmatical teaching flows so fluently from beneath the proud spires?

When John the Baptist was about to introduce Jesus the Redeemer into the world, he "preached in the wilderness of Judea, saying, Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," or, "Reform ye, for the Royal Majesty of the heavens has approached.' Matt. iii. 2.—Emphatic Diaglott.

When Jesus began his ministry he also preached the same thing. See Matt. iv. 17.

And when Jesus sent out his disciples to the lost sheep of the house of Israel: they were to go and preach the same doctrine. Matt. x. 7.

So when Jesus had finished his work, and was raised from the dead, he charged his disciples to go "and make disciples of all nations." Matt. xxviii. 19.—New Version.

"And they went forth, and preached everywhere." Mark xvi. 20.

On the day of Pentecost, Peter preached, saying, "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him, both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." Acts ii. 36.

And Stephen fell a martyr because he so boldly preached to the men, brethren, and fathers, the things concerning the Just One, whom they had been the betrayers and murderers. Acts vii. 52.

"Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them .... But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. Acts viii. 4; v. 12.

And when Paul was called out to be an apostle, "Straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." Acts ix. 20.

He who preached Jesus and the resurrection. Acts xvii. 18.

Paul had a different manner of preaching to the Jews, to that which is common among the clergy in this our day. For when Paul and Silas came to Thessalonica, we read, "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the (Old Testament) Scriptures, Opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead: and this Jesus, whom I preach unto you is Christ." Acts xvii. 2, 3.

"And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." Acts xviii. 4.

And when Paul was at Rome a prisoner, he was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. We read, "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came unto him, Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xxviii. 30-31.

The Acts of the apostles as well as the letters written by them, all show that the gospel of Christ, the good tidings of the kingdom of God was fully preached by them, according to the instructions they received from Jesus himself, who first set them a noble example.

Therefore I ask why so much preaching? why not less preaching and more teaching?

The sects may need much preaching to build up their sectarian orders. But as Sectarianism is not of God, the church of God should not be governed by them. Paul says, "From such turn away."

Inasmuch as the gospel has been fully preached, why not adopt Ezra's plan, that the people may understand?

Now what is the discipline of the church of God? Is it not to instruct, to govern, to educate, to regulate, to chastise, to reform?

So Paul educated Timothy and Titus that they should be able to set the church in order. Then Paul gave special instructions to the elders of the church at Ephesus, that they should feed the church of God, over which the Holy Spirit had made them overseers.

How does the Holy Spirit make us overseers?

Answer—By the word of God.

"Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, thus the Spirit of God is in his word, and as we educate ourselves in the word of God, we become partakers of the Spirit of God. So we see the importance of a thorough knowledge of God's word.

What is the meaning of Paul when he says, "Feed the church of God?" Is it simply to talk to the members about Jesus and the kingdom of God?

This is good, for we cannot educate them aright without it. But is this all? Certainly not. If the church of God is properly organized there will be more or less in it who are poor in this world's goods. It is true that many people are poor, because of their own indifference, but this is not the case with all. Jesus said, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." Again, "The poor you always have with you."

There were many poor in the church when seven men were appointed to attend to tables. A church organization is a family, the elder or overseer and the deacons stand as the head of that family, therefore, the wants of the body should be known to the officers, their needs should be supplied, the church should work for one another's interest, and not let any suffer. Paul set an example, for he said, "Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered to my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have showed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts xx. 34, 35.

Let no man seek his own, but each his neighbor's good." 1 Cor. x. 24.—New Version.

The church must be educated to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, then it would soon become a home for the poor. Wherever we see members of the church of God uniting with outside orders, such as the Odd Fellows, or Free Masons, we may be assured that there is a wrong, either in the member, or in the church, perhaps in both. Is any member sick, let him be visited; is any in distress, let him receive a benefit from the church fund, which should be kept up, by laying by on the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered us. It should be used by the deacons, at the discretion of the elders.

A Disciple preacher once said to me: "Under such a state of things many would come in for the sake of their bread and butter."

But Paul failed not to guard us on this point. For he said, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received. For yourselves know how ye ought to imitate us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; neither did we eat bread for naught at any man's hand, but in labor and travail, working night and day, that we might not burden any of you; not because we have not the right, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you, that ye should imitate us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you. If any man will not work neither let him eat. For we hear of some that walk among you disorderly, that work not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such, we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed." 2 Thess. iii. 6-14.—New Version.

So Paul has guarded the church against impostors.

"Honor widows that are widows indeed." 1 Tim. v. 3.

"Visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." James i. 27.

These things we must observe. For Paul says, "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house (church), he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." 1 Tim. v. 8.

So to establish order in the church, Peter said, "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Peter v. 1-4.

He also admonishes the younger to submit themselves unto the elder. "Yea all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." Verses 5, 6.

Paul also exhorted the Thessalonians, that they "Study to be quiet, and to do their own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you: That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing." 1 Thess. iv. 11, 12.

So when we are free from the yoke of sectarian oppression, we can by industry and perseverance, help one another in time of need, and so fulfill the law of Christ. For Jesus invited us, saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor (work) and are heavy laden (oppressed), and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls (yourselves). For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Matt. xi. 28-30.

Thus we observe that Paul's admonition to Timothy is very applicable to us that we may be approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Much more can be said concerning the teaching the gospel, and of the discipline of the church, but I trust I have said sufficient to lead us to a closer examination of the Scriptures.

"And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Heb. x. 24, 25.

So in conclusion, I say, let us study God's Holy Word more closely, and let us all observe the injunction of Paul to the Corinthians, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. i. 10.

When we study the word of God, it is best to clear our minds of all sectarian traditions, that with a simple, childlike earnestness, we may learn God's will concerning us, and that we may intelligently establish a character that shall be acceptable unto God.

It is well to study that word in subjects, for thereby we can obtain a clearer knowledge of it, if we desire to learn of the nature of man, select such portions as treat upon his formation, his fall, his destiny, then notice the promises made to him, and whether conditionally or not.

The subject of the church should also be studied according to the same order. Also the kingdom of God, and great care should be taken in the study of this subject, lest we confound the church with the kingdom. Much trouble has been caused in the Disciple church upon this subject, because of careless study, there are some Scriptures that are very hard to reconcile if taken according to the Authorized Version.

For example, Luke xvii. 21. "For, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." And Col. i. 13, "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son."

The way these Scriptures read they conflict with each other, because the lesser can never contain the greater, therefore, if we are in the kingdom of God, the kingdom of God cannot be within us. Therefore a wrong exists, and the New Version does not help us in this case. If we observe who Jesus was speaking to, we will see that the expression does not agree with the word of God in general, for certainly if it is possible for any persons to contain the kingdom of God, it would not be the Pharisees. Therefore, except we can find some other translation that will make the matter more plain, it is best to take the general tenor of the Holy Scriptures.

But the Emphatic Diaglott gives us a key that will unlock the mystery. It reads in Luke xvii. 20, 21, "And having been asked by the Pharisees, when God's kingdom was coming, he answered them, and said, The kingdom of God comes not with outward show: nor shall they say, Behold, here! or there! for behold, God's royal majesty is among you" (Jesus the King is among you). And in Col. i. 13, we read, "Who delivered us from the dominion of darkness, and changed us for the kingdom of the Son of his love."

So there is perfect harmony in the word of God, when properly understood. Let us then study the word of God very closely, that we may come to a more perfect knowledge of the truth, and abound in the work of the Lord.

Then can we say with Peter, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Peter i. 3-5.

BRIEF VARIETIES.

"TRUTH"—WHAT?

Its import is "not hidden," and implies revealed, laid open, and made known. This word understood, lets in a flood of light. Isaiah notices "the veil over all nations." Chap. xxv. A veil is also over Israel; and to be taken away on their reception of Jesus their Messiah. 2 Cor. iii. 13-18.

Thus Jesus is "the truth"—the revealer—unveiler of God, love and good will to men." John iii. 7-20; Luke ii. 30, 32.

The rejection of his word as to his second coming, the resurrection of the just and unjust, his blessed reign and the restitution of all things spoken: insures profound darkness, death and all our woe. John iii. 36. J. B. C.

"BLESSED"—ITS IMPORT.

This word blessed belongs to the humblest believer, nine times over. Matt. v. 1-11. Any one of them possessed would bless the reader, but the entire number makes him blessed and nine times more blessed—in, perhaps, geometrical proportion.

This word, like truth so far (a-lutheia) is compounded of an and ker-makarios—ma, (another word for) not and ker—"lot, chance, fate or fortune." The word was applied to the Immortal. Hence, the makarios (plural)—the Immortals were the opposite of the Thanatoi, the mortals. Then, on believing in Jesus, those who are now mortal and subject at best to "fate, fortune or chance"—which is all uncertainty—ending in "death"—"pass from death to life." John v. 24. They pass from their low state, "subject to vanity," (Rom. viii. 20,) up to the assurance of "life and immortality with God—as brought to light in the gospel."

We pass, by becoming Christians, from the blind notion of "chance, fate or fortune," (the state of the heathen) to the knowledge of the living God; revealed in Christ—reconciling the word unto himself.

This blessedness centres in an intelligent turning from darkness to light—from the power of Satan unto God—the forgiveness of sins, and the inheritance of the saints. Acts xxvi. 18. The seven beatitudes (verses 3-9) are the seven-fold gifts of God in grace through faith in Jesus; and then, two more are superadded, in grace, to consummate the whole and crown the Christian overcomer with the "honor and glory of immortality."

How few Christians know their high calling! J. B. C.

THE SPIRIT OF MOSES,

As given to the seventy elders (Num. xi. 25), seems mysterious to all who have not the primal truth. But it is easy: for he who gave "seed to the sower and still multiplieth the seed sown" to our husbandmen is he who gave the Spirit to Moses; and then multiplied (diffused) that same spirit to the seventy elders. Jesus' gave five loaves and two fishes to his disciples; and then his blessing amplified them to feed and fill "5,000 men, beside women and children." Matt. xiv. So, as "the Father sent Jesus," he sent the blessed twelve—he gave them the Holy Spirit, and now that self-same Spirit is given to all "them who believe." Acts ii. 38; iv. 31; x. 31; Eph. iv. 3-13. "With him is the residue of the Spirit;" he gives it to "them who ask." Luke xi. 13. J. B. C.

PERSONAL—BROTHER WEETHEE.

Of late, and all along, the articles of Brother Weethee have impressed me with their intelligence and value. Brother Weethee has done and is doing good service, which deserves the heartiest commendation. J. B. C.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD,

Like Joseph in Egypt; Daniel and his three co-ordinate heroes in Babylon—or Cornelius, the Roman centurion, were doubtless adjusted somewhat to their political station. Yet others who feared God in Israel, and living in entirely diverse stations, might mistake the mind of the Lord our Judge if they took their personal standard, or that prevailing around them, for their estimate of such public characters. St. Paul seems to defer all such matters of judgment, both for himself and others, altogether to the good Lord, who has ordained "the powers that be." Rom. xiii.

Pardon me, if I add, that to my feeble apprehension President Garfield, like Cyrus, was one of the grandest men of our race. Hence, I wait on the Lord to understand this chapter of history, in which he appears so prominent. J. B. C.

Brevities.

The Karaites—the Jewish sect which renounces the Talmud and other Jewish legends—have come into prominence in connection with the Jewish outrages in Russia. A recent traveler who is well acquainted with the Karaites says that they number at least ten thousand persons. Many reside in Moscow, although they are not to be met with in St. Petersburg.

Experiments have been made with an electric lamp for locomotives on the system of Messrs. Sedlaczel and Wikulill on the North of France Railway. The lamp is placed in front of the engine so as to light the permanent way. The experiments have shown that it burns steadily even when the train goes at express speed, that the light does not interfere with the visibility or distinctive color of the signals, and that neither the engine drivers nor officials of the train carrying the light nor of other approaching trains are dazzled by it. The drivers are able to see the line distinctly for a distance of 300 yards ahead.

One of the hardest woods in existence is that of the desert ironwood tree, which grows in the dry washes along the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Its specific gravity is nearly the same as that of lignum vitæ, and it has a black heart so hard, when well seasoned, that it will turn the edge of an axe and can scarcely be cut with a well tempered saw. In burning it gives out an intense heat, and charcoal made from it is hardly second to anthracite.

A Turkish superstition has it that when the mosque of St. Sophia falls in ruins, the Ottoman Empire will also be destroyed. A recent examination of the old mosque reveals the fact that it may collapse at any moment. It may not be in verification of the superstition, but the empire is in a most dilapidated state, an insurrection has just broken out in Arabia, and another of considerable proportions prevails on the northwestern frontier, with at least a possibility that the warlike spirit may cross the Turkish line. The fall of the mosque, should it occur, might not be without effect on the fate of the empire.

Russia and Roumania are the only remaining European States in which Jewish disabilities now prevail. In some parts of Asia, however, and especially in the Plowory Land, the children of Israel still lie under a prohibitory law which excludes them from participation in any civil rights whatsoever, and prevents them from exercising any trade or profession in the character of Chinese subjects. Jews, however, have established themselves in all the Chinese ports under the protection of different European flags, and some of the wealthiest Jewish firms are on the best of terms with the provincial authorities, who constantly give them the preference over their Christian and Buddhist competitors for Government contracts.

Mr. S. B. Evans is satisfied that the same race built the prehistoric mounds found in Mexico and the United States. He bases his belief on the alleged facts of a close resemblance between the construction of these remains, of the similarity of the implements employed, of the burial of the dead being exactly alike, and of the close likeness of the skulls found in the tombs of the mound-building period, whatever the locality may be. The Astecs were not the mound-builders, because he holds they had no tendency through religious or other motives in that direction, and the specimens of pottery found in the mounds and pyramids could not have been made by the Astecs.

Prof. W. Grylls Adams, of King's College, in a lecture recently delivered propounded the following theory of the aurora: He assumes the sun to be a magnet, and, as such, to affect the earth's magnetism. Thus the earth's atmosphere is drawn towards the sun, and the friction produced generates a supply of positive electricity in the air, and of negative electricity in the globe. When the air is charged up to the discharging point, a gradual transfer of positive electricity from the poles toward the equator takes place, and auroral phenomena result, varying in accordance with the tenuity of the region and with the temperature and the moisture of the air.

Amelia B. Edwards writes to the Academy as follows, in regard to the great find at Thebes: "An English traveler presented Professor Maspero with photographs from the first pages of the funereal papyrus of Pinotem II., and stated that he had purchased the original document through a Theben Arab, named Abd-er-rasoul. Hereupon Professor Maspero, in the month of March, 1881, went to Thebes, his principal object being to discover the tomb from which that papyrus had been taken. He arrested Abd-er-rasoul; tried persuasion, threats, rewards, imprisonment, and all in vain. Finally, being called to Europe, he released the man; offered a reward of £800 for the discovery of the secret; and left Herr Emil Brugsch full authority to act for him in the event of any information being received. Scarcely had he embarked before a brother of Abd-er-rasoul went to the Governor of Kenoh (the chief town of the province), claimed the reward, and gave up the facts. The Governor telegraphed to Cairo, and the Khedive at once despatched Herr Emil Brugsch to Thebes to bring away the treasure. The energy and skill with which this difficult task was accomplished by Herr Emil Brugsch, assisted by Ahmed Effendi Kemal, have been publicly acknowledged in the warmest manner by Professor Maspero."

The YOUTHS' EXAMINER

C. H. JONES, Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

MONTHLY. - - EIGHT PAGES.
SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER YEAR.

The following is placed at the head of the Editorial columns:

The Youths' Examiner will be devoted to the instruction of our children, in those branches that will not only enlarge their intellectual faculties but strengthen and build up their moral and religious natures. Its exposition of Bible topics will be based upon what is known as the literal view of the prophecies. The moral nature of man, the reign of Christ and his saints on the earth, etc., etc. The doctrine of the atonement, and life only through Christ will be plainly set forth, and every effort be made to bring these great Bible truths before them in a language both simple and truthful. Easy lessons in science and other important branches will from time to time be given, accompanied with suitable illustrations.

It contains some stories, but only those that contain practical truth and information.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS MADE WITH SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

As long as the back numbers hold out subscribers will receive the paper from October, 1881, to January, 1883.

Address C. H. JONES, 190 & 192 Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or orders sent to A. B. Underwood, Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., will receive prompt attention.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 1, 1882. NO. 9.

THE RESTITUTION.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three new subscribers at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the doctrine "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

THE SOUL OF MAN—No. 5.

BY H. H. HALL.

Having shown, as I think, in my former articles that neshamah, rendered "breath," and applied to both man and beast (Gen. vii. 22; Deut. xx. 16), and ruah and pneuma, rendered "breath, spirit, air and wind," are never employed in the Scriptures to denote a being within a being, or, "a tenant" within a tenement. I now propose to show that the same is also true of the term "soul."

"The Hebrew word nephesh is found in the Old Testament seven hundred and fifty-two times," as we are informed, "being translated soul four hundred and seventy-five times; person, or creature, and other words of like meaning, one hundred and three times, being applied to man and beast; life, or words of like import one hundred and twenty-four times, and applied indiscriminately to the life of man and beast; mind, or some of its passions fifty times." When nephesh is rendered soul it always means either (1) a physical being; or (2) the life of a being, or (3) the mind of a being, but never signifies a being within a being."

We will now give a few examples of the use of nephesh which will show we are correct in our statement of its trifold meaning. The first time it is employed by any inspired writer as applied to man is in Gen. ii. 7, where it is said: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became [not received, but became] a living (nephesh) soul." Here then with its first occurrence it signifies a physical being called "man." Again, Gen. xlvi. 26-27, it is said: "All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, came out of his loins [these could not be immortal souls, as we have shown in a former article], besides Jacob's sons' wives, all the souls were threescore and six." "And all the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls." Ex. i. 5. "He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his (nephesh) life. Prov. xiii. 3. "A righteous man regardeth the (nephesh) life of his beast." xii. 10. "The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing, but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat." v. 4. This soul cannot be an "immortal" soul most surely! The inspired psalmist of Israel being sick and troubled in mind in regard to the triumph of his enemies in case of his death, invites the sixth psalm, in which he uses the following language of prayer: "Have mercy upon me, O Lord; for I am weak: O Lord, heal me; for my bones are vexed. My soul is also sore vexed. Return, O Lord, deliver my soul [from death]: oh save me for thy mercies' sake. For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in (sheol) the grave ["hell" where "the rich man" was buried, and whom Solomon says, there is no knowledge, nor wisdom] who shall give thee thanks." "For my soul is full of trouble: and my life draweth nigh unto (sheol) the grave." Ps. lxxxviii. 3. "The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter." Gen. xxxiv. 8. "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David. 1 Sam. xviii. 1. "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing."—of man and beast.

Now if the reader will add the term immortal, or immaterial, in accordance with common pulpit and Christian usage, to the Bible word soul as it occurs in the above quoted passages that relate to man, the life of man, the mind of man, and the life of beast, he will certainly see the impropriety and absurdity, if not the culpability of thus adding to the Word of God. He will find not only immortal men, and immortal souls of men, but immortal souls "of every living thing."

We will now show from the Scriptures that the nephesh—soul, so far from being immortal as so commonly believed, can be torn in pieces; can be strangled; can, does and will die; will be destroyed, and cease to exist. King David (Ps. vii. 1-2,) in praying for deliverance from his enemies says: "Save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me, lest he tear my soul like a lion, rendering it in pieces, while there is none to deliver." "And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them." Josh. xi. 11; also x. 28. "And Samson said, Let my soul (margin) die with the Philistines." Judges xvi. 30. "Let my soul die (margin) the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Num. xxiii. 10. "So that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life." Job. vii. 15. "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence." Psa. lxxviii. 50. If it be said of the above and similar passages that the persons are meant, it only proves what we advocate, namely, that the whole man dies; for remember, that, as nephesh, the soul-word is therein used, the soul cannot be excepted in the death referred to, and it certainly follows, therefore, that as the soul dies it cannot be immortal.

But the soul not only dies, but goes into sheol, the grave, or hell; for it must be remembered that sheol is rendered hell thirty-one times, grave thirty times, pit three times, and that this is all the hell there is in the Old Testament, or anywhere else for the torment of "immortal souls;" for in this "hell" "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom," says Solomon. In speaking of the wicked the Psalmist says (xlix 12, 14, 15): "Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.... Like sheep they are laid in (sheol) the grave; death shall feed on them.... But God will redeem my soul from the power of (sheol) the grave; for he shall receive me." Again he says in the same Psalm—"For the redemption of their soul [they that trust in their wealth" etc., verse 6,] is precious, and it ceaseth for ever." Here is an explicit statement that if the soul is not redeemed "it ceaseth forever," or ceases to exist. "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of (sheol) the grave? But how do the theologians answer this last question of the psalmist? If it is not in substance as follows: "Why David! that is an irrelevant question: for do you not know that the "soul"—the immortal, immaterial soul never goes into "the grave" at death, but goes to God to be judged, and either remains in heaven where it is judged, or, is thrust down to hell where it is tormented until the day of judgment, and is then recalled from hell to be reunited to the body, and judged again, and if no mistakes is found in the first judgment is sent back to hell to endure unending torture? With all due reverence, David, for you as the inspired of God, and the sweet singer of Israel, we think you are mistaken in saying the 'soul' when it is only the body that goes into the grave."

But David, not expecting to be thus contradicted by the friends of God, goes on further to say, upon his deliverance from death (xxx. 3-9): "O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me. O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should [not go up to heaven? O no, but should] not go down to the pit.... What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?" "For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" And Hezekiah, who had been appointed unto death, but through his prayer had his life prolonged fifteen years, employs similar language to David in reference to that event. He says (Isa. xxxviii. 18-19.): "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth." "For the dead praise not the Lord," says the psalmist, "neither any that go down into silence." Let the reader remember that, in all these passages as well as all others which relate to the death of man, the soul is not exempt from the death spoken of, as the explicit declaration in the Scriptures quoted is that the soul dies and goes into the grave. Isaiah in his prophesy of the death of the Messiah says that "He poured out his soul unto death;" and Christ himself, says,—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." That Christ died—soul and body if you please—and was unconscious in sheol just as Lazarus was whom he had raised from the dead, is further proven from the following words of David which Peter at Pentecost applies to Christ (Ps. xvi. 9-10): "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope: For thou will not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."

The minds of King James' translators were so full of the doctrine of soul-torment in hell, received through the church of Rome, that to us they sometimes seem to overstep the bounds of common sense in giving to the version a coloring—not warranted by the original—in accordance with their own cherished dogmas. And this is particularly true of the above Scripture. For they send Christ into the same hell of torment they did "the rich man" in the parable; and for what purpose does the reader suppose? not for punishment certainly, but to preach "to the spirits in prison," with the view, I suppose, of saving some of them from the torments of hell! Protestants then, as now, had not shaken off the old papal dogma of soul-torment in hell: but what intelligent Protestant now believes that Christ "descended into hell" to preach to the lost souls of men?

But the Scriptures not only teach the death of the soul and the unconsciousness of man between death and the resurrection, but they also teach that the wicked shall die "the second death"—that the soul of the wicked shall die. God says by the prophet (Ezek. xviii. 4.): "Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die." That this death of the soul refers to "the second death" of the wicked after their resurrection, is made most palpable by the whole chapter, and especially so by the following emphatic statement in the 26th and 27th verses: "When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them [being the first death]; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die [the second death]. Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doth which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." We learn from the chapter and from these verses (1) that man dies the first, or temporal death on account of Adam's sin, and (2) that he will die "the second death" on account of his own sin. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Hence he that exhorted in the last two verses of the chapter as follows:—"Cast away from you all your transgressions.... and make you a new heart and a new spirit [new affections and new disposition]: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord your God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." And Christ said to this same rebellious people, "Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life."

While it is true that theologians are compelled to admit that the penalty of God's law is death—death to man and death to the soul of man, their unscriptural theory forces them into the untenable position of saying that "death" don't mean "extinction of life" in man, but life in misery, that "perish" don't mean "to die, to cease to have existence," but to live on in torment; that "destruction" don't mean annihilation, but preservation in hell-fire. And all this under the most preposterous assumption that the penalty of the law is "spiritual death." But what is spiritual death? We are told, but not in the Bible, that it is to be separated from God and holy beings, and kept alive and tormented without hope and without end in the regions of black despair. Suppose after a judge of one of our courts had passed the sentence of death upon a condemned murderer, and that upon a certain day he should be hanged by the neck until dead, the sheriff without any authority, should interpret the penalty death as our theologians do the penalty of God's law which they admit to be death, and instead of erecting a gallows to hang the murderer, he came to the conclusion that the penalty and sentence don't mean literal death which is extinction of life, but spiritual death which is separation—misery—torment; and accordingly he shuts up his prisoner in a hut, filthy "purgatory" and proceeds to torment him in the most excruciating manner, but in such a way as to prolong his miserable life as long as possible so as to meet the full demand of the law! What would the people think of such interpretation of law and penalty as this, and of such punishment by slow torture? They would know such a sheriff to be either crazy or a demon in human shape. Even Savages would cry out—kill the murderer and end his misery. Is man more merciful than God? And yet by just such interpretations of the sacred Scriptures, God is presented to the world of mankind as a vindictive and unjust Being. And the effect of all this, as I have good reason to know, is to drive thinking persons into skepticism and outright infidelity. For, you can never harmonize the character of God as a merciful, loving Father, with the dogma of endless misery.

But what is the evidence that God has announced the penalty of his law in equivocal language? One would suppose the righteous Judge of all the earth would be, at least, as particular as our law-makers are, not only to state in plain words the demands of the law, but the penalty of the law. And when we consider the vast difference between God's law and the laws of man as to the momentous results depending between them in their violation, it would be charging God of trifling with the immortal and paramount interests of men to say that God in announcing the penalty of his law does not mean what he says—that when he says "The soul that sinneth it shall die," he means that it shall live for ever in misery; when he says by Peter that the wicked "as natural brute beasts are made and taken to be destroyed, shall utterly perish in their own corruption" he does not mean they shall be destroyed, but preserved in torment, he does not mean they "shall utterly perish in their own corruption," but shall continue to live incorruptible and immortal; for that which is incorruptible is immortal. Hence Paul says (Gal. vi. 8): "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting"—zoen aionion—endless animated existence. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." And so we might quote two hundred passages of Scripture showing most clearly that the wicked will die "the second death," "be consumed," "devoured," "destroyed," "destroyed together" and "destroyed for ever;" that they shall be burned up as "chaff," as "tares," as "withered branches," as "stubble fully dry," burned up "root and branch"—passages that contain not only the above most significant words and phrases, but others of like import, all of which not only prove most clearly that the wicked in the end will die a literal death, but tell how and by what means they will die such a death; how they will be destroyed, and that just as plainly as in the case referred to of a condemned murderer who was not only sentenced to death, but was told by the judge how he should suffer death, namely, by being hanged by the neck until dead. And our theologians and clergymen can no more explain away the burning, consuming, destroying words employed by Christ and the inspired writers of the Bible, in declaring the means and stating the circumstances connected with the final punishment and "end" of the wicked, by their special pips of "spiritual death" than could the sheriff explain away the gallows, the rope, and the being hanged by the neck until dead by spiritualizing where he believed this very plain sentence meant that the culprit should be "separated from the good" and shut up and tortured.

But let us come back to the question: where is the evidence that "spiritual death" is the penalty of God's law? We answer that there is not in all the Bible one passage, one sentence, or one word that even intimates such an absurdity. We know it is claimed, however, that the words of Paul (Eph. ii. 1-5.) give license—to what? why license to destroy the true significations of the terms death, perish, destroy, etc., which occur so many hundreds of times in the Bible and are applied indiscriminately to man, beast, and every living thing. The apostle says: "And you Hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. .... Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." Now let the reader, if he can, find in these words the least hint of penalty for sin either here or hereafter! Paul simply states a fact, namely, that these Ephesian brethren had been in a state of sin—not of punishment for having sinned, as is claimed, and as it would be if their sinful state were a state of punishment—but had been quickened by God and "raised up" from their sinful state, which the apostle calls "dead in trespasses and sin," "and made to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." The word dead is here used by the apostle in a figurative sense just as it is often applied to a criminal who has been condemned to death. In the eyes of the law he is said to be a dead man—dead to his friends and dead to the world. But being thus dead is not the penalty death to which he has been sentenced. So in the case of the sinner against God who "believeth not," he is "dead in trespasses and sins"—dead in the eyes of God's law, and is "already condemned" Christ says; but being thus dead and thus condemned is no more the penalty "death" which the sinner is to suffer in the day of judgment than is the being "dead" of the condemned murderer before he is executed and deprived of life.

In conclusion I affirm, then, without the fear of contradiction that spiritual death is not, as alleged, the penalty of God's law for the reasons already given and for the following additional reasons:—

1. Because it is a state of sin from which God not only exhorts, but commands the sinner to escape. But how can he escape therefrom if he has been judicially condemned to such state, as he has been, if indeed spiritual death be a penalty? God could not and would not thus condemn the sinner to such a state, and at the same time require him to forsake it when he knew it impossible. And yet this is the attitude in which God is presented by those who affirm that spiritual death is a penalty. Spiritual death then, is the state of sin and not a state of punishment for having sinned.

2. All Christians, so far as I know, not only admit, but affirm that Christ suffered the penalty of the law in the sinners' stead. The penalty cannot, therefore, be spiritual death because Christ was never "dead in trespasses and sins"—never suffered such a death. But he did suffer a literal death of soul and body on the cross for the sins of the world. Literal death, which is the extinction of life is, therefore, the penalty of God's law.

In our next paper we will notice the use of the term psuiker, the soul and life-word of the New Testament, and show that the word and its uses afford no more evidence of its being an entity in man than does the term nephesh of the Old Testament, which we have clearly shown can and does die and go into the grave.

Twenty-Eighth Chapter of Ezekiel. (Ur.) Translated from the LXX. by Charles Gardner, Chicago, Ill.

And the word of the Lord became unto me saying: Son of man say also unto the rulers of Tyro, thus saith the Lord, because thy heart hath become uplifted and thou hast said, I am a god I dwell in the dwelling-place of a god in the heart of Sea, but art really a man and not a god and hast allowed thy heart to be like a god's heart. Art thou wiser than Daniel? Or did not wise men instruct thee in their intelligence? In thy intelligence and thought didst thou originate thine own ability and the gold and silver that is in thy treasuries. In the use of thy great intelligence and thy commerce thou hast multiplied thy ability: Thy heart hath become uplifted in the use of thy ability. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Since thou hast allowed thy heart to become like the heart of a god, as a penalty for this, lo, I am bringing upon thee scourges from the nations, and they will make bare their swords against thee and against the beauty of thy intelligence, and they will scatter thy beauty to destruction, and they will trod thee down, and thou shalt die wounded in the heart of the Sea. Proclaiming wilt thou say, I am a god in the sight of those who destroy thee though thou art a man and not a god? In the midst of a multitude of uncircumcised ones shalt thou perish at the hands of foreigners, because I have spoken it saith the Lord.

And the word of the Lord became unto me saying, Son of man, take up a lamentation over the ruler of Tyro and say unto him, thus saith a Lord, Lord. In the luxury of the paradise of God thou didst come to pass, an expressed seal of a conformative process and a crown of beauty. With every useful stone embounded. Sardine and topax, and emerald, and anthracite, and saphire, and jasper, and silver, and gold, and red amber, and agate, and amethyst, and chrysolite, and beryl and onyx, and thou didst fill thy treasuries with gold and thy store-houses for thy use. For the day that thou wast erected by the agency of the Cherub, I placed you on a sacred mountain of God: thou didst come to pass in the midst of shining stones; thou didst come to pass blameless in thy days, from the day that thou wast created until iniquities were found in thee. From the magnitude of thy commerce thou didst fill the chambers of thy transgression, and thou didst sin in error and wast driven wounded from God's mountain; and the Cherub led thee out from the midst of the shining stones, thy heart became uplifted on account of thy beauty; thy intelligence became corrupted in the midst of thy beauty. On account of a multitude of thy sins of error have I cast thee down upon the earth; in the presence of kings have I decreed thee to become a warning example. On account of the multitude of thy sins of error and of the iniquities of thy commerce I abominated thy consecrated offerings, and I will bring fire out from thy midst. This will consume thee, and I will give thee to be ashes upon thy land in the presence of all those who see thee; and all those who know thee well among the nations will sigh over thee. A destruction hast thou become and thou wilt never again be for ever. And the word of the Lord became to me saying, Son of man set thy face firmly against Sidon and prophesy against it and say, thus saith the Lord, lo, I am against thee O Sidon, and I shall have been glorified in thee and thou shalt know that I am the Lord, when I have executed judgments in thee, I shall have been sanctified in thee. Blood and death will be in thy broad streets, and those who have been wounded with swords in thee will fall round about thee and they will know why I am Lord, and there will no longer be in the house of Israel a throne of bitterness and a briar of woe by reason of those who are around about them having dishonored them, and they will know that I am Lord. Thus saith a Lord, Lord: and I will gather together Israel from out the nations where they have been scattered and I shall have become sanctified in them in the sight of the royal people and the nations; and they will dwell upon their land, which I gave unto my bondservant Jacob, and they will dwell upon it in hope and they will build houses and they will plant vineyards and they will dwell in hope when I shall execute judgment on all those who dishonor them round about them and they will know that I their God and the God of their fathers am Lord.

PROPHETIC UTTERANCES.

From the lofty watch-towers of Divine speculation, from that moral and spiritual height which raised them above the rest of the ancient world, the prophets saw the rise and fall of other nations, long before it was visible to those nations themselves. They were the first in all antiquity to perceive that the old East was dead; they celebrated its obsequies in advance of the dissolution which they saw to be inevitable. They were the great tragic chorus of the awful drama that was unfolding itself in the Eastern World. As each independent tribe or monarchy was swallowed up in the universal empire of Assyria, the seers of Judah watched the progress of the invader, and uttered their sublime funeral anthems over the greatness and prosperity of Moab and Ammon, Damascus and Tyre. And in those funeral laments and wide-reaching predictions we trace a foretaste of that universal sympathy with nations outside the chosen circle—of that belief in an all-embracing Providence—which has now become the belief of the highest intelligence of the world. There may be many innocent questions about the date, or about the interpretation of the Book of Daniel, and of the Apocalypse. But there can be no doubt that they contain the first gems of the great idea of the succession of ages, of the continuous growth of empires and races under a law of Divine Providence, the first sketch of the education of the world, and the first outline of the Philosophy of History.

It was the distinguishing mark of the Jewish people that their golden age was not in the past, but in the future; that their greatest Hero was not their founder, but their founder's latest descendent. Their traditions, their fancies, their glories, gathered round the head not of a chief, or warrior, or sage that had been, but of a King, a Deliverer, a Prophet who was to come. Of this singular expectation the prophets were, if not the chief authors, at least the chief exponents. Sometimes he is named, sometimes he is unnamed; sometimes he is almost identified with some actual prince of the coming or present generation, sometimes he recedes into the distant ages. But again and again, at least in the later prophetic writings, the vista is closed by his person, his character, his reign. There is a future which to the prophets of old was almost shut out, but which it is the glory of the prophets of the new dispensation to have predicted to us with unshaken certainty—the future life.

In this respect, the predictions of the latest of the prophets far transcend those which went before. The heathen philosophers were content with guesses on the immortal future of the soul. The elder Hebrew prophets were content, for the most part, with the consciousness of the Divine support through the terrors of death, but did not venture to look further. But the Christian prophets, gathering up the last hopes of the Jewish church into the first hopes of the Christian church, threw themselves boldly on the undiscovered world beyond the grave, and foretell that there the wishes and fears of this world would find their true accomplishment. To this prediction no confidant, yet so strange at the time, the intelligence no less than the devotion of mankind has in the course of ages come round. Powerful minds, which have rejected much beside in the teaching of the Bible, have claimed as their own this last expectation of the simple prophetic school, which founded its hopes on the events of that first Easter day, that first day of the week, "when life and immortality were brought to light." And it is the prediction which shares the character of all the other truly prophetic utterances; in that it directly bears on the present state of being. Even without dwelling on the special doctrine of judgment and retribution, the mere fact of the stress laid by the prophets on the certainty of the future is full of instruction, hardly perhaps enough borne in mind. Look forwards, we sometimes say, a few more years; and how yet more differently will all things seem. From the height of the future, to which on the wings of the ancient prophetic belief we can transport ourselves, look back on the present, think of our troubles, as they will seem when we know their end. Think of these good thoughts and deeds which alone will survive in that unknown world. Think of our controversies, as they will appear, when we shall be forced to sit down at the feast with those whom we have known only as opponents here, but whom we must recognise as companions there. To that future of futures which shall fulfil the yearnings of all that the prophets have desired on earth, it is for us, wherever we are, to look forwards, upwards, and forwards, in the constant expectation of something better than we know. Uncertain as to the day and hour, and as to the manner of fulfillment, this last of all the predictions still, like those of old, builds itself upon the past and present. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." DEAN STANLEY.

THE RESTITUTION.

T. A. CHAFLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 1, 1883.

DEFERRED articles will have a place as soon as we can find space, and keep up the variety absolutely essential to make our paper one of general interest.

BE on the guard against strolling fanatics and their absurd vagaries. The true followers of Christ are quite likely to have some trial and annoyance from this class in these closing times of our dispensation.

IT is now Tuesday morning, Feb. 28. On Wednesday of last week we attended the funeral of Sister Sarah Barnhill, and on Sunday last, the funeral of our young Sister, Miss Izabel Wilson; yesterday had a request to attend at the funeral of a child, with which we could not comply on account of making up the present number of our paper; and to-day we are called, for the third time, to go to Argos to preach a discourse on the funeral occasion of another young lady, a daughter of Sister VanVactor. Thus death's shafts fly thick, and who of us may be the next victim?

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 5.

Some considerable time has elapsed since we have presented our readers with an article under the above heading. In previous numbers it was our aim to write out the description of places in our own language although entirely indebted to different authorities for our materials. We shall now give our readers a few numbers in the language of the author himself. We have tried to purchase the work which is—Bashan and its Giant Cities—but have failed to find a copy, as the work is now out of print. We have the book now as a loan for awhile and, as it is not a copyright, we will publish that part of the book that exclusively relates to the subject we shall choose as a sub-heading. We do this because the descriptions are as pertinent to the country and the objects described to-day as they were a few years ago when the author wrote the account of his visit to the localities, and, also, because changes in the Orient are now prophetically due. There is another consideration: The stones are giving their crying testimony to the truth of the Bible in this age of bald blatant infidelity. Our readers would do well to be choice of the few coming numbers containing the records of the desolated cities that were old and populous in patriarchal times, and that stand monumental works of hands that wrought more than 4,000 years ago.

Bashan and its Giant Cities.

J. L. PORTER, A. M.

All Bashan, unto Salchah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan. For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of the giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron: is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man ... And the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants. Deut. iii. 10-13.

HISTORICAL NOTICES.

Bashan is the land of sacred romance. From the remotest historic period down to our own day there has ever been something of mystery and of strange wild interest connected with that old kingdom. In the memorable raid of the Arab chiefs of Mesopotamia into Eastern and Central Palestine, we read that the "Rephaim in Ashtaroth-Karnaim" bore the first brunt of the onset. The Rephaim—that is, "the giants," for such is the meaning of the name—men of stature beside whom the Jewish spies said long afterwards that they were as grasshoppers. Num. xiii. 33. These were the aboriginal inhabitants of Bashan, and probably of the greater part of Canaan. Most of them died out, or were exterminated at a very early period; but a few remarkable specimens of the race—such as Goliath, and Sippai, and Lahmi (1 Chron. xx.)—were the terror of the Israelites, and the champions of their foes, as late as the time of David;—and, strange to say, traditionary memorials of these primeval giants exist even now in almost every section of Palestine, in the form of graves of enormous dimensions—as the grave of Abel, near Damascus, thirty feet long; that of Seth, in Anti-Lebanon, about the same size; and that of Noah, in Lebanon, which measures no less than seventy yards! The capital and stronghold of the Rephaim in Bashan was Ashtaroth-Karnaim; so called from the goddess there worshipped—the mysterious "two-horned Astarte." We shall presently see, if my readers will accompany me in my proposed tour, that the cities built and occupied some forty centuries ago by these old giants exist even yet. I have traversed their streets; I have opened the doors of their houses; I have slept peacefully in their long deserted halls. We shall see, too, that among the massive ruins of these wonderful cities lie sculptured images of Astarte, with the crescent moon, which gave her the name Cornaim, upon her brow. Of one of these mutilated statues I took a sketch in the city of Kenath; and in the same place I bought from a shepherd an old coin with the full figure of the goddess stamped upon it.

Four hundred years after the incursion of Chedorlaomer and his allies, another and a far more formidable enemy, emerging from the southern deserts, suddenly appeared on the borders of Bashan. Sihon, the warlike king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon, had tried in vain to bar their progress. The rich plains, and wooded hills, and noble pasture-lands of Bashan offered a tempting prospect to the shepherd tribes of Israel. They came not on a sudden raid, like the Nomadic Arabs of the desert; they aimed at a complete conquest, and a permanent settlement. The aboriginal Rephaim were all but extinct: "Only Og, king of Bashan, remained of the remnant of the giants." The last of this race in this region, he was still the ruler of his country: and the whole Amorite inhabitants, from Hermon to the Jabbok, and from the Jordan to the desert, acknowledged the supremacy of this giant warrior. Og resolved to defend his country. It was a splendid inheritance, and he would not resign it without a struggle. Collecting his forces, he marshalled them on the broad plain before Edrei. We have no details of the battle: but, doubtless, the Amorites and their leader fought bravely for their country and for life. It was in vain: a stronger than human arm warred for Israel. Og's army was defeated, and he himself slain. It would seem that the Amorites, like the Bedawin of the present day, followed in the wake of the Israelitish army; and after the defeat and flight of the Amorites, pillaged their deserted capital, Edrei, and carried off as a trophy the iron bedstead of Og. "Is it not," says the Jewish historian, "in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man." Deut. iii. 11.

The conquest of Bashan, begun under the leadership of Moses in person, was completed by Jair, one of the most distinguished chiefs of the tribe of Manasseh. In narrating his achievements, the sacred historian brings out another remarkable fact connected with this kingdom of Bashan. In Argob, one of its little provinces, Jair took no less than sixty great cities, "fenced with high walls, gates, and bars; besides unwalled towns a great many." Deut. iii. 4, 5. 14. Such a statement seems all but incredible. It would not stand the arithmetic of Bishop Colenso for a moment. Often, when reading the passage, I used to think that some strange statistical mystery hung over it; for how could a province measuring not more than thirty miles by twenty support such a number of fortified cities, especially when the greater part of it was a wilderness of rocks? But mysterious, incredible as this seemed, on the spot, with my own eyes, I have seen that it is literally true. The cities are there to this day. Some of them retain the ancient names recorded in the Bible. The boundaries of Argob are as clearly defined by the hand of nature as those of our own island home. These ancient cities of Bashan contain probably the very oldest specimens of domestic architecture now existing in the world.

Though Bashan was conquered by the Israelites, and allotted to the half tribe of Manasseh, some of its native tribes were not exterminated. Leaving the fertile plains and rich pasture-lands to the conquerors, these took refuge in the rocky recesses of Argob, and amid the mountain fastnesses of Hermon. "The Geshurites and the Maacathites," Joshua tells us, "dwell among the Israelites until this day." xiii. 13. The former made their home among the rocks of Argob. David, in some of his strange wanderings, met with, and married the daughter of Talmai, their chief; and she became the mother of Absalom. The wild acts of his life were doubtless, to some extent, the result of maternal training; they were at least characteristic of the stock from which she sprung. After murdering his brother Ammon, he fled to his uncle in Geshur, and found a safe asylum there amid its natural fastnesses, until his father's wrath was appeased. It is a remarkable fact—and it shows how little change three thousand years have produced on this Eastern land—that Bashan is still the refuge for all offenders. If a man can only reach it, no matter what have been his crimes or his failings, he is safe; the officers of government dare not follow him, and the custom of blood atonement away is despair. During a short tour in Bashan, I met more than a dozen refugees who, like Absalom in Geshur, had fled to security from a favorable turn of events.

Bashan was visited by the post-prophets of Israel as almost an earthly paradise. The strength and grandeur of its oaks (Ezek. xxvii. 6), the beauty of its mountain scenery (Psa. lxviii. 15), the unrivalled luxuriance of its pastures (Jer. l. 19), the fertility of its wide-spreading plains, and the excellence of its cattle (Psa. xxii. 12; Micah vii. 14)—all supplied the sacred poetan with lofty imagery. Remnants of the oak forests still clothe the mountain-sides; the soil of the plains and the pastures on the downs are rich as of yore; and though the periodic raids of Arab tribes have greatly thinned the flocks and herds, as they have desolated the cities, yet such as remain—the rams, and lambs, and goats, and bulls—may be appropriately described in the words of Ezekiel, as "all of them fatlings of Bashan." xxxix. 18.

Lying on an exposed frontier, bordering on the restless and powerful kingdom of Damascus, and in the route of the warlike monarchs of Nineveh and Babylon, Bashan often experienced the horrors of war, and the desolating tide of conquest often rolled past and over it. The traces of ancient warfare are yet visible, as we shall see, in its ruinous fortresses; and we shall also see that it is now as much exposed as ever to the ravages of enemies. It was the first province of Palestine that fell before the Assyrian invaders, and its inhabitants were the first who sat and wept as captives by the banks of the rivers of the East. Bashan appears to have lost its unity with its freedom. It had been united under Og, and it remained united in possession of the half tribe of Manasseh: but after the captivity its very name, as a geographical term, disappears from history. When the Israelites were taken captive, the scattered remnants of the ancient tribes came back—some from the parched plains of the great desert, some from the rocky defiles of Argob, and some from the heights and glens of Hermon—and they filled and occupied the whole country. Henceforth the name "Bashan" is never once mentioned by either sacred or classic writer; but the four provinces into which it was then rent are often referred to—and these provinces were not themselves new. Gaulanitis is manifestly the territory of Golan, the ancient Hebrew city of refuge; Auranitis is only the Greek form of the Hauran of Ezekiel (xlviii. 16); Batanea, the name then given to the eastern mountain range, is but a corruption of Bashan; and Trachonitis, embracing that singularly wild and rocky district on the north, is just a Greek translation of the old Argob, "the stony." This last province is the only one mentioned in the New Testament. It formed part of the tetrarchy of Philip, son of the great Herod. Luke iii. 1. But though Bashan is not mentioned by name, it was the scene of a few of the most interesting events of New Testament history. It was down the western slopes of Bashan's high tableland that the demons, expelled by Jesus from the poor man, chased the herd of swine into the Sea of Galilee. It was on the grassy slopes of Bashan's hills that the multitudes were twice miraculously fed by the merciful Savior. And that "high mountain," to which he led Peter, and James, and John, and on whose summit they beheld the glories of the transfiguration, was that very Hermon which forms the boundary of Bashan. And the sacred history of this old kingdom does not end here. Paul traveled through it on his way to Damascus, and, after his conversion, Bashan, which then formed the principle part of the kingdom of Arabia, was the first field of his labors as an apostle of Jesus. "When it pleased God," he tells us, "who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia." Gal. i. 15-17. His mission to Arabia, or to Bashan, seems to have been eminently successful; and that Church, which may be called the first-fruits of his labors, made steady progress. In the fourth century nearly the whole inhabitants were Christian; heathen temples were converted into churches, and new churches were built in every town and village. At that period there were no fewer than thirty-three bishoprics in the single ecclesiastical province of Arabia. The Christians are now nearly all gone; but their churches, as we shall see, are there still—two or three turned into mosques, but the vast majority of them standing desolate deserted cities. Some structures some of them are, with marble colonnades and stately porches, standing as silent as the tomb and the tomb's founders, and now requiring almost perfect, as if awaiting the influx of a new Christian population. There was something to me inexpressibly mournful in passing from the silent street into the silent church; and especially in reading, as I often read, Greek inscriptions over the doors, telling how such an one, at such a date, had consecrated this building, formerly a temple of Jupiter, or Venus, or Astarte, as the case might be, to the worship of the Triune God, and had called it by the name of the blessed saint or martyr So-and-so. Now there are no worshippers in those churches; and the people who for twelve centuries have held supreme authority in the land, have been the constant and ruthless persecutors of Christians and Christianity. But their power is on the wane; their reign is well-nigh at an end; and the time is not far distant when Christian influence, and power, and industry, shall again repeople the deserted cities, and fill the vacant churches, and cultivate the desolated fields of Palestine.

The foregoing notices will show my readers that Bashan is, in many respects, among the most interesting of the provinces of Palestine. It is comparatively unknown, besides. Western Palestine is traversed every year; it forms a necessary part of the Grand Tour, and it has been described in scores of volumes. But the travelers who have hitherto succeeded in exploring Bashan scarcely amount to a half-a-dozen; and the state of the country is so unsettled, and many of the people who inhabit it are so hostile to Europeans, and, in fact, to strangers in general, that there seems to be but little prospect of an increase of tourists in that region. This very isolation of Bashan added immensely to the charm and instructiveness of my visit. Both land and people remain thoroughly Oriental. Nowhere else is patriarchal life so fully or so strikingly exemplified. The social state of the country and the habits of the people are just what they were in the days of Abraham or Job. The raids of the eastern tribes are as frequent and as devastating now as they were then. The flocks of a whole village are often swept away in a single incursion, and the fruits of a whole harvest carried off in a single night. The arms used are, with the exception of a few muskets, similar to those with which Chedorlaomer conquered the Rephaim. The implements of husbandry, too, are as rude and as simple as they were when Isaac cultivated the valley of Gerar. And the hospitality is everywhere as profuse and as genuine as that which Abraham exercised in his tents at Mamre. I could scarcely get over the feeling, as I rode across the plains of Bashan and climbed the wooded hills through the oak forests, and saw the primitive ploughs and yokes of oxen and goads, and heard the old Bible salutations given by every passer-by, and received the urgent invitations to rest and eat at every village and hamlet, and witnessed the killing of the kid or lamb, and the almost incredible despatch with which it is cooked and served to the guests—I could scarcely get over the feeling, I say, that I had been somehow spirited away back thousands of years, and set down in the land of Nod, or by the patriarch's tents at Beersheba. Common life in Bashan I found to be a constant enacting of early Bible stories. Western Palestine has been in a great measure spoiled by travelers. In the towns frequented by tourists, and in their usual lines of route, I always found a miserable parody of Western manners, and not unfrequently of Western dress and language; but away in this old kingdom one meets with nothing in dress, language, or manners, save the stately and instructive simplicity of patriarchal times.

Another peculiarity of Bashan I cannot refrain from communicating to my readers. The ancient cities and even the villages of Western Palestine have been almost annihilated; with the exception of Jerusalem, Hebron, and two or three others, not one stone has been left upon another. In some cases we can scarcely discover the exact spot where a noted city stood, so complete has been the desolation. Even in Jerusalem itself only a very few vestiges of the ancient buildings remain: the Tower of David, portions of the wall of the Temple area, and one or two other fragments—just enough to form the subject of dispute among antiquaries. Zion is "ploughed like a field." I have seen the plough at work on it, and with the hand that writes these lines I have plucked ears of corn in the fields of Zion. I have pitched my tent on the sight of ancient Tyre, and searched, but searched in vain, for a single trace of its ruins. Then, but not till then, did I realize the full force and truth of the prophetic denunciation upon it: "Thou shalt be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again." Ezek. xxvi. 21. The very ruins of Capernaum—that city which, in our Lord's day, was "exalted unto heaven"—have been so completely obliterated, that the question of its site never has been, and probably never will be, definitely settled. And these are not solitary cases: Jericho has disappeared; Bethel is "come to nought" (Amos v. 5); Samaria is "as an heap of the field, as plantings of a vineyard." Micah i. 6. The state of Bashan is totally different: it is literally crowded with towns and large villages; and though the vast majority of them are deserted, they are not ruined. I have more than once entered a deserted city in the evening, taken possession of a comfortable house, and spent the night in peace. Many of the houses in the ancient cities of Bashan are perfect, as if only finished yesterday. The walls are sound, the roofs unbroken, the doors, and even the window-shutters in their places. Let not my readers think that I am transcribing a passage from the "Arabian Knights." I am relating sober facts: I am simply telling what I have seen, and what I purpose just now more fully to describe. "But how," you ask me, "can we account for the preservation of ordinary dwellings in a land of ruins? If one of our modern English cities were deserted for a millennium, there would scarcely be a fragment of a wall standing." The reply is easy enough. The houses of Bashan are not ordinary houses. Their walls are from five to eight feet thick, built of large squared blocks of basalt; the roofs are formed of slabs of the same material, hewn like planks, and reaching from wall to wall; the very doors and window-shutters are of stone, hung upon pivots projecting above and below. Some of these ancient cities have from two to five hundred houses still perfect, but not a man to dwell in them. On one occasion, from the battlements of the Castle of Salcah, I counted some thirty towns and villages, dotting the surface of the vast plain, many of them almost as perfect as when they were built, and yet for more than five centuries there has not been a single inhabitant in one of them. It may easily be imagined with what feelings I read on that day, and on that spot, the remarkable words of Moses: "The generation to come of your children that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say when they see the plagues of this land, even all nations shall say, Wherefore hath the Lord done this unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?"

My readers are now prepared, I trust, to make a pleasant and profitable excursion to the giant cities of Bashan. I shall promise not to make too large a demand upon their time and patience, and yet to give them a tolerably clear and full view of one of the most interesting countries in the world.

General Skobeleff last week receiving some Servian students, said that Russia had hitherto been held in check by a certain foreign influence, namely, that of Germany. The sword, he said, was the only means the Russians had of ridding themselves of the incubus. He declared that a struggle between the Slavs and the Teutons was inevitable, and that it would be long, sanguinary and terrible, but that the Slavs would triumph. General Skobeleff concluded: "If any one attempts to molest States recognized by treaties, thank heaven, you will not be alone. Mr. Carruthers has contributed to the Geological Magazine an account of some experiments by Mr. Nathorst in Sweden with a view to testing the markings on the older rocks, which are sometimes regarded as traces of fossil plants. Mr. Nathorst has found that the trails left by crustaceans, annelids, and other animals when caused to move over the moist surface of plaster of Paris or fine mud are extremely like those on palæozoic rocks. He believes that he has other evidence of the existence of fossil jelly fishes in the Cumbrian rocks, and Mr. Carruthers has satisfied himself that the impressions on the Lower Silurian slates of Angers, which have been described by Saporata as representing the earliest known fern, are not the marks of organisms at all. The interesting question of the evidences of life in the older series of rocks is likely to be reopened.

A considerable sensation has been produced in Austrian medical circles by the recent appearance in the drug market of a new narcotic, hailing from Queensland, and at present only known to the trade by its quaint native name of "pitchery bidgery." It is indigenous to northern Australia—a sort of stunted shrub, from three to four inches in height when full grown, and bearing blossoms of a waxy texture, white in color and flecked with pink spots. The flowers are picked in the month of August, dried, packed tightly in canvas bags, and then subjected to a high degree of pressure, which imparts to them the consistency of cake tobacco. By chewing a small plug of this substance relief is speedily obtained from bodily fatigue, hunger, and thirst. A larger dose produces absolute insensibility to pain. Pitchery bidgery, administered in minute doses, acts as a stimulant; in larger quantities, as a powerful sedative. But it has the peculiar property of enabling those who take it habitually to withstand fatigue and undergo physical exertion upon a low diet.

THE KARAITE JEWS.

The following extract is from "Dr. E. D. Clarke's Travels" (1817), vol. ii.:

"The Jews are of the sect called Karai. They inhabit an ancient fortress originally constructed by the Genoese upon a lofty precipice (near Bahtcheserai, in the Crimea) .... This venerable man (the Rabbi) was held in very high consideration by them all, and with good reason; for he was well informed, and had passed a public examination with distinguished honor in Petersburg, after being expressly sent for by the Empress Catharine. We were highly interested in their conversation, as well as in the singular circumstance of having found one Jewish settlement, perhaps the only one upon earth, where that people exist secluded from the rest of mankind, in the free exercise of their ancient customs and peculiarities. The town contains 1,200 persons of both sexes, and not more than 200 houses .... The Karaites deem it to be an act of piety to copy the Bible once in their lives. All their manuscript copies of the Old Testament begins with the Book of Joshua; even the most ancient did not contain the Pentateuch .... The Rabbi asked if we had any of their sect (Karai) in England—a question we could not answer. He said there were a few in Holland. The etymology of their name is uncertain. The difference between their creed and that of the Jews in general, according to the information we received from the Rabbi, consists in a rejection of the Talmud, a disregard to every kind of tradition, to all Rabbinical writings or opinions, to all marginal interpolations of the text of Scripture, and they measure their rule of faith by the pure letter of the law. They pretend to have the text of the Old Testament in its most genuine state .... The character of the Karaite Jews is directly opposite to that generally attributed to their brethren in other countries, being altogether without reproach.

Their honesty is proverbial in the Crimea, and the word of a Karaite is considered equal to a bond. Almost all of them are engaged in trade or manufacture. They observe their fasts with the most scrupulous rigor, abstaining even from snuff and smoking for twenty-four hours together.

If the very earliest periods of Jewish history this sect separated from the main stem—such at least is their own account, and nothing concerning them ought to be received from Rabbinists, who hold them in detestation. For this reason, the relations of Leo of Modena, a Rabbi of Venice, are not to be admitted. Their schism is said to be as old as the return from the Babylonish captivity.

They observe extraordinary care in the education of their children, who are publicly instructed in the synagogues. The dress of the Karaites differs but little from that worn by the Tahtars.

We were surprised to see vine leaves sold in the streets, particularly as they are abundant in the country, but this article is in very great demand for cookery. Their minced meat is rolled up in the vine leaves, and sent to the table in the form of sausages."—Manchester Guardian.

THE WIDOW'S MITES.

MRS. S. M. WALSH.

When the splendid Jewish temple
Stood erect in days of old,
Gleaming with its walls of marble,
Starry gems and glittering gold,
Spicy woods and fragrant incense
Wafted fragrance everywhere,
While in every court, the people
Thronged for sacrifice and prayer.

Noble, grand and lordly,
... tithes of all their store,
While the hem of priestly garments
Swept the tessellated floor;
Stately Pharisees trod proudly,
And their costly gifts displayed,
Cast their gold into the treasury
Where the offerings were made.

Overlooking all, was sitting
One of gentle lowly mein;
Pharisee and priest ignored him,
He was but "the Nazarene!"
Who could think that humble stranger
"Searched and tried the hearts" of men,
Saw what prompted every offering,
With His wondrous, God-like ken?

When a shy and shrinking woman
In her garb of widowhood,
One who knew both want and sorrow—
Want, perchance, of daily food—
Brought her poor but grateful offering,
Grieving that it was so small,
Jesus said to those about him,
"She hath given more than all."

Ah! he knew of want and hunger,
Grief and care, and sorrow too;
And the widow's paltry farthing
Cost a sacrifice, he knew.
No all fruits of self denial
Are the gifts he lover the best;
Not the richest or most costly
Are the offerings most blest!

OUR PLATFORM.--No. 2.

Love is the fulfilling of the law. If ye love me keep my commandments. The first great commandment in the law is "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, strength, and mind;" the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

This is an essential plank in our platform. In fact it would be a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal without it. The Scriptures abound in commands, exhortations, and injunctions of like import, and yet how small is the element in the church. Actions speak louder than words; by their fruits ye shall know them. The tree is known by its fruits. Here we have the rule by which our love to our Lord is to be tested.

First, we are to love the Lord our God with our entire being. How few will attain to this high standard of perfection! nevertheless it is the first great commandment in the law. My pen is inadequate to the task before me. We can only give a very faint and limited idea of the one God whom we are commanded to love, honor, and obey. There are many standpoints from which we may take our observation; first his works—all his works are perfect. In wisdom hast thou made them all. Patriarchs, prophets, and holy men, and men of high renown, would wonder and adore the God of the Bible and his wonderful works. We are not an astronomer, we cannot soar among the stars, call them by name, give their exact size or magnitude; we are not a geologist, we cannot dig down into the bowels of the earth and determine its age, or how long the materials were in course of construction before they were brought together and arrayed in their proper order as stated by the inspired historians and pronounced very good. Sceptics may head us as to the sciences—but faith lends her realising light, and we accept the record given by holy men who wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, which came forth from the Eternal Throne.

Yes, we believe the Bible to be a revelation from God of his mind, will, and purpose concerning the world and the race of men that inhabit it. Our faith takes God at his word, and through Christ this is accounted to us for righteousness. What a motive power for supreme love, adoration and thanksgiving to the God of heaven, for such manifestations of love and goodness toward the race of men. Truly he did first love us. Look at our beautiful world as it was when it first came from him, who is the full embodiment of love, wisdom, power, and mercy, and as it will be again when God's whole plan and scheme of redemption by and through our Lord Jesus Christ, is perfected.

There can be no true love without an object to place our affections upon. We ask what being can be compared to the God of the Bible, whose very nature and essence is love. If ye love keep my commandments. This is the test—love, or pretended love, without obedience, is as a puff of empty air. This rule will apply in all cases. How vain and foolish for subjects to profess to love their sovereign and then out of sinister motives, disregard his authority, and pay homage and do sacrifice and service to another. This is the true condition in which we find the majority of professing Christians. Deplorable indeed; yet lamentably true. God made man upright, yet he has sought out many inventions; the practical part of Christianity we have made a specialty for the best of reasons—it is essential. We are to be judged and rewarded as our works shall be.

Let patience have her perfect work. This is an important grace, especially in the declining days of our pilgrimage. Little things become a burden, our bodies enfeebled, our force abated, yet our ambition is in full force. How we appear to ourself and to others, is this the man who a few years ago was in the full vigor of manhood, could perform Herculanean tasks, always accustomed to do for and wait upon himself? But, oh, how changed. Now the grasshopper is a burden! How much need of patience not only to bear the ills of human life, not only for ourselves, but for others, especially for those who have injured and wronged us; just how far the rule is to be observed in cases where wrong has been done us is a point not so easily determined. There is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue; when this point is reached our duty is plain. The Scriptures are our guide. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor and not suffer sin upon him. Lev. xix. 17.

The manner of rebuking or reproving a brother or neighbor is where we are the most apt to fail. Instead of love—the ruling element of a genuine Christian—we allow thould man of the flesh to govern; we use sharp bitter words, and keen cutting sarcasm; this is wrong, and, in most cases, will tend to widen the breach. This is our weak point, we own up to it frankly, and pray for grace to overcome it and all the faults that flesh is heir to; and as we thus openly confess our faults we hope no one will put us on the shoulder and say, That's right, brother, open confession is good for the soul, while they are guilty of sins that unrepented of and unatoned for will shut them out of the kingdom of God. Honest motives, our own true and best interests, will enable poor pilgrims to avoid the breakers and quicksands so dangerous to the weary mariner. God is love. More anon.

Report of Discussion at Green Castle, Mo., commencing Dec. 27, 1881, as sketched by Dr. O. C. Denslow.

Brother Snow says all Christians of this day and age are under obligations to keep the ten commandments, and more especially the fourth commandment of the Sabbath. He says God blessed the Sabbath at creation, and told all men to keep the Sabbath. He said it was a seal of the living God, and never was abolished. That it was a revelation of Jesus Christ, and that Jesus Christ kept the Sabbath for our example. He says if heaven and earth pass away one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass till all be fulfilled; though a man keep the whole law and break one of the least of the commandments he is guilty of all.

Dr. Denslow's reply: The ten commandments were given to Israel and not to Christians. There were no Christians at that day. A Christian is a follower of Christ. Christ had not come in the day the law was given. The ten commandments were given to Israel and not to Gentiles, as no Gentiles were commanded to remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy. God blessed the Sabbath day at creation but never commanded Adam or anybody else to keep it. God never made it a seal to any people, he made it a memorial to Israel for having been brought out of the land of Egypt, and made it a statute to them and their generations, but to no other people.

The Sabbath never was a revelation of Jesus Christ, neither did he command any person to keep it as a holy day, neither did he keep it for our example. He never kept the Sabbath according to the law, and was accused by the Pharisees for not keeping it; they even brought him before the officers of the law and accused him of not keeping the Sabbath according to the law of Moses.

Brother Snow said the ten commandments was not the covenant that God made with Israel, it was the covenant that God gave to Israel. He said the covenant God made with Israel was done away; but the covenant he gave to Israel was not done away, and is therefore binding upon Christians; that all Christians belong to God's spiritual Israel, and the ten commandments was the covenant he gave them, and placed it in their hearts, and therefore it was binding upon them to observe and keep the Sabbath, and that the Bible says nothing about building a fire on the Sabbath of the ten commandments.

Dr. Denslow's reply: Reads from Deut. iv. 13-23, where it says the ten commandments was the covenant that God made with Israel, and from Ex. xxxv. 2, 3, where it says that they shall kindle no fires on the Sabbath day throughout their habitations. God in talking to Israel through Moses knew nothing of any spiritual Israel, as Snow has it, but was talking to the twelve tribes of Israel. It was to them he gave the law and not to Christians, and he never said anything about placing the ten commandments in the hearts of any people. That Brother Snow and some other Sabbatarians have got much smarter than Christ and his apostles; they in preaching never said anything about keeping the Sabbath. But brother Snow and others of his faith are continually harping on the Sabbath. If the Sabbath was binding on Christians why did not Christ and the apostles tell us something about it so that we could so understand it. Christ is the end of the law. Do the ten commandments belong to the law? If so then Christ was the end of them. He gave the gospel to his apostles and they gave it to the people. Did they understand themselves? If so why did they not tell us to keep the Sabbath if it is binding?

Christ gave us everything necessary to salvation and the Sabbath was not mentioned, therefore I conclude it is not necessary to salvation, and if not necessary to salvation for what purpose is it binding, and what is the penalty for not keeping it? The penalty to the Jews for not keeping it was death; but not so with Christians to whom it was never given.

Brother Snow's speech: Abraham kept the commandments and Adam kept the commandments, and they were kept from the creation down to the flood, and were brought over in the ark by Noah, who was a preacher of righteousness and that the commandments were kept by the people from the flood down to Abraham's time, and on down to the time that they were written on the tables of stone, that the commandments were not given to Israel as a memorial of their having been brought out of the land of Egypt; that the penalty of death for not keeping the Sabbath was made by Moses and not by God himself, that the law forbidding the kindling of fires on the Sabbath day was given by Moses and not by God, and it was given by Moses because Israel was in a warm climate in South Arabia, and did not need fire only to cook their manna, but when they went up into the land of Palestine the winters were very severe, and that law was not binding upon them. He believes in the gospel of Jesus Christ as much as the Doctor does. He says the keeping of the Sabbath is not necessary to salvation, but that it is necessary to keep the commandments of God.

Dr. Denslow's reply: Brother Snow says he believes as much in the gospel as I do, and he also believes in conversion as necessary to salvation, but he acknowledges that the keeping of the Sabbath was not necessary to salvation for what does he keep it. Can he keep it according to the law? Does he keep on kindling fires on the Sabbath day? If he breaks one of the least of the commandments he is guilty of all. Bro. Snow has been converted twice; once he was converted to the truth and then he was converted to the law of sin and death. It is not good sense to say that God made a command that they should kindle no fires in their habitations because they were in a warm climate and did not need them. Bro. Snow takes the Jewish law, and thereby places himself on an equality with the Jews. They rejected Christ and Bro. Snow by taking the law rejects Christ, and guesses into the kingdom with the Jew as a subject in the kingdom, to see whether he will receive Christ when he comes the second time, whereas the believers in Christ of this age will be made priests and kings, and shall reign with Christ a thousand years; and he is one thousand years longer in putting on immortality than Christians of this age.

To the Scattered Flock of Weary, Foot Sore Waiting Ones Greeting.

It is my settled conviction, that as the Christian era was ushered in with terrible persecution to those who advocated the truth concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, that those who advocate the same doctrine at the eve of this dark day may reasonably expect like treatment from the hands of the enemies of that great and glorious truth.

I would not be understood that I am looking for a long continued opposition to the truth. No, the midnight darkness of this era is past, but the dark hour that precedes the coming day of glory and honor to the faithful bride, still hangs, with threatening aspect over our heads.

To my mind it is evident that the last, or covenant week, of Dan. ix. is still future; not that those which are worthy of translation will be subject to all the evils of those seven years of "great tribulation." But as in the plagues of Egypt—Israel was not exempt from the first three, (or at least we are not told that they were) but as they were exempt from the effects of the seven last plagues upon Egypt, so all the faithful of God's house may reasonably expect to be delivered from the power of the lawless one in the midst of the week, or before the seven last "vials are poured out" upon the nations. May God in his great mercy help us to watch for the landmarks that are still before the pilgrim who is still winding his way towards Zion's Holy Hill.

I for one, am not yet able to conclude that the papacy fills the discription of "that man of sin" of 2 Thess. ii. 3—4 that "other horn" that come up after the ten of Dan. vii. 20-25. or the "beast" of Rev. xi. 7. xiii. 11-17. xvii. 8. For this reason wild "beasts" in Scripture, represent political governments, or rulers, and addressed or spoken of the masculine gender is used; while the femenine is used in speaking of ecclesiastical bodies; also city, or cities represent religious bodies—whether pure or corrupt, and as a vile, or lewd woman is spoken of as sitting upon a beast. She may be able to control the beast, but how (she) can he said to constitute the woman, sitting on the beast, and the beast at the same time; is more than I am able to comprehend. Besides the beast in alliance with the last reigning, ten kings of the Roman habitable: are to destroy the lewd woman, "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." See Rev. xvii. 11-18.

As I can ask for but a small space in our paper, I will reserve other reasons for a future communication. Submitting the above thoughts in love and good will to all those who may differ with me on this subject; not expecting the watchman to see eye to eye, until the "Lord shall bring again Zion." Yours in the love of the truth.

Christian Children.

Saw ye never in the meadows,
Where your little feet did pass,
Down below, the sweet white daisies
Growing in the long green grass?

They are like to little children,
Children bred in lowly cot,
Who are modest, meek, and quiet,
And contented with their lot.

Saw you never lilies blossoms,
Or scarlet white and red,
Waving brightly in the sunshine,
On the tall trees overhead?

They are like to other children,
Children of the high and great,
Who are gracious, good, and gentle,
Serving God in their estate.

Christian children, high and lowly:
Try like fragrant flowers to be;
Day by day the tall tree blossom
Gives to God its fragrance free.

Day by day the little daisy
Looks up with his yellow eye,
Never murmurs, never wishes
It were hanging up on high.

God has given each his station;
Some have riches and high place,
Some have lowly homes and labor—
All may have his precious grace.

And the sky is just as pleasant,
And as bright the summer sky,
To the daisy by the footpath
As to flowers that bloom on high.

And God loveth all his children,
Rich and poor, and high and low;
And they all shall meet in heaven,
Who have served him here below.

A home without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books. It is a wrong to his family. He cheats them. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading, and grows upon it. And the love of knowledge in a young mind is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passion and vice.

Little by Little.

If you are gaining a little every day be contented. Are your expenses a little better than your income, so that, though it be little, you are yet constantly accumulating and growing richer and richer every day? Be contented; so far as concerns money, you are doing well.

Are you gaining knowledge every day? Though it be little by little, the aggregate accumulation, where no day is permitted to pass without adding something to the stock, will surprise yourself.

Solomon did not become the wisest man in the world in a minute. Little by little—never committing to learn something even for a day—always reading, studying a little between the time of rising in the morning and lying down at night; this is the way to accumulate a full storehouse of knowledge.

Finally, are you daily improving in character? Do not be discouraged because it is little by little. The best men fall short of what they would wish to be. It is something, it is much, if you keep good resolutions better to-day than you did yesterday, better this week than last, better this year than you did last year. Strive to be perfect; but do not become downhearted as long as you are approaching nearer to the high standard at which you aim.

Little by little, fortunes are accumulated; little by little knowledge is gained; little by little character and reputation is achieved.

Amen.

A little fellow named Artie, one of three brothers, whose parents had brought them up to be brave and self-reliant, couldn't do much, but what he could do he did with all his might.

As their parents were Methodists of the good old-fashioned kind, the boys were in the habit of hearing, at such times, the hearty "Amen" break forth from father's lips when the sermon was particularly enjoyable.

One cold Sabbath day these children were left at home, with many cautions to be careful. Hardly had the parents left ere the wood work near the stove pipe was discovered to be on fire, and out of the children's reach; but with wonderful activity and energy, the eldest climbed upon the table and put out the flames.

When the father and mother returned, they shuddered to see the danger to which their dear ones had been exposed, and with thankful hearts praised them for their courage.

"How did you manage, Tommy, to reach the fire?" asked their father.

"Why," said Tommy, "I pushed the table up to the wall and got up on to that."

"And did you help brother, Jimmy?" to the next.

"Yes sir: I brought him a pail of water, and handed him the dipper."

"And what did you do?" said the proud father to his pet, the youngest of the group.

"Well papa," said Artie, "you see I was too small to help put out the fire, so I just stood by and hollowed—'Amen.'"

The Lost Dinner.

In the town of Newcastle there was a man who went by the name of "Patient Joe," because, if grief came to him he would say, "Its all for the best. Those who love God shall find that all things work together for good."

If things went well with him, Joe praised God; if things went ill with him, he would praise God still, and say, "God knows best what is for my good. We must not judge things by this life alone. There's a life to come after this, and things that may not seem good for us here, may be good for us there."

In the coal pit where Joe worked, some of the men would jeer and laugh at him when he said, "Its all for the best." There was a man by the name of Tim, who would miss no chance to laugh at Joe.

One day, as Tim and Joe were getting ready to go down in the deep pit, Joe, who had brought his dinner of beef and bread with him, laid it on the ground for a moment. Before he could take it up a hungry dog seized it and ran off.

"Ha! ha!" cried Tim, "that's all for best, is it, man? Now stick to thy creed, and say, 'Yes.'"

"Well, I do say 'Yes,'" said Joe; "but as I must eat, it is my duty to try and get back my dinner. If I get it back it will be all for the best, and even if I do not get it back why, it will be for the best just the same. God is so great that he can rule the smallest things as well as the largest."

Joe ran after the dog, and Tim, with a loud laugh and an oath, went down into the pit. Joe ran a long way, but could not catch the dog. At last he gave up the chase, and came back to the mine, thinking to himself that the men would all have a good laugh at him. But he found them all pale with alarm and awe.

"What a narrow escape you have had, Joe!" said one of them. "The pit has caved in, and poor Tim is killed. If that dog had not run off with your dinner, you would have gone down with Tim into the pit, and been killed, too."

Joe took off his hat, while his breast heaved and his cheeks grew pale, and the tears came into his eyes, he looked up to heaven, but said not a word.

Talk With the Boys.

I will begin this talk by asking you to remember that "youth is the seed time of life," the time to sow the seeds of goodness and truth, of industry and sobriety, to form the character, to establish good habits, and to acquire so much of useful, and practical knowledge of books, and things, as will fit you for usefulness in your after life and also to develop in you a love of study and investigation, and to learn to observe, and scan closely the works of nature around, above and beneath you.

"The education forms the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

This is an old couplet containing more truth than poetry. It is a figure of speech, that is, one thing is used for another. The writer did not care so much for crooked trees, as he did for crooked men. He used the twig, or sprout to represent young persons, and the tree, grown persons, with fixed habits.

I have seen the young sprout, bent over by some weight and saw the tree years afterwards still bent, gnarled, and crooked, hardly fit for any useful purpose whatever. Likewise I have seen boys bent in the pursuit of evil thought all the years of their growth, and oh what crooked men they made! The good influence of men; law, with its stern penalties, courts and judges, jails and penitentiaries, failed to straighten them. Some of them have gone down to dishonored graves and many more of this class are on the way to the same sad end. Many a boy would do better to go into a powder-mill with nails in his boot heels and tread around on grains of powder, than to travel on the bad road. An explosion, might save him from moral ruin and a disgraceful death.

Bad habits are like deep ruts in which wagon wheels run; it is very difficult to get out when once in. So you must be careful to form good habits while you are young. Solomon's advice to parents: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Expresses a general truth which is confirmed by the experience of mankind.

A learned English judge said that nearly all of the many criminal cases brought before him were persons who entered on a course of crime before their sixteenth year, and that where persons led virtuous lives up to that age their future good behavior might be regarded as almost certain. Goodness and virtue carry with them their own reward—happiness, while vice and sin are as surely followed by wretchedness and misery in the present state of being, and loss of eternal life in the world to come. It pays to do right.

Sententions.

A man is responsible for all the good he can do.

The heart has reasons that reason does not understand.

Little things console us because little things afflict us.

An old man repents of that of which a young man boasts.

The man who never excites envy never excites admiration.

The reproaches of enemies should quicken us to duty, and not keep us from it.

The greatest thought that ever entered my mind, was that of my personal responsibility to a personal God.—Daniel Webster.

Never worthy man
Worked worthily who was not moved by love.
—Holland.

The world is a sealed book to a brute and an archangel would say that it is to us.—Joseph Cook.

The mystery of the gospel, as distinguished from the law, consists in changing the order of two words; one says, "do and live;" the other says, "live and do."—Thomas Adam.

I know not how it is—where
Weakness and strength are near allied;
And joys which most the spirit bless
Are farthest off from earthly pride.
—H. Alford.

It is recorded that Jesus "marvelled" twice: once at the greatness of a man's faith, once at the greatness of the lack of it. Twice also he "groaned;" once at a man's death, once at the same man's resurrection. And twice he "sighed:" once when he denied a miracle, once when he wrought one.—Chas. E. Robinson.

The life we see,
The mysteries of sorrow, deep and long,
The dark enigmas of permitted wrong,
Have all one key.
The strange, sad world is but our Father's school
All chance and change his love shall grandly overrule.

What though to-day
Thou canst not trace at all the hidden reason
For his strange dealings through the trial season,
Trust and obey!
In after life and light all shall be plain and clear.

There is no life so humble that, if it be true and genuinely human and obedient to God, it may not hope to shed some of his light. There is no life so meagre that the greatest and wisest of us can afford to despise it. We cannot know at what moment it may flash forth with the life of God.—Philips Brooks.

OBITUARY.

DIED—Monday night, Jan. 23, 1882, our beloved Sister, Mrs. M. Miller, wife of brother Geo. Miller, of Moscow, Pa., aged 38 years.

Sister Miller and her husband embraced the faith of the gospel near two years ago, and were baptized by Elder C. F. Sweet, into the all-saving name of Jesus. Sister Miller has always lived an exemplary life, and since embracing the truth has been a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. She was an honored member of society and especially beloved by the church of God, to which she was a faithful attendant, always aiding in our meetings by her melodious voice in singing the praises of God.

She was a dutiful and beloved wife, a kind and affectionate mother, an honest and faithful Christian. She leaves a husband, two children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. She died in the full assurance of faith in the soon coming of Christ and that she would come up in the first resurrection to everlasting life in the kingdom of God.

The funeral sermon was preached by the writer (at her request) to a large and attentive audience, from 1 Cor. xv. 22. Showing that death is a state of unconsciousness, and that the future life depended entirely upon the resurrection of the dead.

T. FINN.

DIED—At South Gower, Ont., Dec. 7, 1881, Brother Robert Story, aged 52 years.

For twenty-three years the writer has been acquainted with bro. Story. He was naturally kind and loving, and if all men had his disposition and honest principles many of the lawyers would have to get their living by cultivating the soil, or find work in the prison.

About twenty-three years ago I immersing him into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. From that time to his death he was an honor to Jesus.

Last November, the third day subsequent to my coming into the neighborhood, I called and spent the day with his family. I found him wasted with consumption. We had a sweet and heavenly time conversing upon the past, and the glorious future. In our conversation he said we wished me to come and administer the memorial supper to him, and bring brethren B. F. Beach and McKeen with me. One week previous to his death we complied with his request. Truly we had a solemn yet joyful time.

Bro. S. was a good husband and father, and an excellent neighbor. All respected him. He was not wealthy; neither is the church of God at South Gower, of which he was a member, but he with them was the purchase of the Redeemer's blood. In his death a wife and children, the church the neighborhood, and the writer have met with a great loss. A large congregation was at the funeral, a discourse being delivered by the writer. We then laid him down in the cold grave to rest until Jesus [illegible]. The Baptist minister was present and offered prayer at the house and pronounced the benediction at the grave.

R. V. LYON.

DIED—At South Gower, Ont., March 12, 1881, Sister Rachel Christie, widow of Dan't Christie, aged 68 years.

Sister Christie was among the fruits of my labor on my first visit to Canada, thirty years ago last summer. From that time to her death she was an honor to the truth, being a Martha and Mary in the church of God. She delighted like Mary to hear the gospel preached, and like Martha to have her house in order. But she with others, sleep in Jesus, and have been laid in the cold grave to rest till Jesus shall come.

In her death four sons and their families, and the church, have met with an irreparable loss.

R. V. LYON.

The Deadening Influence of Fashion.

It is among the children of light employment and unsettled life that we must look for stony-heartedness—not in the world of business; not among the poor. If you wish to know what hollowness and heartlessness are, you must seek for them in the world of light, elegant, superficial fashion, where frivolity has turned the heart into a rock-bed of selfishness. Say what men will of the heartlessness of trade, it is nothing compared with the heartlessness of fashion. Say what you will of the atheism of science, it is nothing to the atheism of that round of pleasure in which the heart lives—dead while it lives.

Nothing can possibly be conceived in the world, or even out of it, which can be called good, without qualification, except a good will.—Kant.

THE SOUL DIRGE.

The organ played sweet music,
While, on communion day
All breathless from the service,
The heedless went away:
And down the broad aisle crowding,
They seemed a funeral train,
Who were burying their own spirits
To the music of that strain.

As I listened to the organ
And saw them crowd along,
I thought I heard two voices
Speaking clearly, but not strong;
And one, it whispered sadly,
"Will ye also go away?"
While the other spoke exultingly,
"Hear the soul-dirge, hear it play!"

Hear the soul-dirge! hear the soul-dirge!
It was dread to hear it play,
While the fare-thing went crowding
From the bread of life away.
They were hidden, all were hidden,
To their Father's festal board:
But they fill with grateful faces
Turned their backs upon the Lord.

You had thought the church a prison
Had you seen how they did pour,
With unheeding, giddy faces,
From the consecrated door.
There was angels' food all ready,
But the hidden—where were they?
O'er the highways and the hedges,
E'er the soul-dirge ceased to play.

Oh, the soul-dirge! how it echoed
The emptied aisles along,
As the emptied streets grew crowded
With the full outpouring throng;
And then again the voices,
"Hear the soul-dirge, hear it play!"
And the pensive, prosaic whisper,
"Will ye also go away?"

Few, few were they that lingered
To sup with Jesus then.
And yet for all who spurned him
There was plenty, ample to spare.
And now the food of angels
Unpartook to my sight.
All gladness was the supper,
And the chalice glittering bright.

I may not tell the rapture
Of a banquet so divine.
"Hear every one that thirsteth,
Let him taste the bread and wine."
Hear the Bride and Spirit saying,
"Will ye also go away?
Away, poor soul, forever?
Oh! the soul-dirge, hear it play!"

A CARD TO THE BRETHREN OF THE ONE FAITH.

Shall There Be a New Edition of "The Bible Defended and Atheism Rebuked?"

It is proposed to print a new edition of my pamphlet—Reply to Ingersoll, entitled "The Bible Defended and Atheism Rebuked," the first edition of one thousand copies being exhausted in less than eight months since its publication.

Having reserved the electrotype plates, a second thousand copies of the same, can be produced at a cost of about one hundred dollars—a sum less than one-half the price of the first edition. A small additional expense, however, would be incurred by printing a preface and an additional chapter, with the very favorable notices and commendations of the book which have appeared in the press and from eminent scholars, ministers and others. This new chapter will contain a full notice of the controversy and discussion between Col. Ingersoll and Judge Black in the North American Review, in which the defense of the Bible and its doctrine will be placed on the only tenable ground, to-wit: The design of God in creation and the true construction and nature of man. No man—not even Judge Black—with all his combined power as a logician—can answer and refute satisfactorily the infidel's objections so long as he concedes and contends for the unscriptural pagan dogma of the present immortality of the human soul and consequently the eternal torment of the wicked. Immortality through Christ and to the righteous only, beginning at their resurrection from the dead, at his second coming in his kingdom, the Bible theory and doctrine. The opposite tenet of the current theology, however tenaciously cherished, is derived from the conjectures of Socrates and Plato and is of human invention. That every human being is already immortal and must live on forever, involves, of necessity, the conclusion that all the wicked—constituting a vast majority of the human race who have lived in times of knowledge—must suffer an eternity of conscious misery; seeing an end to their sufferings—a result obviously contrary to Divine wisdom and love—which sets aside the resurrection — dishonors Christ as "our life"—offends common sense and shocks the reason and benevolence of every reflecting mind.

The plain and oft-repeated declarations of Scripture that "God will render to every man according to his deeds"—that the wicked will be raised from the dead at their judgment day and will receive in their mortal bodies thus raised, the "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish" denounced against them according to their works and, as the end of this punishment, be blotted out of life—"whose end is destruction," who will be punished "with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power"—and consequently can suffer no more. These conclusions are all in harmony with the Divine wisdom, justice and mercy, and cannot be impeached or gainsaid. No defense of the Bible is tenable which derives its strength from human wisdom and discards or ignores God's word, which has been given to man expressly to acquaint him with the true knowledge of his own origin, constitution and destiny, which, of himself, he could never discover.

There is reason to believe that a second edition of the work thus prepared will meet with remunerative sales. Our unpretending little offering on the altar of God's truth as opposed to man's wisdom was the pioneer in the newly begun work of confronting the daring infidel in his crusade against all that the Christian holds most dear. Up to the time of its appearance in the field the Philistine had every thing his own way—even without contradiction. He seemed to have inspired such terror and alarm in the Christian camp that none dared to accept his defiance of the Lord of hosts. None ventured to meet Mr. Ingersoll in battle array. The so-called "successors of the apostles"—Doctors of Divinity—the learned Rabbins—the Rulers in our modern Israel—although by profession, defenders of the faith—and champions of the truth—were silent as death. They permitted the poison of Atheism to be everywhere diffused by Mr. Ingersoll and his numerous colleagues and disciples without opposition or antidote. But now, behold the change! Judge Black—another layman—has boldly come to the front also, and now wields his "battle-axe and weapons of war" with crushing effect upon the brittle shield of God's assailant—and the clergy are emerging from their convenient closets in the person of Dr. Dewitt Talmage, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, who makes his Sunday pulpit echo with the resounding force of his stalwart invective. Since these new champions have appeared the question of the truth of the Bible and of salvation through Christ is forced with increasing interest and prominence on the public attention and with an earnestness scarcely excelled in the days of Luther and the Protestant Reformers. Now, we see the secular press, the civil magistrate, the sagacious statesman, the learned professor, the profoundest thinkers in philosophy, art, literature, and science, and at last the pulpit—all classes from the Prince and President to the Peasant and Plebeian, all at once are confessing that the supremest wisdom and value are all concentrated in and around the great question which now deeply agitates the public mind of the civilized world; "What shall come to pass hereafter?" And as not one of the many "magicians, astrologers, sorcerers, sooth-sayers and wise men" who thronged the court of the proud King of Babylon could reveal the future or make known to the king "what shall be in the latter days," even so is it now, that those only, who, like the prophet Daniel, are "taught of God" in his word, can satisfactorily solve the great problem of human destiny, whose solution all so ardently desire.

An English writer in a recent number of the Contemporary Review, bears testimony to this well nigh universal drift of the educated mind of the nineteenth century. He says: "No branch of science, seems to consider itself complete now-a-days until it has issued at last into the vexed ocean of theology." The old school divines meant what they said that "Theology was the queen and mistress of the sciences," and Dr. Pusey in his university sermons declares, "Theology accepts every certain conclusion of physical science as man's unfolding of God's book of nature.

In the United States, the thinking mind of all wise men is turned in the same direction. Dr. John W. Draper, lately deceased, writes in his "Conflict Between Religion and Science"—"We still deal with the same questions about which the old philosophers of Greece and Rome disputed: What is God? What is the soul? What is the world? How is it governed? Have we any standard or criterion of truth? And the thoughtful reader will earnestly ask, Are our solutions of these problems any better than theirs?"

What a confession of weakness and ignorance on the part of the learned and wise of the world! And it is no wonder in view of their contemptuous neglect of the Bible.

This general yearning for clearer light and fuller knowledge forces upon every enlightened and faithful disciple of Christ the "Scribe instructed in the kingdom of God to bring forth out of his treasure things both old and new," for the instruction into the way of life, both present and future, of every honest seeker for truth and knowledge. This is their plain duty and their bounden privilege. It is God's people who must sustain and uphold God's truth. Help is not expected from those who defend the popular, and, as we know, the false and deceptive creeds of orthodox Christendom. With them that hoary falsehood, first propagated in the garden of Eden, is still a darling tenet, viz: that man "will not surely die"—that every man possesses an "immortal soul" and must and will live forever. It is not to be expected, I repeat, that such should give aid and countenance to any effort to overthrow that faith or awaken them to the fatal delusion by which they are led captive. Any appeal to them in this behalf would be inconsistent and vain. Hence I address myself to those of "like precious faith" with the ancient saints, to give a helping hand to the great and good work of opening the eyes of the blind that seeing, they may perceive, and hearing, they may understand the things concerning the approaching kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, the Christ.

As the end approaches, the adversary redoubles his diligence to subvert the faith and destroy the work of God's servants. This agrees with St. Paul to Timothy that "in the last days perilous times shall come—that evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceivers and being deceived." This is no time to furl the banner of the cross. The truth in its fulness, simplicity and power is the only antidote to the poison of infidelity. The sudden uprising of new infidel sects in the Old World and in our own country admonishes us of the necessity and duty of constant vigilance. Some of these, discarding the obnoxious name of Atheists cunningly take refuge under the more specious titles of Secularists and Agnostics. Some account of the first is given by Brother Heyes, of England, in a letter recently published in THE RESTITUTION.

We have now intelligence in the foreign news columns, of the new and rapidly increasing sect called Agnostics in England. A few extracts will show this latest phase of sin and folly, which, unlike Ingersoll's bold blasphemy, assumed the elegant garb of fashion, philosophy and science. "An Agnostic differs from an Atheist in that he is not cynical concerning religious belief—has no criticism nor sneers to offer on the creed evangelical—and is not a bigot 'turned inside out' as an Atheist has been defined. He is simply one who sadly confesses that his mind is incapable of receiving as credible the theories of religious belief in their most imperative and molimitary principles. A Deist believes in a Deity, an Agnostic cannot see personal Deity, but merely a correlation of forces called Nature, in the mighty mystery which surrounds us." They claim as their disciples such writers and thinkers as George Eliot, Victor Hugo John Stuart Mill, Huxley, Darwin and Tyndal. These accounts add: "If the truth could be fully known, it would divulge the fact that in every city, town and hamlet all over the civilized world, the churches count among their regular attendants large numbers of persons who at heart are pure Agnostics."*

It is against these and all "principalities and powers in high places" that the servants of God are called upon to do battle, and whether successful or not they must in duty and conscience bear their testimony to the truth and commit the keeping of their souls to God in well doing, knowing that they shall reap the reward hereafter if they faint not now.

How we shall do this is the question before our brotherhood. Is there any other way of repelling the advancing hosts of infidelity than by speaking and writing the truth?—by drawing and wielding the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. I think not.

The plan of meeting the expenses of the proposed publication is simple and easy. The sum needed for another edition with the new matter is about $150. A sale of five hundred out of the thousand printed copies, at the retail price of 50 cents will give $250. This will repay the cost of publication and leave a margin of $100, which must be charged with certain incidental expenses—as commission on sales, postages, or express charges and advertising; the balance left will be profit. So that if only one-half of the number printed is sold the cost is reimbursed. But there is reason to think that the whole edition will be disposed of in due time, and this gives assurance that no loss is likely to occur. If therefore any brother will advance this sum of $150—or if any three brethren or friends will advance $50 each, or if six will lend $25 each, the amount is secured and the work done.

Besides the saving in the printing of a second edition the other expenses incidental to the first will be lessened. In every first edition, copies must be freely sent gratis to editors and prominent persons to secure favorable notices and elicit a public opinion of the work, which must also be advertised extensively. These charges with postage, expressage, etc., necessarily consume the profits on a first edition. Such is the custom and it has been my experience. Such means were freely used to bring into favorable notice the edition now exhausted so that out of the one thousand copies published but little more than a sum sufficient to pay the actual expenses was realized. My proposition therefore is to put my time and labor in the preparation of the work against the sum of $150 thus advanced, and after reimbursing the latter sum from the sales, which I am willing shall be first paid, to share the surplus equally between us in the proportion of one-half to myself and one-half to my partners. On these conditions I write any who may be able and willing to advance the $150 as it may be called for to unite with me in the publication at an early day of a second edition.

I add that if this amount is raised I propose to buy out on account of the new edition the interest—one-fifth—in the plates on hand, of the publishers of the first edition, so that the new firm may have exclusive control of the second edition. I have their offer to sell their interest as it now stands for the small sum of fifteen dollars.

It may be well to add for the information of the brethren, that those who generously contributed of their means for the first edition received their money back in books—except those who directed to be otherwise appropriated. I associated the publishers with me because I found the sum raised (a little more than $200) insufficient for the publication and charges of the book and they advanced $50 for one-fifth interest. If any one failed to receive his share I am not aware of it, and I requested through THE RESTITUTION that all such would notify me of the omission. The new edition should be brought out as soon as possible. This obliges us to act promptly and without the delay which would arise from awaiting the action of the brethren individually and by small subscriptions.

I had written so far when I received notice of an order for fifty additional copies from an agent who had already sold one hundred and fifty copies of the first edition. This demand I can not, of course, now supply, having just shipped, to fill an order from England, the last remaining ten copies on hand with the publishers, in New York.

In conclusion: Believing that we are doing this work in the Master's service, I invite the brethren and all friends of the truth who are willing and able to help, to address me at Stephens City, Frederick county, Virginia, saying what they will do.

Faithfully and fraternally submitted.

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

*With singular inconsistency these infidel sects belonging to the same class of God-defying Atheists, have changed their name but not their nature. In the days of the apostles they were known as Gnostics, who knew everything in religion, but now they more modestly call themselves Agnostics, that is, "Know-Nothings."

THE PERPETUITY OF PROPHECY vs. THE FUTURE ANTI-CHRIST.

The word of the Lord is "yea and amen" to his own glory and the well being of his creatures, an honest man's word is as good as his bond; and it stands good till performed. How much more then shall the Divine word stand, "by which the heavens and the earth were of old"—"which raises the dead and calleth things that be not as though they were." Rom. iv. 17.

1. The primal prophecy—the germ of all subsequent revelation, as to earth and man—knows "no shadow of turning" from its one purpose, "till all be fulfilled." Take Gen. iii. 15–19. The two-fold seed, their enmity, their struggle of evil for supremacy, has been so far unabated and will be uncompromising till the seed Christ shall bruise the serpent's head. Reverse the reign of sin and death; and restore all things spoken; "that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. xv. 21–28; Acts iii. 21; Rom. v. 12–23; John i. 29; Rev. xvii. to xxi.

2. As Cain killed Abel—as Israel (with his land and city and sanctuary) "was as a speckled bird, among the birds, against her." Jer. xii. 9; Psa. lxxx. 12, 13; Dan. xii. 11–19; Zech. i. 18–22. So, "the rulers, Herod and Pontius Pilate, the Gentiles and people of Israel" combined "together against the Lord and his Christ." Acts iv. 25–27. "The Anti-christ," the manifold and yet united opponent of the blessed Jesus, is thus noted by the apostle, "Many Anti-christs—he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ. He is the Anti-christ." 1 John ii. 18–22. "Many false prophets—the spirit of Anti-christ—now, already is it in the world." 1 John iv. 1–3. Again, "Many deceivers are entered into the world who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is the deceiver and the Anti-christ." 2 John vii.

We have thus a triple assertion of "the Anti-Christ." It is a three-fold personification of the manifold and yet the emphatic determinate and dispensational opposition to Christ—"the Anti-christ."

3. This is the comprehensive Bible style to personify a class or order. Thus "the just live by faith." Rom. i. 17; Heb. x. 38; Hab. ii. 11. The bishop. 1 Tim. iii. 2; Titus i. 7. Thus we find the enemy; the adversary and the Anti-christ.

"I am come (said Jesus) in my Father's name; and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name him ye will receive." John v. 43. Many of this class came.

"The Old Testament" abounds in this usage, "the king and the priest" meant every one king or priest through the Mosaic age, 1600 years. We read of the king of the north; the king of the south, then Rome "the fourth." Dan. ii. 40, vii. 23; xi. 5–15. The pronouns "he, him, and it," are used scores of time; and embracing the wide world of Rome. Rev. xiii. 19; Luke ii. 2.

It is clear from such facts, that those who talk of "the Anti-christ" and the burden of prophetic terrors, as yet to come, lack the A B C—the very alphabet of the subject. As to our people it is like infant sprinkling and a mystical coming of Christ a mere misapprehension; but its origin was only evil, from a Romish Jesuit to pervert truth and divert attention from Rome, as portrayed in Rev. xvii. 19.

4. Our Lord said, "This is your hour and the power of darkness;" and St. Paul was sent to "turn men from darkness to light; and from the power of Satan unto God." Acts xxvi. 18.

Now do you brethren who look for Anti-christ see the need of another display of darkness and the Devil? No, No! "This present (powers) world," lying in the (powers) wicked one, is enough, till "the stronger than the strong man armed shall come, to bind, cast out, and destroy him."

Our blessed Christ, "the Sun of Righteousness," will come; dissipate the darkness, give us day and overcome "all the power of the enemy." Luke x. 19; 1 Cor. xv. 24–28.

5. "The faith" does not ignore Armageddon, "the time of trouble, the time of wrath." No indeed. Faith, however, finds Jesus enthroned with "all power" to put down all opposing power; and thus "save the world." John xii. 47. He'll "take away the sin of the world" by ridding it of "the rulers of its darkness, of Babylon, the beast and false prophet;" and hence the judgment is essential; for there can be no saving of the world with the Pope, the grand Turk and the Devil, rampant in it. 1 Peter v. 8; Rev. xvii. to xx. Such was the order of the government of God over Israel. Deut. xix. 13; xxi. 9.

"The Lord is our judge; the Lord is our lawgiver; the Lord is our King; he will save us." Isa. xxxiii. 22. Of course he will save in accord with his word. It was angels' food—water from the rock, and mercy for Israel; but the doom of earthquake and fire to Korah and company, in justice, "to put away evil from Israel."

7. The sum of the whole subject is that the tempter in Eden was also the same to Jesus and St. John (Matt. iv.; Rev. xii. to xx.)—that "the power of darkness" is "the power of Satan; and the spirit of Anti-christ" was known by the rejection of Jesus the Christ; and as such he found then and there, "the Anti-christ." 1 John ii. 18–22; iv. 1–3; 2 John vii.

Again, "The mystery of iniquity" did then "already work." 2 Thess. ii. "The falling away—the apostacy (in Greek) the man of sin; the son of perdition; who opposeth," follows; and thus he is, and acts the part of "Anti-christ."

The period of time here embraced, reaches the second coming of our Lord and Savior Christ, to conquer and triumph and bless.

8. To crown the whole, please observe, we have had the enmity between the two seeds; we have had the four great beasts, over or against the chosen people; we have had the Patriarchal, Mosaic, and our own age of Gentile calling, contemporary with "the power of Satan, the son of perdition—the Anti-christ." Now the next grand event reverses this—bruises the serpent's head, destroys Anti-christ, gives peace to the world, and God is all in all—the blessed source of all. His glory will cover the heavens and the earth be full of his praise. Amen.

Now who of all the future Anti-christ persuasion, ever began with the Bible and the facts of this subject, to make out his case?

Who of them knows how, and for what, the theory was invented?

Who of them has seen that their heretic interpolation comes between us and our only hope; and hence, that its character and location belongs to the apostolic portrayal of "the Anti-christ?"

The beauties of God's rainbow promise signals fair weather; yours make it foul—(the opposite in origin, aim and attitude). It belongs altogether to Anti-christ—surely so. Then let us leave all that—let us understand our calling, to wait and pray for Christ's coming. Amen. 1 Thess. i. 10; Titus ii. 11–14; 1 Cor. i. 7.

J. B. COOK.

Believe into Him, and be Baptized in His Name.

To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth into him shall receive remission of sins.

And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts x. 43, 48.

The first incorporates the person into Christ, into Abraham, into the holy stock, the good olive tree, the vine, and makes him partaker of the richness and fatness of pardon, grace and hope.

The last is resultant obedience, a joyous testimony of grace received, hope anchored.

So the leading apostle and the gospel historian applied "all the prophets" on the relation of faith and baptism.

Editor Restitution:

As many of the brethren and sisters scattered abroad would like to hear from me, I would like to say through the columns of THE RESTITUTION that I am preaching the gospel when and wherever I can. I have just closed a public discussion with a Baptist by the name of B. F. Meek. The questions debated were the kingdom and state of the dead. B. F. Meek affirmed that the kingdom of God predicted by the prophets, was set up during Christ's personal ministry. I affirmed that the Scriptures teach that man is unconscious between death and the resurrection. Three days was spent in arguing these propositions. Meek is considered an able man among the Baptists, but his ability, as I found out, did not consist in a knowledge of the Scriptures, but it consisted in slang and misrepresenting. I am all alone here in the one faith, and would say to the brethren in Southwestern Missouri, write to me, and let us work together. I teach a complete restitution (Acts iii. 21; Rom. v. 18,) and the blessing of all nations, not a few. Psa. lxxxvi. 9. I also teach that Christ gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time. 1 Tim. ii. 6.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

I would be most happy to send you an article on some practical subject, but will hold off until some future time, when my opportunity comes. Doctrinal subjects are good, but we may have an everlasting clatter about them without any cultivation of the graces of the spirit of Christ. Too many I fear are more troubled about what doctrines others hold, than they are concerning themselves, as to the manner in which they deal with their neighbors, ever unwilling to grant credit for Christian acts of kindness in others unless believing precisely as they do. For one I have learned to accept the good and reject the evil, so far as my judgment leads me, no matter from whom they come.

What think you, cannot we deal kindly, charitably, and meekly, with those who do not exactly understand certain points of doctrine as we?

Let us reject the error, but with kindness treat the erring. Draw them warmly toward us, by confessing our own littleness, and our mutual need of the aid of the Spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus, to aid us in walking the narrow path.

Yours in the great hope.

JOHN DONALDSON.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal its important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 14, 1878.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 23, 1878.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would fail convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a plain and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Mizpi Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently and again, * * It is next in point of excellence to doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M., Md.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a clearer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on this subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom,' advocated in a series of Ten Discourses."—J. "THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 8, 1882. NO. 10.

THE RESTITUTION,

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS: THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalizing then of the right-ones, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. Also a yearly bell of the true gospel, repentance, and conversion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

Communications.

THE SOUL OF MAN—No. 5.

H. H. DALL.

Having shown in my last two papers that the use of the term nephesh, the soul and life-word of the Old Testament, gives no warrant for even a supposition that man is a dual being, or, that he has an immortal soul within him—seeing that the "soul" can be made "fat," can be torn "in pieces," can be "strangled," can and does "die" and go into "the grave"—I will in this paper notice the term psukee, the soul and life-word of the New Testament, and see if its use will furnish a predicate for the popular dogma of immortal-soulism.

And first let me say that whatever shade of difference in definitions, if any, between nephesh and psukee as laid down by the lexicographers, the fact that in the Septuagint, or Greek version of the Old Testament, we find psukee as the rendering of nephesh, gives us indisputable evidence of corresponding import. So that if the nephesh-soul can die and go into the grave as we have seen, the psukee-soul being precisely the same can also die, and is not therefore immortal.

And let me further say that, the theological definition of any word laid down does not settle any question of dispute between Christians; as for instance the subject of baptism. You can never get a Baptist who very properly adopts the definition of baptizo, which is to immerse—and never to pour or sprinkle—to accept of Webster's or Worcester's theological definition which is "The application of water to the body by sprinkling," etc., when the truth is potent that in such a case the water only is sprinkled and not the person, the person remaining unbaptized. In order to obey the command of Christ the believer must be baptized—the body must be applied to the water, and not the water to the body. The candidate for baptism must be baptized in—in water, for, he cannot be baptized "with water," as our version erroneously reads. John's disciples were not "baptized" with the river Jordan, but "in the river Jordan." That pouring or sprinkling is not baptism is thus a fact susceptible of demonstration. To sprinkle any thing, as a liquid, seed, sand, or other fine substances, is to "scatter in small drops" or quantities. If you sprinkle water on the sand, it is not the sand that is sprinkled, but the water; and if you sprinkle or scatter sand on the floor, the sand is scattered, but not the floor. Hence it is an indisputable fact that, when water is poured or sprinkled on a candidate for baptism, the person is not baptized—nay, he is not even sprinkled. The great commission of Christ to his disciples is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is (baptistheis) immersed shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned." "And Peter said to them (on the day of Pentecost), Reform, and let each of you be immersed in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins; and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."—Emphatic Diaglott.

Thus we see that theological definitions settle nothing as to differences of opinion between churches and Christians. They only show how words are understood and used by different theologians.

Psukee is the only term rendered soul in the New Testament, and is found one hundred and five times, being translated soul fifty-eight times; life, forty times; mind, or its equivalent, five times; "you" and "us," referring to personal beings, twice. As nephesh in the Hebrew, so psukee in the Greek means (1.) a physical being; (2.) the life of a being; and (3.) the mind of a being, but never a being within a being.

The first time psukee occurs is in Matt. ii. 20, where it is rendered "life"—"For they are dead which sought the young child's life." Again, vi. 25, "Take no thought for your life .... Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" As if he had asked—Is not the life of the body of more importance than, merely, what shall we eat, and the body more than how shall it be clothed? So far we find psukee correctly rendered, but we now come to Matt. x. 28, where it is not correctly rendered as we propose to show. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." By the incorrect rendering of psukee—soul, and apokteinoi—kill, Christians have been unwittingly led to suppose that, if man can kill the body, but cannot kill the soul, the soul must be immortal. They never stop to see the last clause of the verse—which virtually declares that "both soul and body" of the wicked will be destroyed in gehenna—hell—contradicts and completely overthrows their cherished doctrine, and the argument drawn from the incorrect translation of the first clause of the verse. For, if the soul can be destroyed it is not immortal. But if it be true that man is not able to kill the soul, it does not, therefore, follow that God is not, especially when Christ declares that he is. Christ says (Luke xii. 4, 5): "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do (they cannot destroy the psukee—life of the Christian, which the apostle says is hid with Christ in God). But I will now forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into gehenna—hell (where every thing that was thrown was consumed, destroyed); yea I say unto you, fear him." Matt. x. 28 is translated in the Emphatic Diaglott Version as follows:

"Be not afraid of those who kill the body, but cannot destroy the (future) life; but rather fear him who can utterly destroy both life and body in gehenna." For says Christ (verse 39): "He that findeth his (psukee) life shall lose it: and he that loseth his (psukee) life for my sake shall find it." And again (xvi. 25, 26), he says: "For whosoever will save his (psukee) life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his (psukee) life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own (psukee) soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his (psukee) soul?" This language as recorded by Mark is about the same, but Luke puts it as follows: "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away (into gehenna)?" To lose one's life, then, is to lose one's self. John xii. 25 has the following: "He that loveth his (psukee) life shall lose it: and he that hateth his (psukee) life in this world shall keep it unto (zoen aionion) life eternal." The translators in putting "soul" four times in the verses quoted when they had used "life" ten times in connection (the same Greek word psukee occurring in the fourteen places quoted, and meaning the same thing) have laid themselves open to the charge of coloring the word of God in the interest of immortal-soulism. And yet by such translation they admit that the loss of life referred to occurs subsequent to the resurrection and judgment thereby overthrowing the doctrine of soul-torment, and sustaining the Bible doctrine of eternal death, or loss of life.

But what did Christ mean by saying, "Whosoever shall love his life (so much as to deny me, thereby saving his life in this world) shall lose it" (in the world to come)? Did he mean what he says—that such a man should lose his life, or, did he mean what the dogma of theologians compels them to assume, namely, that they shall live forever in misery? Can the candid reader believe that, living forever in misery is losing one's life?

If life is saved, it is saved from death; if life is lost, it is absolutely extinct. But Christ continues—"And he that hateth his life in this world (or is willing to lose it for Christ) shall keep it unto life eternal." The one losing it unto death eternal, the other saving it unto life eternal. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" How can any candid person say, in the light of the above, that losing life for Christ's sake in this world means literal death, as it surely does, but losing life in the world to come means misery, or losing happiness? And yet this is the untenable position which the advocates of immortal-soulism are obliged to take in their vain effort to sustain this unscriptural doctrine.

I have stated in a previous paper that theologians, and Christians generally, use the terms soul and spirit as referring to one thing, namely, to what they affirm to be an immortal entity in man, but that they are never thus used as synonyms in the Bible. To further verify my statement I refer the reader to the words of Paul (1 Thess. v. 23) which are often quoted to prove that the spirit is an entity distinct from the body, but which only proves what I have affirmed—that man has a spirit and soul as well as a body. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly (and how much 'wholly' means he tells us as follows); and I pray God your whole spirit (disposition) and soul (life) and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The Emphatic Diaglott has it—"And may your whole person—the spirit, and the soul, and the body—be preserved blameless." But if this passage proves a spirit-entity in man it also proves a soul-entity; for the same kind of evidence to show that the spirit is an entity, would as surely prove that the soul is an entity also, and that would prove two personalities in one man as really as one. But this would be proving too much for our "orthodox" friends who claim only one personality for the soul and spirit of man. And as this Scripture proves too much for their use as a proof text, it, with others like it, also proves fatal to their unscriptural assumption, as we shall further see by the following words of the apostle (Heb. iv. 12): "For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing (separating) asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Now I want my "orthodox" brother to tell me how the "immortal soul" can be separated from the "immortal spirit," as it is here affirmed of "soul" and "spirit." Do you say, by a begging of the question, that both cannot be immortal? you say truly then; but which is the immortal entity, the soul or the spirit? Will some Doctor of Divinity tell us, and then stick to it, and not fly from soul to spirit, and then to soul again in the vain effort to find and locate the "immortal part of man." For, if the spirit be immortal, the soul cannot be, as no one claims that man has two immortals. And we have shown in former papers that the spirit is the unconscious "breath of life" in man and beast; and when the word denotes the temper or disposition of man, as we have seen it often does, no one claims it to represent an entity in such a case. We have also shown that the soul dies and goes into the grave; and what more is left for us to prove?

But let us return to the Scripture last quoted and see if we can find an immortal soul, or an immortal spirit. St. Paul affirms that the word of God is so sharp and powerful that it divides asunder, or separates the soul from the spirit, and the joints from the marrow. If we are to understand this as being a literal result of the effects of the word of God, we must conclude that the apostle had reference to the death of the martyred saints—that the power of the gospel was such in their hearts that rather than give it up they were willing thus to die, and would die. In the eleventh chapter of this same epistle he refers to the faith and persecutions of Old Testament times; and also to those under the New, as follows: "Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (of whom the world was not worthy) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith (of their inheritance, which is the new earth) received not the promise: (they did not go to heaven at death) God having foreseen some better thing for us, that they (choris) apart from us should not be made perfect."

Whether Paul had his eye on the Christian martyrs or not when he wrote the verse under consideration, it was literally true that the gospel of Christ had power enough to keep them faithful when the infernal instruments of torture, under pagan and papal Rome, were applied, and they were torn limb from limb, and the joints and marrow, and the soul and the spirit were literally divided or separated, and they thus yielded up their breath and their life for Christ and truth. But if these words have reference only to the searching power of gospel truth, which, as the Diaglott has it, is "more cutting than any two-edged sword, cutting through even to a separation of Life and Breath, and of Joints and Marrow," spiritually, they are as fatal to the popular dogma as the passage before noticed.

In a former paper we have referred to the familiar language of Christ—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death"—which shows that he died without any exemption of "soul" or other parts; and also to the words of the Psalmist—"For thou wilt not leave my soul in (sheol) hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption," to which prophecy Peter, at Pentecost, refers as follows: "He (David) seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in (hades, the grave) hell, neither his flesh did see corruption,"—thus proving that Christ's "soul" not only died but went into the grave, from which, says Peter, "God raised him up, whereof we all are witnesses. It is an indisputable fact that Christ, the divine Son of God and the human son of Mary—divine because he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and human because he was born of the virgin Mary—possessed the same spirit, or breath of life, and the same soul, or life that man possesses, and that in death he yielded up his spirit, or breath and his soul, or life just as man does when he dies, and was unconscious in sheol—hades, the grave—"hell," until "God raised him up" the third day clothed in the vestments of immortality, so that he could exclaim, as recorded in Rev. i. 18, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, amen; and have the keys of (hades, the grave) hell and death,"—with which he will unlock the prison doors of death and hades (not "hell") and call to life and to judgment the sleeping, unconscious millions of every nation and of every age.

In my next paper, which will conclude the series, I propose to notice, briefly, a few passages most relied upon to prove the separate existence of the soul, and show that no such dogma is therein taught.

Letter From England.

Editor Restitution:

The Times, which I mailed since writing you a few days ago, you will see contains much about the persecutions of the Jews in Russia. Much though there be, every line is worth reading. A Russian lady, "O. K." endeavors to make matters appear more favorable to her countrymen. But see how the Times in its editorial takes her up.

I purpose sending you the latest number of the paper, which has the memorial signed N. M. Dollothschilds, "To His Imperial Majesty, Alexander III.," etc., but which memorial the Russian Ambassador declined to transmit. You may find room in THE RESTITUTION for part of the matter in the papers I have sent you; and I am persuaded your own pen will bow at the presentation of the dreadful statements.

With regard to the Jews, were I to speak from my own experience, when, between forty and fifty years since I entered business, I should call them adroit swindlers. There was then a rot in Manchester, on the lookout for young men beginning business; especially those but little acquainted with the town, and the cheating tact of these Jews sometimes succeeded, their plans being smartly devised. I was caught in their net to my severe cost. But to harbor feelings of hatred is not for us; we have not so learned Christ. The Jews have long been oppressed, driven from country to country, and beloved in not one, though tolerated and protected in some; they have been put to their wits' end to obtain a livelihood. They are yet beloved for the Father's sake.

I will add a word more about dealing with them—that of later years I have been well served by some here and in America.

The tide of open infidelity and blasphemy is threatening in England. It behooves us to be "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

I wrote you before concerning the subjects of the lectures of the Secularists, who openly invite discussion. Their lecturers are men of great learning, and high scientific attainments. A prominent one was formerly a Wesleyan minister. In vain may some of the clergy try to hush and frighten. The tide rises, and the clergy of all denominations will be disturbed more and more.

Watchman, what of the night? The pamphlet I send you is one of the indications of democratic temper in the people. Though Gambetta, the man so admired by the Lecturer, is politically down at present, he will play a part again. But how vain are the expectations of "a glorious time" being brought about by mortals! What a blessed hope is ours.

Our One Life.

'Tis not for man to trifle, life is brief,
And sin is here—
Our age is but the falling of a leaf,
A dropping tear.
We have no time to sport away the hours:
All must be earnest in a world like ours.

Not many lives, but only one have we—
One, only one.
How sacred should that one life ever be,
That narrow span—
Day after day filled up with blessed toil,
Hour after hour still bringing in its spoil.

Our being is no shadow of the sun,
No vacant dream,
No fable of those things that never were,
But only seem.
'Tis full of meaning as of mystery,
Though sternness and solemn may that meaning be.

Our sorrows are no phantoms of the night,
No idle tale,
Nor clouds that dust along a sky of light
On summer's gale.
They are the true realities of earth:
Pain is and compunction, even from our birth.

O present life, how brief, and poor and sad:
One heavy sigh!
O life to come, how long, how fair and glad:
An endless joy!
O to be done with daily dying here!
O to begin the living in yon sphere!

O day of time, how dark! O sky and earth!
How dull your hue!
O day of Christ, how bright! O sky and earth!
Made fair and new!
Come, better Eden, with thy fresher green:
Come, brighter Salem, gladden all the scene!

How to be a Gentleman.

"You see I am a gentleman!" said Will Thompson. "I will not take an insult." And the little fellow strutted up and down with rage.

He had been throwing stones at Peter Jones, and thought his anger proved him a gentleman.

"If you want to be a gentleman I should think you would be a gentle boy first," said his teacher. "Gentlemen do not throw stones at their neighbors. Peter Jones did not throw stones at you, and I think he is more likely to prove a gentleman."

"But he has patches on his pants," said Will.

"Had pantaloons do not keep a boy from being a gentleman, but a bad temper does. Now, William, if you want to be a gentleman you must first be a gentle boy."

A little further on the teacher met Peter Jones. Some stones had hit him, and he was hurt.

"Well, Peter, what is the matter between you and Will, this morning?" he asked.

"I was throwing a ball at one of the boys in play, sir, and I missed him and hit Will's dog."

"Then, when he threw stones at you why did you not throw back?"

"Because, sir, my mother says to be a gentleman I must be a gentle boy; and thought it best to keep out of his way until he cooled off a little."

The teacher walked on, but kept the boys in mind. He lived to see Will Thompson a rowdy, and Peter Jones a gentleman, respected by all.—Children's Friend.

Brightening All It Can.

The day had been dark and gloomy, when suddenly, toward night, the clouds broke, and the sun's bright rays streamed through, shedding a flood of golden light upon the country.

A sweet voice at the window called out in joyful tones: "Look! oh, look, papa, the sun is brightening all it can!"

"Brightening all it can? so it is," answered papa, "and you can be like it if you choose."

"How, papa? tell me how."

"By looking happy, and smiling on us all day; and never letting any tearful rain come into the blue of those eyes; only be happy and good; that's all."

The next day the music of the child's voice filled our ears from sunrise to dark; the little heart seemed full of light and love, and when asked why she was so happy, she replied, laughingly:

"Why, don't you see, papa, I'm the sun? I'm brightening all I can."

"And fill the house with sunshine and joy," answered papa.

Cannot little children be like the sun every day—brightening all they can? Try it, children.

Shall You Shine There?

They that be wise shall shine as the bright ness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.—Dan. xii. 3.

A recent English paper gives an account of the rescue of a young man from drowning in the sea, by a humble but brave man, who for his heroism was elected a member of the Royal Humane Society.

He was of course invited to attend the annual meeting of the Society, and found himself in the midst of lords and ladies and Earls and Countesses and distinguished personages, from whom he would have considered it the highest honor to receive recognition.

More than thirty persons who had been saved from drowning were guests on the occasion, and at a given signal these marched through the open ranks of the illustrous company assembled. A youth was noticed to look eagerly into the faces of the crowd as he passed, until suddenly breaking from the procession, he threw his arms about the young man's neck, kissing his face and calling him his deliverer, amid the tears and plaudits of the noblemen.

This young man shone as a star that evening, and was more than repaid for his kindness and courage.

How will it be with the believer who reads this? Will no one step out from the vast throng of the saved to thank the Lord for a kind word spoken, for a single effort to lead the soul to Christ?

Grand Falls in a River of the Northwest.

For two or three miles above the Shoshone falls the Snake river flows through immense chasms, with walls on either side hundreds of feet high. The river is full of rapids for miles, the descent being so great. At the upper Shoshone falls, known as the Twin or Little falls, the river is divided by an island, and the two streams rush over 6 precipice and fall into a pool 175 feet below.

As viewed from the bluff hundreds of feet above, the sight is grand, and from below there is still more to admire and awe the visitor.

Some four or five miles down the river we come to the great falls, where the entire river descends in a sheet 240 feet.

Some thirty or forty miles further down the stream is Salmon falls, extending quite a distance. The greatest of these falls is only twenty feet, but the forms and great number of the falls and cascades make it very beautiful.

But a short distance above the falls is the most remarkable sight we have ever seen. In the high bluffs along the river there issues numerous great springs, the waters of which fall over the rocks and are lashed to silvery streams and spray in their descent. The first of these pours over a cliff in a semi-circular form and falls over 200 feet. As seen from the opposite side of the river it is very beautiful. Further down the river is a much grander sight. A stream of water equal to a small river pours out of the bank and falls over the rocks in silvery streams of almost every conceivable shape and form, while the spaces between are lined with green moss or shrubs, so that it presents the appearance of an immense grotto.—Omaha Bee.

The Brightest Star.

The brightest star visible in the sky in February is Sirius, or the Dog Star. This star was long regarded as the nearest to the earth; but careful observations have shown that there are at least five stars whose distance is less.

The size of Sirius is computed to be two thousand times greater than our sun. The light and heat emitted by it are estimated to be one hundred times greater than our sun. Light, passing with the amazing velocity of 185,000 miles a second, requires upward of fourteen years to reach the earth from Sirius, which is, doubtless, the central sun of a planetary system vastly larger than our own.

If a cannon ball, flying at the rate of nineteen miles a minute, could be fired from the earth to Sirius, it would require no less than two millions of years to cross the vast space.

Yet Sirius, though the brightest star is only one of the myriads of self-luminous bodies which are visible on a clear winter evening. The Pleiades, which guided the mariner before he discovered the Pole Star a never-setting guide; Castor and Pollux, the presiding deities of the early navigators; the galaxy of stars, shining like a girdle of brilliant jewels, and the varying Algol, all give variety, beauty and sublimity to the sky when snow mantles the landscape and icicles reflect the light of the thousands of worlds which sparkle in the clear midnight sky.

In the sublime inspired poem of Job the question is asked: "Is it not God in the height of heaven? and behold the height of the stars, how high they are!" And David, the Sweet Singer of Israel, when calling upon men to praise God, in Psa. cxlvii. exclaimed: "He telleth the number of the stars, he calleth them all by their names."

A DESERTED ROCK-CITY.

The discovery of a deserted city, sixty miles long, cut out of the rocky face of a winding cliff, rewarded the efforts of Mr. Stevenson's Smithsonian Institution exploring party during its researches in New Mexico and Arizona the past season. This is by far the most important find yet made among the ancient haunts of the cliff dwellers. Some of the houses contain four or five dwellings, one on top of the other, and on the plateau above the cliff were found many ruins of temples of worship built of well-cut square stones. A comparison of it a collection of pottery and implements gathered in the cliff houses by the exploring party with those obtained in the Pueblo villages strengthens the theory that the Pueblo Indians are the degenerate descendants of the once powerful race that built the ruined cities of the plains, and that, retreating before some more warlike foe, carved out these singular dwellings on the sheer walls of dizzy precipices, and found in them, it may be for centuries, both fortresses and homes. Perhaps the hieroglyphic inscriptions seen by Mr. Stevenson will one day be deciphered and be found to contain the tragic history of the wasting away by wars and famines of this ill-fated people, who, like the conays of the Bible made the rocks their refuge.—Tribune.

Of all fears, the fear of a victorious infidelity seems to me to be the most foolish. Some articles of your creed may go, and your creed be better for losing them; but the great fundamental facts attested by human experience and by the world's history never go. They will last as long as humanity itself lasts, because it has been thoroughly wrought into the nature and experience of mankind.—Lyman Abbott.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 8, 1883.

WILL reply to some personal letters shortly. Calls from home have been somewhat frequent lately.

WE are reading the book sent us two weeks ago entitled "The Restitution of all Things," and can say that we are well pleased with the work so far as our examination has extended. We contemplate giving our readers sample extracts and fuller notice next week.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that is said by the mockers, scoffers, and triflers of our days, we are living in a grand and awful time. A most wonderful surprise awaits a careless church and an ungodly world. Our only safety is in watchfulness and prayer, and in a holy devoted life.

WE have been compelled to make the obituary notices contained in the present number comparatively brief, as we have not the room for more extended remarks on the characters and lives of the departed. By leaving off all that is extraneous we have tried to say as much in little as we well could. We were obliged to take the same course with an obituary sent for insertion.

WE have several good and approved articles from different correspondents which will soon appear. Among others we are glad to announce that both Brother and Sister Reed have sent very timely pieces, which will be given to our readers next week. We have also an article for our next entitled—"The Future of Palestine"—by E. W. Fish, M. D. A communication from Brother Bowles will not be long delayed. Others not named are not forgotten.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 6.

Bashan and Its Giant Cities.

J. L. PORTER A. M.

All Bashan, unto Salchah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan. For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of the giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron; is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man .... And the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants. Deut. III. 10-13.

THE CARAVAN.

On a bright and balmy morning in February, a party of seven cavaliers defiled from the East Gate of Damascus, rode for half-an-hour among the orchards that skirt the old city, and then, turning to the left, struck out, along a broad beaten path through the open fields, in a south-easterly direction. The leader was a wild-looking figure. His dress was a red cotton tunic or shirt, fastened round the waist by a broad leathern girdle. Over it was a loose jacket of dressed sheepskin, the wool inside. His feet and legs were bare. On his head was a flame-colored handkerchief, fastened above by a coronet of black camel's hair, which left the ends and long fringe to flow over his shoulders. He was mounted on an active, shaggy pony, with a pad for a saddle, and a hair halter for a bridle. Before him, across the back of his little steed, he carried a long rifle, his only weapon. Immediately behind him, on powerful Arab horses, were three men in Western costume: one of these was the writer. Next came an Arab, who acted as dragoman or rather courier; and two servants on stout hacks brought up the rear. On gaining the beaten track, our guide struck into a sharp canter. The great city was soon left behind, and, on turning, we could see its tall white minarets shooting up from the sombre foliage, and thrown into bold relief by the dark back-ground of Anti-Lebanon. The plain spread out on each side, smooth as a lake, covered with the delicate green of the young grain. Here and there were long belts and large clumps of dusky olives, from the midst of which rose the gray towers of a mosque or the white dome of a saint's tomb. On the south the plain was shut in by a ridge of black, bare hills, appropriately named Jebel-el-Aswad, "the Black Mountains;" while away on the west, in the distance, Hermon rose in all its majesty, a pyramid of spotless snow. From whatever point one sees it, there are few landscapes in the world which, for richness and soft enchanting beauty, can be compared with the plains of Damascus.

After riding about seven miles, during which we passed straggling groups of men—some on foot, some on horses and donkeys, and some on camels, most of them dressed like our guide, and all hurrying on in the same direction as ourselves—we reached the eastern extremity of the Black Mountains, and found ourselves on the side of a narrow green vale, through the centre of which flows the river Pharpar. A bridge here spans the stream; and beyond it, in the rich meadows, the Haurie Caravan was being marshalled. Up to this point the road is safe, and may be traveled almost at any time; but on crossing the Awaj, we enter the domains of the Bedawin, whose law is the sword, and whose right is might. Our further progress was liable to be disputed any moment. The attacks of the Bedawin, when made, are sudden and impetuous; and resistance, to be effectual must be prompt and decided. During the winter season, this eastern route is in general pretty secure, as the Arab tribes have their encampments far distant on the banks of the Euphrates, or in the interior of the desert; but the war between the Druses and the government, which had just been concluded, had drawn these daring marauders from their customary haunts, and they endured the rain and cold of the Syrian frontier in the hope of plunder. All seemed fully aware of this, and appeared to feel, here as elsewhere, that the hand of the Infinite is against every man. Consequently, stragglers hurried up and fell into the ranks; bales and packages on mules and camels were re-arranged and more carefully adjusted; muskets and pistols were examined, and cartridges got into a state of readiness; armed men were placed in something like order along the sides of the file of animals; and a few horsemen were sent on in front, to scour the neighboring hills and the skirts of the great plain beyond, so as to prevent surprise. A number of Druses who here joined the caravan, and who were easily distinguished by their snow-white turbans, and bold, manly bearing appeared to take the chief direction in these warlike preparations, though, as the caravan was mainly made up of Christians, one of themselves, called Musa, was the nominal leader. It was a strange and exciting scene, and one would have thought that any attempt to reduce such a refractory and heterogeneous multitude of men and animals to anything like order would be absolutely useless. Some of the camels and donkeys breaking loose scattered their loads over the plain, and spread confusion all round them; others growled, and kicked, and brayed; drivers shouted and gesticulated; men and boys ran through the crowd, asking for missing brothers or companions; horsemen galloped from group to group, outreating and threatening by turns. At length, however, the order was given to march. It passed along from front to rear, and the next moment every sound was hushed; the very beasts seemed to comprehend its meaning, for they fell quietly into their places, and the long files, now four and five abreast, began to move over the grassy plain with a stillness which was almost painful.

Leaving the fertile valley of the Pharpar, and crossing a low, bleak ridge, we entered one of the dreariest regions I had hitherto seen in Syria. A reach of rolling table-land extended for several miles on each side—shut in on the right by black hills, and on the left, by bare rugged banks. Not a house, nor a tree, nor a green shrub, nor a living creature, was within the range of vision. Loose black stones and boulders of basalt were strown thickly over the whole surface, and here and there thrown into rude heaps; but whether by the hand of man, or by some freak of nature, seemed doubtful. For nearly two hours we wound our weary way through this wilderness; now listening to the stories of Musa, and now following him to the top of some hillock, in the hope of getting a peep at a more inviting landscape. At length we came to the brow of a short descent leading into a green meadow, with the traces of an old camp at one side round a little fountain, near which were some tombs with rude headstones. We were told that this is a favorite camping-ground of the Anezeh during the spring. Immediately beyond the meadow a plain opened before us, stretching on the east and west as far as the eye could see, and southward reaching to the base of the Hauran mountains. It is flat as a lake, covered with deep, rich, black soil, without rock or stone, and, even at this early season, giving promise of luxuriant pasturage. Some conical tells are seen at intervals, rising up from its smooth surface, like rocky islets in the ocean. This is the plain of Bashan, and though now desolate and forsaken, it showed us how rich were the resources of that old kingdom.

With increased speed—but still in the deepest silence—the caravan swept onward over this noble plain. We could scarcely distinguish any track, though Musa assured us we were on the Sultany, or "king's highway." It seemed to us that his course was directed by a conical hill away on the southern horizon, rather than by any trace of a road on the plain itself. As we advanced, we began to notice a black line extending across the plain in the distance in front. Gradually it became more and more defined and, ere daylight waned, it seemed like a Cyclopean wall built in some bygone age, and afterwards shattered by an earthquake. Riding up to Musa, I asked what it was. "That," said he, "is the Lejah." Lejah is the name now given to the ancient province of Trachonitis; and this bank of shattered rocks turned out to be its northern border. The Lejah, as we shall see hereafter, is a vast field of basalt, placed in the midst of the fertile plain of Bashan. Its surface has an elevation of some thirty feet above the plain, and its border is everywhere as clearly defined by the broken cliffs as any shore-line. In fact, it strongly reminded me of some parts of the coast of Jersey. And this remarkable feature has not been overlooked in the topography of the Bible. Lejah, my readers will remember, corresponds to the ancient Argob. Now, in every instance in which that province is mentioned by the sacred historians, there is one descriptive word attached to it—chebel; which our translators have unfortunately rendered in one passage "region," and in another "country" (Deut. iii. 4, 13, 14; 1 Kings iv. 13), but which means "a sharply defined border, as if measured off by a rope" (chebel); and it thus describes, with singular accuracy and minuteness, the rocky rampart which encircles the Lejah.

THE DESERTED CITY.

The sun went down, and the short twilight was made shorter by heavy clouds which drifted across the face of the sky. A thick rain began to fall, which made the prospect of a night march or a bivouac equally unpleasant. Still I rode on through the darkness, striving to dispel gloomy forebodings by the stirring memory of Bashan's ancient glory, and the thought that I was now treading its soil, and on my way to the great cities founded and inhabited four thousand years ago by the giant Rephaim. Before the darkness set in, Musa had pointed out to me the towers of three or four of these cities rising above the rocky barrier of the Lejah. How I strained my eyes in vain to pierce the deepening gloom! Now I knew that some of them must be close at hand. The sharp ring of my horse's feet on pavement startled me. This was followed by painful stumbling over loose stones, and the twisting of his hoofs among jagged rocks. The sky was black overhead; the ground black beneath; the rain was drifting in my face, so that nothing could be seen. A halt was called; and it was with no little pleasure I heard the order given for the caravan to rest till the moon rose.

"Is there any spot," I asked of an Arab at my side, "where we could get shelter from the rain?"

"There is a house ready for you," he answered.

"A house! Is there a house here?"

"Hundreds of them; this is the town of Burak."

We were conducted up a rugged winding path, which seemed, so far as we could make out in the dark and by the motion of our horses, to be something like a ruinous staircase. At length the dark outline of high walls began to appear against the sky, and presently we entered a paved street. Here we were told to dismount and give our horses to the servants. An Arab struck a light, and, inviting us to follow, passed through a low, gloomy door, into a spacious chamber.

I looked with no little interest round the apartment of which we had taken such unceremonious possession; but the light was so dim, and the walls, roof, and floor so black, that I could make out nothing satisfactorily. Getting a torch from one of the servants I lighted it, and proceeded to examine the mysterious mansion; for, though drenched with rain, and wearied with a twelve hours' ride, I could not rest. I felt an excitement such as I never before had experienced. I could scarcely believe in the reality of what I saw, and what I heard from my guides in reply to eager questions. The house seemed to have undergone little change from the time its old master had left it; and yet the thick mirrour crust on the door showed that it had been deserted for long ages. The walls were perfect, nearly five feet thick, built of large blocks of hewn stones, without lime or cement of any kind. The roof was formed of large slabs of the same black basalt, lying as regularly, and jointed as closely as if the workmen had only just completed them. They measured twelve feet in length, eighteen inches in breadth, and six inches in thickness. The ends rested on a plain stone cornice, projecting about a foot from each side wall. The chamber was twenty feet long, twelve wide, and ten high. The outer door was a slab of stone, four and a half feet high, four wide, and eight inches thick. It hung upon pivots formed of projecting parts of the slab, working in sockets in the lintel and threshold; and though so massive, I was able to open and shut it with ease. At one end of the room was a small window with a stone shutter. An inner door, also of stone, but of finer workmanship, and not quite so heavy as the other, admitted to a chamber of the same size and appearance. From it a mark larger door communicated with a third chamber, to which there was a descent by a flight of stone steps. This was a spacious hall, equal in width to the two rooms, and about twenty-five feet long by twenty high. A semi-circular arch was thrown across it, supporting the stone roof; and as it was so large that camels could pass in and out, opened on the street. The gate was of stone, and in its place, but some rubbish had accumulated on the threshold, and it appeared to have been open for ages. There our horses were comfortably installed. Such were the internal arrangements of this strange old mansion. It had only one story; and its simple, massive style of architecture gave evidence of a very remote antiquity. On a large stone which formed the lintel of the gateway, there was a Greek inscription; but it was so high up, and my light so faint, that I was unable to decipher it, though I could see that the letters were of the oldest type. It is probably the same which was copied by Burckhardt, and which bears a date apparently equivalent to the year B. C. 306!

Owing to the darkness of the night and the shortness of our stay, I was unable to ascertain from personal observation, either the extent of Burak, or the general character of its buildings; but the men who gathered round me, when I returned to my chamber, had often visited it. They said the houses were all like the one we occupied, only some smaller, and a few larger, and that there were no great buildings. Burak stands on the north-east corner of the Lejah, and thus one of the frontier towns of ancient Argob. It is built upon rocks, and encompassed by rocks so wild and rugged as to render it a natural fortress.

After a few hours' rest, the order for march was again given. We found our horses at the door, and mounting at once we followed Musa. The rain had ceased, the sky was clear, and the moon shone brightly, half revealing the savage features of the environs of Burak. I can never forget that scene. Huge masses of shapeless rock rose up here and there among and around the houses, to the height of fifteen and twenty feet—their summits jagged, and their sides all shattered. Between them were pits and yawning fissures, as many feet in depth; while the flat surfaces of naked rock were thickly strewn with huge boulders of basalt. The narrow tortuous road by which Musa led us out was in places carried over chasms, and in places cut through cliffs. An ancient aqueduct ran alongside of it, which, in former days, conveyed a supply of water from a neighboring winter stream to the tanks and reservoirs from which the town gets its present name, Burak ("the tanks"). A slow but fatiguing ride of an hour brought us out of this labyrinth of rocks and over a torrent bed into a fine plain. We soon after passed the caravan, which had started some time before us; and, as there was no danger to be apprehended, we continued at a rapid pace southward. The dawn of morning showed us the rugged features and rocky border of the Lejah close upon our right, thickly studded with old towns and villages; while upon our left a fertile plain stretched away to the horizon. And here we observed with surprise, that there was not a trace of human habitation, except on the top of the little conical hills which rise up at long intervals. This plain is the home of the Ishmaelite, who has always dwelt "in the presence (literally, in the face) of his brethren" (Gen. xvi. 12), and against whose bold incursion there never has been any effectual barrier except the munitions of rocks and the heights of hills.

We rode on. The hills of Bashan were close in front; their summits clothed with oak forests, and their sides studded with old towns. As we ascended them, the rock-fields of the Lejah were spread out on the right; and there, too, the ancient cities were thickly planted. Not less than thirty of the three-score cities of Argob were in view at one time on that day; their black houses and ruins half concealed by the black rocks amid which they are built, and their massive towers rising up here and there like the "keeps" of old Norman fortresses. How we longed to visit and explore them. But political reasons made it necessary we should, in the first place, pay our respects to one of the leading Druse chiefs. On them depended the success of our future researches. Without their protection we could not ride in safety a single mile through Hauran. I felt confident that protection would be cheerfully granted; still I thought it best not to draw the bridle until we reached the town of Hiyat, from whence, after a short pause to drink coffee with the Sheikh, who would not let us pass, we rode to the residence of Assad Amer, at Hit, where we met with a reception worthy of the hospitality of the old patriarchs.

Brevities.

About 50,000 acres of land between Jaffa and Jerusalem have been secured on which to form a colony for the persecuted Jews of Europe.

Egypt, in fact, says the correspondent of the London Times, is in the hands of one man. Arabi Bey, the Minister of War. The new Ministry is formed by him and by him only. The Egyptian Cabinet is ruled by Arabi Bey with more absolute authority than even Prince Bismarck exercises. He does not argue, but orders, and his word is law. He paid a visit to his President the other day, but was accompanied by four hundred officers. His Ministry is crowded with natives, who beg of him every kind of favor. A double line of guards is necessary to keep off the petitioners. The people treat him with superstitious respect. Some hold him to be a direct descendant of the Prophet; others treat him as one inspired; a few think he may be El-Mahdi, the sacred Imam so long expected, who will restore Islam to its prestine glory.

COLORS OF THE SKY.

The explanation of the colors of the morning and evening skies is thus stated by Sir John Lubbock in his presidential address before the British Association: Tyndall has taught us that the blue of the sky is due to the reflection of the blue rays by the minute particles floating in the atmosphere. Now, if from the white light of the sun the blue rays are thus selected, those which are transmitted will be yellow, orange, and red. Where the distance is short, the transmitted light will appear yellowish. But as the sun sinks towards the horizon the atmospheric distance increases, and consequently the number of the scattering particles. They weaken in succession the violet, the indigo, the blue, and even disturb the proportions of green. The transmitted light under such circumstances must pass from yellow through orange to red, and thus, while we at noon are admiring the deep blue of the sky, the same rays, robbed of their blue, are elsewhere lighting up the evening sky with all the glories of sunset.

ACCARA BERZELIS.

Gassendi, a French philosopher, contemporary of Lord Bacon, first gave the classical name of Aurora Borealis. Others have called it Aurora Polaris, for there is also an Aurora Australis, similar phenomena being witnessed in the Antarctic regions. The Portuguese navigator, D'Ulloa, is the first who describes the Southern Lights, about 1743; and Captain Cook also beheld them in 1777. Sir James Ross, in his famous Antarctic exploring expedition witnessed magnificent displays. Many of the accounts in old chronicles and histories, describing armies in the sky meeting and contending with fiery spears and darts, sometimes attended with waves of blood, can only refer to unusual displays of the Aurora Borealis. Such references are frequent in the mediæval chronicles. But before these days, Aristotle, Pliny, and other classical writers, alluded to the same mysterious lights. They were usually regarded as portents of evil foreboding. But the Shetland people called them "The Merry Dancers." The North American Indians thought they were the spirits of their departed people roaming through the spirit-world.

News Items.

LONDON, March, 5.—There were special prayers and thanksgiving services in nearly all the churches and chapels of England to-day with reference to the Queen's escape.

The Queen was in no way so much affected by any message as that from President Arthur.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 5.—General Skobeleff's return to this city was greeted to-day by large crowds of enthusiastic people, who cheered him heartily. He has been elected an honorary member of the Cyril Methodius Slavonic Society at Odessa, which has conferred upon Korsoreries, the Herzegovinan insurgent leader, a similar mark of sympathy and approval.

Hessie Helfmann, the Nihilist, who received a respite from execution for the murder of the Czar, died in childbirth at St. Petersburg.

ALGIERS, March 5.—A dispatch from Ain-Sefra says a body of 300 French reconnoitering in a southernly direction, was surprised and defeated by insurgents. Fifteen hundred insurgents after words endeavored to bar the passage of the French. The insurgents were completely routed, leaving 100 killed and wounded. The French lost twelve killed and wounded.

PESTH, Hungary, March 5.—A shaft in a mine near Telitza caved in to-day. There are about forty men and boys missing.

GENEVA, Switzerland, March 5.—Strong earthquake shocks occurred yesterday around Beilinzone, in the canton of Tesino.

BELGRADE, Servia, March 5.—Prince Milan will soon be declared King of Servia.

AN AWFUL STROKE OF LIGHTNING.

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 3.—A few nights ago, in Darlington county, seven colored men were camping on a turpentine farm, where they had been working during the day. A heavy storm came up, when a flash of lightning killed three of the men instantly, and wounded the other four fatally.

Our Meeting at Plum River, Ill.

Owing to a delay in the publication of our notice for a general meeting, caused by a misplacement of the manuscript, and the extremely bad weather just at the time—Feb. 24-26—our attendance from abroad was but small, yet the house was well filled by those near. The discourses and remarks were fitted to the occasion, and all the brethren present felt comforted.

The Plum River congregation is one the oldest we have in Northern Illinois, and contains many noble members, ready to respond to duty whenever demanded. But soon they are to be deprived of brother J. S. Arnold and family, with whom they feel loth to part, and who has been for many years their stay and comfort, giving to them the bread of life, and advice in many ways. Brother Arnold soon is to change his location to Jamesport, Davis county, Missouri. There, we learn, will be about one dozen members, and under Brother Arnold's care will expect the number to largely increase. We would say to the brethren in that part of Missouri that you would do well to form Brother Arnold's acquaintance. He is a good worker, able in the word, and a safe brother in every respect. We regret to have to be deprived of his labors here, but hope that our loss here will there be your gain.

I continue my labors with the Plum River congregation for another year, and pray divine wisdom for our general welfare and growth.

Brethren, I was selected to fix the time and place for our general meeting in June. Will some one send in an invitation for the meeting.

O. M. MYERS.

Life's End.

"It is finished." We are ever taking leave of something that will not come back again. We let go, with a pang, portion after portion of our existence. However dreary we may have felt life to be here, yet when that hour comes—the winding up of all things, the last grand rush of darkness on our spirits, the hour of that awful sudden wrench from all that we have ever known or loved, the long farewell to sun, moon, stars and light—brother man, I ask you this day, and I ask myself, humbly and fearfully, what will then be finished? When it is finished, what will it be? Will it be the butterfly existence of pleasure, the mere life of science, a life of uninterrupted sin and self-gratification; or will it be, "Father, I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do?"—Robertson of Brighton.

True faith proves its truth by its willingness to use all the lights of modern science and all the eyes of modern criticism, that it may get the nearer to the historical Christ, convinced that it can look in his face without fear and without dismay. The man that best knew him most loved him, and to stand in his immediate presence is to be touched with a deeper reverence than can be awakened by the broken image reflected in the tradition or phantasies of men.—A. M. Fairbairn.

OBITUARY.

BARNHILL.—Died very suddenly, at Argos, Ind., Feb. 20, 1882, Mrs. Sarah K. wife of Elder H. S. Barnhill, aged 68 years, two months, and three days.

Sarah Knapp was a native of the State of Vermont, where she was born Dec. 17, 1813. She was married to H. S. Barnhill June 11, 1840. With her husband she had resided in Marshall Co., Ind., 36 years, living continuously on the farm where she died. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom survive her death. She retired to rest on the evening previous to her death and rose in the morning of the day of her decease—dressed herself as usual; but feeling something like an attack of sinking away coming on, she returned to her bed, and soon passed into that sleep in Jesus from which none ever wake to weep. We could write a long obituary, but forbear; and briefly say that she has left behind her a life record of devotion and usefulness that will not be soon forgotten by the church with which she was associated, nor by the community at large. We have laid her away in the chambers of peace to await the day when the Lord shall make up his jewels, when we expect to see her numbered among salvation's heirs in God's everlasting kingdom. The rest—sweet rest—she so often spoke of is hers, till she enters the sweeter rest of the Eternal Home.

WILSON.—Died Feb. 24, 1882, at Argos, Ind., Miss Isobel Wilson, aged 26 years, 3 months, and 27 days.

The disease with which our much loved young sister died, was consumption. About nine years ago she made a public profession of her faith, and was baptized, since which time she adorned that profession by the whole course of her life and conversation. On Sunday, Dec. 18, 1881, she was assisted to the place of meeting for the last time, and we all felt that we should never more see her in her accustomed place when the little band of believers should meet to worship God and commemorate the sufferings and death of God's precious Messiah. Our forebodings were realized. At our regular monthly meeting, in February, she was brought into our house of worship in the casket, with her pale hands folded over a pulseless heart. Again we repaired to the cemetery, and placed away our sister—so young—so beautiful—in one of the little rest-rooms of the house prepared for all living, to await the coming Redeemer and resurrection glories.

TABER.—Died Feb. 28, 1882, of consumption, Samuel Dennis Taber, aged 26 years, 10 months, and three days.

Our young brother Taber was born April 25, 1835, in Marshall Co., Ind., and was married to Miss Ann Eliza Haines Oct. 17, 1877. Both he and his companion made a public profession of their faith under the labors of Bro. H. V. Reed in 1875. Both united with the church Dec. 9, 1875. Of their two children one was buried on Friday, Jan. 20, 1882, and the other with its mother is left—the one an orphan—the other a widow—to mourn their loss—the former of a kind father—the latter of a devoted husband. Clinging to life for the sake of wife and child, as well as for that inate love of existence that is so characteristic of the young, yet he resigned himself to the inevitable, and sleeps side by side with buried kindred till the night of death shall give place to the dawning of the day of God.

BECK.—Died Jan. 18, 1882, at Frederick City, Md., Nicholas, son of Br. and Sr. Beck, aged 3 years, 8 months, and 27 days.

Br. and Sr. Beck and their believing children are every way worthy of all the comfort that the word of God can afford. "Thus saith the Lord: Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy."

Sweet be thy sleep—no trouble near
Shall mock thy peaceful breast;—
Come, O our great Redeemer, come,
And give thy people rest.

COMMUNICATED.

MARRIED.

PATTISON—WINSLOW.—In Hutchinson, Kan, at the residence of Dr. W. L. Winslow, Feb. 19, 1882, by A. H. Post, Mr. T. A. Pattison, of Covington, Ky., and Miss Retta Winslow of Hutchinson, Kan.

WINSLOW—BRAY.—In Cleveland, Kan., Sept. 20, 1881, by Elder Levi Hess, Mr. A. M. Winslow and Miss Kate Bray.

HARRISON—HENRY.—At the Island, LaPorte Co., Ind., Feb. 15, 1882, Geo. Harrison and Loretta A. Henry, daughter of brother Geo. Henry. May they enjoy a happy life here, and at last be crowned with eternal life in the coming kingdom.

ADVENT.

My eyes are weary with long, long watching
That sees the Advent moon grow full and wane;
My straining gaze no gleam of hope is catching,
My breath stands white and still upon the pane.

I see the snow-wreaths lift along the meadows
Before the wind, like spirits gliding by;
When, when shall I behold the fleeing shadows
Which still the promised day-break flood the sky?

O Watchman! is there yet the sign or glory
To break the darkness of the eastern gate?
No voice that tells again the wondrous story?
For oh, the promised Bridegroom tarries late.

The bride stands waiting now before the portal,
Where long her watch and fasting she hath borne:
Will he not come once more, with love immortal,
To fold her close and bid her cease to mourn?

Will he not whisper of a tender blessing,
To bid her aching heaviness be stilled?
Her wants and woes and bitter wrongs redressing—
To fill her love and longing all he filled?

O Watchman! speed thee up beyond the fountain:
Does nothing promise my impatient sight?
Break through the azure-lengths on the sacred mountain,
Wake up mid-heaven, and speak some sign of light?

The ruby are dark that point the east the morning;
The dove no longer finds the rocky cleft:
No shield against the cold world's cruel scorning
For her, of home and Bridegroom both bereft.

And yet her lips are fragrant with the blessing
That soothed the weary and hath warmed the cold;
Her touch still lingers where the hands were pressing
The wounds of them she drew within the fold.

Her work be ready for his dear approaching:
Her lamp stands burning with a steady ray:
Will he not answer to her faithful loving
And bring the darkness into perfect day?

We are still looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who shall crown us with immortality if he finds us worthy. May God so help us to live that he will say "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," etc., etc.

We went up to Floyd County last Saturday, to attend a meeting held there by Elders Ramsey and Marsh. It rejoiced my heart to meet again with the brethren of like faith. The meeting had been progressing for two weeks and they proposed to continue it another week. God grant that much good may be done. The brethren have a good house of their own there. They have secured brother Ramsey for another year to preach for them, which is sufficient guarantee that they will have good preaching, and nothing to hinder them from having interesting meetings.

Brother Ramsey is a workman that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. May God bless him in every effort to do good.

May you have divine help in your duties as Editor is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

WATSON, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

In reading the columns of your valuable paper, I am impressed with the idea that a few lines from a Watson believer will not be unpleasantly received by friends who have been with us in days of yore, and who know something of our religious faith.

For years we have listened to thoughts from different believers in the Advent faith, and still a very few seemingly out of the mass have let their hearts receive the mighty truths of the Bible as taught by them. Had they been given to us with less cold speculation as to who should be the happy kings, priests and rulers in the blessed future, had heart and brain worked together in telling those beautiful and grand truths, the years would not have passed fraught with so little fruit of reward to those who were honestly working for what they thought was the pressing need of the people. We believe each have done their work as they truly thought it should be done, but they failed to reach the heart.

Now the way is opening brighter than ever before. A little more than a year ago Brother Benj' Woodward came among us, and possessing a heart so large that the massive frame he is blessed with is only sufficient to hold it, he at once entered into the wants and sympathies of the people, and night after night, through weather fair or foul, the church was filled with eager, earnest listeners, who anxiously sought after the "pearl of great price," became convinced that the Bible was indeed a book of grand realities, and not a mysterious something, that God had kindly (or unkindly) veiled from their eyes, as taught by Orthodox ministers everywhere, and so the good seed sown on fertile soil springs up, and week after week some new one has developed into a living, growing, strong and healthy believer; until at present Watson wears a brighter smile for what the future holds in store for her, than ever before.

Surely the stars in brother Woodward's crown will be brighter for what he is doing, for not only here is developed the fruits of his labors, but in every place where his work has called him this winter he has been very successful.

Many a happy heart in Croton and Hesperia can testify to the truth that has been brought to them through his earnest work of the past weeks. In both places he has organized a church, and in Hesperia several new believers have put on Christ by baptism. He is among them now for the third time this season, strengthening and helping them in his whole-hearted, clear-headed way; doing the work there that they believe no other at present can do, and which he thanks the Lord he is able to perform.

In Pavilion, a town south of Kalamazoo, the people, through his efforts, are anxiously studying, surely and steadily gaining the right. And so, thank God, the good work goes on, and loving and being loved by the wise, true and gentle Savior is becoming a large part of many lives.

Editor Restitution:

I hope this note will find you well, as I am, thank God. I am still laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, and can say—not to boast, but to his glory, —what many of the preaching brethren cannot say, that it is now about forty-two years since I left the Wesley Conference, and no brother promised me a dollar, nor from any society from that day to this.

We have been now about five months in Northern Michigan. I expect to be in Chicago in a few days, and so on to Minnesota. I would say those who believe in God and live to him will should never despair for themselves or for the world. It is an heathenish and infidel philosophy that puts the better ages in the past. Let me now say, whatever we do, wherever we be, we can never cease to be responsible to him. He has appointed us to do his work. He has given us the means, the faculties and the opportunity, and he holds us answerable for using them well. So far as we are true to our high destiny, we are warranted in looking upon ourselves as co-laborers with the Builder of all worlds. Thus our accountability to God, fully accepted and faithfully met, will raise above everything that is mean and selfish and impure. It will make us believe and feel that we always have something great and good to live for. What the world wants most is men in whose minds the great thought of responsibility to God is ever present, men who are made strong by the consciousness that they are doing God's work, and mean to do it—these receive God's approbation.

Let us, his saints, all be watching and waiting, with lamps trimmed and loins girded, earnestly expecting the time when we, the poor despised ones of earth, shall so come with Christ, and to the dismay of the despising world, we shall be gloriously manifested as the Sons of God, for which I pray.

Your brother in Christ.

We have a good house for worship here, and a church of about fifty members, most of these believing as I do, that God has purposed to bring every human being to a knowledge of the truth or gospel in his own due time, and they will be saved or lost as they voluntarily accept or willfully reject it, and they cannot reject till they have a knowledge of it, consequently all can and will be judged by the gospel.

We have had an organization twenty years and our chapel fourteen; we have had preaching most of the time. Our present pastor has been here four years—A. P. Moore. He does not believe in future probation. He has baptized several every year, and the church is now in a good prosperous spiritual condition. We are situated in a farming community, with a Baptist church within a stone's throw.

JEWISH PERSECUTIONS.

Students of Biblical history do not need to be reminded that the Jews suffered terrible persecution in the early ages of the world, nor do those who recall to mind the heart-rending narratives of Josephus require to be told that as soldiers and martyrs members of the heroic and immortal race are entitled to hold a foremost place among mankind. The striking physical features of the Jews are not more pronounced than their destiny to suffer from persecution seems to be assured. It would almost appear that it was necessary to attempt their extirpation in order to ensure their survival and appearance all over the earth. They have flourished in spite of massacres on a wholesale scale, and excel in a knowledge of trade in defiance of edicts denying them the rights of citizenship. They are ineradicable, and possess inherent powers of growth against which the restrictive laws of nations, the ban of society, the antagonism of bigotry, the interdicts of monarchs, and the decrees of senates have been wholly futile or of only slight avail. Although at one time in England, and still in many countries oppressed by rulers and destitute of ordinary privileges—forbidden to acquire land to engage in manufacturing operations, and otherwise placed at every conceivable disadvantage, Jews have amassed enormous wealth, and have become, in many instances, the bankers of the people by whom they have been degraded, maltreated, and reviled. Forced at one time to live in an exclusive quarter of a city or town, they still cling with more or less tenacity to particular districts, and even where they are equal with their fellow-citizens before the law, Jews are virtually separate from other members of the community. Sufferings and persecutions protracted throughout long ages have combined to strengthen the bond of fraternity among themselves, and foster that undying sympathy for their brethren in misfortune, which is recognised as a traditional glory of their race. It is sad to think that in this age it is still necessary to advance the touching plea on behalf of Jews which Shakspere put into the mouth of Shylock. At a very early period Jews in Spain were prohibited from making converts, and an ecclesiastical decree forbade them even to invoke a blessing, after their own form of religious observance, upon the country. Constantine denounced them as "that most hateful of all people," and although under Julian the Apostate their condition was momentarily improved, the ultimate fall of the West Roman Empire left them to the tender mercies of oppressors. The Franks and Spanish Visigoths "inflicted on them frightful persecutions," and they were treated with diabolical brutality on many occasions in different parts of the Byzantine empire. In Italy so-called "Christian" intolerance often broke out against them with fury, and it was only by making large pecuniary sacrifices that they managed to escape annihilation. Fortunately they were frequently protected by the Papal authority, or, in their professed zeal for the Catholic faith, the Italians would have fleeced them of their property, if, indeed they did not put them to death. The ninth century in France found them the objects of envy, cupidity, and hatred—"Kings, bishops, feudal barons, and even the municipalities joining in a veritable carnival of persecution." Several centuries of oppression so severe that "their history is a successive series of massacres" followed.

Louis the Ninth issued an edict ordering the destruction of their sacred books, and Philippe the Fair expelled them from France "with all the accompaniments of cruelty." During the religious epidemic in Languedoc known as the "Rising of the Shepherds," the Jews were dealt with in a merciless manner. So horrible was the treatment to which they were subjected by the frenzied and fanatical mob, that it is on record "that in one place, Verdun, on the Garonne, the Jews, in the madness of their agony, threw down their children to the furious crowds from the tower in which they were gathered, hoping, but in vain, to appease the demoniacal rage of their assailants." At Chinon, in the ensuing year, having been suspected by the ignorant populace of causing a plague which ravaged the district, "a deep ditch was dug, an enormous pile raised, and a hundred and sixty of both sexes burned to ashes together." In Germany the Jews were for ages exposed to persecution, and are not, perhaps, wholly exempt even in the present enlightened years of grace. On several occasions attempts were made to exterminate them "throughout all the cities of the empire," and during the "Black Death" they were murdered and burned by thousands, "many seeking death amidst the conflagrations of their own synagogues." In Switzerland, Poland, and Lithuania they were treated with less barbarity in the middle ages, but in Russia and Hungary they were alternately encouraged, persecuted, despoiled, and banished. The fate of Jews in Spain during the fifteenth century was appalling. Thousands were burned alive, and it is said that "sometimes the Popes and nobles shuddered at the fiendish zeal of the Inquisition, and tried to mitigate it, but in vain." Their expulsion by command of Ferdinand and Isabella has even been regarded as a calamity next in magnitude to the destruction of Jerusalem itself, and their sufferings—denied a home in nearly every surrounding country, and their presence long tolerated in none, baffles description. In Portugal it was decreed by King Emanuel that all Jewish children under fourteen years of age should be torn from their parents, and brought up as Christians. "Agony drove the mothers mad, and they destroyed both boys and girls with their own hands" to prevent them falling into those of their persecutors. In Holland their fate was more tolerable, and they were allowed "to settle and trade" nearly three hundred years ago. The Jews did not, however, acquire the rights of citizenship there until the close of the last century. In England the Jews found a friend in Cromwell, and by the time that the "Merry Monarch" had been restored to the throne they received legal recognition. Since that period they have steadily acquired national, religious, civil, and political rights, until they are now on an equality with all other English citizens. At a time when the persecution of the Jews in Russia and Poland attracts such marked attention, and the people of this country are justly indignant at the treatment they have received at the hands of Christian subjects of the Czar, it may serve a useful purpose to recall the fact that they were formerly treated with incredible barbarity in England, that a quarter of a century has not elapsed since the whole of their "disabilities" were removed by Parliament, and that the Jews up to within the last hundred and fifty years had to be thankful to Great Britain for very small mercies indeed.—Manchester Guardian, Feb. 13.

The Rapture.

THE GREED OF GOLD.

The great sources of trouble the world over, in our age, is the inordinate desire to accumulate money and the unusual opportunities offered in the new world to do it, have stimulated this desire to a remarkable, not to say alarming, degree. Everything else in life is sacrificed to this accursed greed of gold. Yet it is not gold for its own sake, but the desire for the thing which money brings, which has taken such complete possession of modern society. Never had money such power as to-day and never was that power so fully appreciated or so blindly worshipped.

To get rich is the one great absorbing hope of multitudes and everything else goes down before it. Ease, health, knowledge, reputation, family and friends, honor, virtue and even life itself are sacrificed to this unholy greed of gain. That priceless treasure, the peace of mind which comes of a pure conscience, is little thought of and is truly bartered for gold. To have a reputation for commercial honor is yet sought for, but generally for the means it affords of business success, for without the reputation for honor confidence is impossible, and without the confidence of our fellows success is impossible. To secure, therefore, an honorable name without practicing the ways of uprightness is the problem which the multitude are forever attempting to solve. Men are losing sight of the purpose of life. The possession of money and its attendants of power and pleasure has been substituted for the great purpose of our being, moral development. To have and to enjoy—not to be—that is the great mistake of the age. To have money, lands, houses, raiment, equipages, office, honors—these are the things sought for, even the possession of knowledge itself, the most noble and desirable of all these things, is sought for, not for its elevating, ennobling or developing powers, but as a means for acquiring the rest. And (alas! that it can be with truth asserted) even the profession of religion is so commonly made as a good business venture as to scarcely excite more than a passing remark.

Where are we drifting? When and where is all this to end? Another century of this insane worship of mammon, and modern society is wrecked. While it continues we must expect our prisons to be filled with criminals and our poorhouses with paupers. The hovels of the poor will multiply and the palaces of the rich will be consumed by the torch of envy.

The laborer, tantalized to frenzy by the glittering bauble of wealth which forever eludes his grasp, will pull ruin upon his own head, Samson-like, satisfied to perish with the Philistines, if in his fall he can overwhelm society in one common ruin.

To a thoughtful mind the future is full of grave apprehensions. The entire machinery of modern society seems to be framed for the purpose of the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few; and it would seem as if reform was hopeless when the very foundations must be destroyed and the corner-stone itself relaid before the temple of virtue can be erected. Yet to give up the battle and ignominiously surrender to the forces of evil is to precipitate in a day the ruin we foresee, impending over human society. No! Although the present constitution of society must be overthrown and its foundations laid anew in righteousness before its condition will be materially improved yet we do not despair. Nor do we entertain any delusive hopes, nor give place to any false confidence in the ability of society to reconstruct itself: its schemes can only result in making matters worse and worse till the conflict between the two experiences of human condition shall be precipitated and the whole fabric of human government tumble to its foundation. While we are compelled thus to throw away hope in man, we do not thereby lose faith in God. We believe the time for the overthrow of human society as at present corruptly organized and its reorganization by the power of God is at hand. We believe that the kingdom of Christ and of God is joyfully impending and place our hope and find our consolation in it. There is hope for the race, but not in man. The dreams of ages are about to be more than realized, but not through man. Righteousness is about to be exalted, but not by man.

"The kingdoms of this world are soon to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."—ROY. xi. 15.

DISCUSSION.

The Kingdom of God yet Future.

JOHN FOORE Affirmative.
A. H. SCOTT Negative.

After this will I return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord that doeth all these things. Acts xv. 16–17.

Elder Scott made some objections to my use of these expressions. I had made the point that after God had visited the Gentiles, and taken out of them a people for his name, that Jesus would return and build again the tabernacle of David that had fallen down, but Elder Scott claimed that after God had taken out of the Gentiles a people for his name he would return and build again the tabernacle of David that had fallen down—that is he would build again the church. Last Saturday he said the church was in existence on the day of Pentecost, and that there was added to the church about 3000 souls, and that the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved. This day of Pentecost was supposed to be about A. D. 33. God visited the Gentiles A. D. 41. Had the church that existed at Pentecost gone out of existence in 9 years? and when was, or when will that one be built of the people taken out of the Gentiles. See Acts xv. 16–17 and Amos ix. 9–15. Now look at his evasion on the inheritance of the land, and the return of the tribes. The Elder said that they had forfeited all the right they ever had or ever would have to that land when they broke the covenant—the covenant made at Sinai. I will give the words of the covenant on God's part: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine; and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel." Ex. xvi. 5–6. Elder Scott said that this covenant pertained to land, and land only, and that they broke this covenant, and, hence, cannot be restored. But the word says "ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests," and his efforts on this will not prevent their return, so that God's Anointed may reign over them and the Apostles sit on twelve thrones judging them. Elder Scott also said that in some very important particulars the covenant made with Abraham would never be fulfilled, but he did not tell us why unless it was that he opposed it. But the promise still remains that Abraham and his seed will get that land.

The Elder tells us that the inheritance is in the new heavens and the new earth—for he that sat upon the throne said "Behold I make all things new." Rev. xxi. 5. "I make all things new" is not "I make all new things." To illustrate—therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." 1 Cor. v. 17. Thus things of the flesh are compared with things of the Spirit. The man is renovated, and is a new creation. The heavens and the earth are renovated and become a new heavens and a new earth.

We believe that the curse will be removed from the earth, and that there shall be no more curse, and thus are that the earth that was cursed for man's sake shall be delivered. God's kingdom comes and God's will is done in earth as is done in heaven. The Elder made one more effort to save his sinking spirit-entity by telling us that the Holy City is the bride—the church—the Lamb's wife, and that she comes down from God out of heaven.

Now God called the firmament heaven. Gen. i. 8. Heaven is defined by Webster—"the region or expanse which surrounds the earth, and which appears like an immense arch or vault." But how is it that the resurrected church gets up into the expanse? Let Paul answer: "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them (who slept) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv. 17. But will the redeemed church remain forever with the Lord in the air? No. Said Elder Scott—John saw her coming down from God out of heaven, and then it is said—The tabernacle of God shall be with men. Will the Elder now hitch his Greek rope on to something else—as this brings the kingdom and reign to the earth, and at the proper time; for the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it. Elder Scott is a workman. Does not this look kingly?

Now, as Elder Scott said that mountains are kingdoms, here is the great and high mountain, and there are twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apostles; here are twelve gates, and in them the names of the twelve tribes of Israel; and at the gates twelve messengers, and they can gather the twelve tribes of Israel; and then the Son of man can sit upon his glorious throne—the throne of his father David; for this throne belongs to God's family and not to those outside. The river of life will flow out to the nations, and bless them. God's covenant to Abraham can be fulfilled —"All the land that thou seest, to thee will I give it; and to thy seed after thee. And in thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."—"And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there and they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it." Rev. xxi. 23–26: also Ps. lxxii. 1–12.

But the Elder wanted to know if I believed in a literal kingdom—a literal throne—a literal reign. Does the Elder believe that God's universe is real—literal? or is it mystical? Is his new heavens and new earth literal or mystical? The universe in which I live is literal, and God's kingdom will be real and literal, but not gross, sensual, devilish. A righteous King —a righteous Judge to administer righteous laws.

"Behold a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." Isa. xxxii. 1. It is thus by this reign of righteousness, that order, peace, and tranquility will be restored in the earth. The man whose name is The Branch will sit and rule upon his throne—he shall be a priest upon his throne, Zech. vi. 12, 13, into —eis—the age. Heb. v. 6.

Here the Elder slaughtered his own rule as he did in Col. i. 13. "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is into—eis— the age." Heb. i. 8. The Elder gave this unto us thus: "Thy throne, O God, is forever, a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." He told us that eis must be rendered into unless the context should forbid it; but what was there here in the context to forbid it? Hear Paul in this connection: "But when he shall again introduce the First-born into the future habitable, he says, Let all of God's angels worship him." Heb. i. 6. "For to angels did he not subject the future habitable concerning which he spake," Heb. ii. 5.

Again the Elder nullifies his own rule on eis in Heb. v. 6, where Paul says, Thou art a priest into the age after the order of Melchisedec. Scott said, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. I ask what was there in the context here to compel him to depart from his rule?

Now let us refer to Col. i. 13: "Who delivered us from (ek) the dominion of darkness, and changed us for—(eis) the kingdom of the Son of his love." Ek with reference to place or space means, from; out of; away from. The preposition eis means into up to; to; toward; and is used of motion into—or in a general sense to express a reference to something; in respect to. See lexicons.

Elder Scott spoke about my brother reading Greek—my brother said that he read Greek a little for his own satisfaction, but did not pretend to teach it. On this text (Col. i. 13,) Scott repudiated the Diaglott after having endorsed it. He said its author was a "Soul-Sleeper," which was probably the reason of rejecting it as authority on this text. But we go on.

Christ a priest unto the age after the order of Melchisedec. On being a priest after the order of Melchisedec (Heb. viii. 1–7) Paul's logic was that that there were priests on the earth that served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things; as Moses was admonished when he was about to make the tabernacle, "for see, said he, that thou make all things according to the pattern that was showed to thee in the mount."

The shadow of Christ's present service was in the Levitical ritual. Till heaven and earth pass not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law till all be fulfilled. Matt. v. 18. When Jesus has made the atonement for the house of God, he will come out and bless the people—For Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation. Heb. ix. 28. And the man whose name is The Branch grows up out of his place. He builds God's temple. And having built and redeemed it from death's dominion, he bears the glory—when he comes to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day.

Then he will sit on his glorious throne—then he will bear the glory—then the counsel of peace shall be between them both—then the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in Jerusalem.

In her, said Elder Scott—the bride, the Lamb's wife is the church. And I also say that the church of God is the temple of God redeemed from death—which is according to Elder Scott's own rule of interpretation, and according to his own admission—and according to prophecy and to Christ's and the apostles' teaching—then farewell to the Elder's spirit entity.

Elder Scott says that Christ is now a priest after the order of Melchisedec; Paul that he will be (eis) into the age; and that God puts into subjection to him the future habitable whereof he spoke.

But he who can cut off the covenant concerning the land—the covenant concerning the throne—the covenant that Christ made with his apostles—the new covenant God has agreed to make with the house of Judah—and then slaughter his own rule would do as well to organize his Bible, and quit the field; go home to Garnett, put out a shingle, and go into the practice of law. See Ezek. xx. 33–38, and also Micah iv. 1–8.

THE LORD IS COMING.

The light of his coming is flashing afar,
The rising and glory of Bethlehem's star;
The heavens receive him no longer from sight,
Descending, entompassed with seraphim bright.

He comes! lo, he comes for the harvest of earth—
The gems of crown—bright jewels of worth;
And the mantle of death is folded away.
And the faithful of ages are born in a day.

Behold the despised and crucified One,
Once led to the cross, now ascending the throne!
And the kings of the earth cast their crowns at his feet,
And the hosts of the heavens his praises repeat.

Rejoice, O ye faithful! the cloud of grace
Has hastened his coming to dry up your tears;
The sweet fields of Eden again are restored—
The Kingdom of Jesus—rejoice in the Lord!

LETTERS ON THE RESURRECTION. No. 1.

WM. C. TAYLOR.

The resurrection of the dead is a subject of special interest to every believer in Jesus Christ. For 1800 years faith in a Savior risen from the dead, and in the promise made to his disciples, "Because I live ye shall live also," John xiv. 19, has brought consolation and hope to the heart of every Christian, as the surety of a better life beyond the grave.

Wherever the simple words of the Master or the teachings of his apostles have been appreciated and understood in their fullness and power, life from the dead has been the grand hope of the dying, and one of the brightest spots in the circle of Christian doctrine for the living.

Death and its sad scenes are so thick around us that no explanation of this fact seems necessary. Very few of us wish to die—we have all the same interest in life, its duties and privileges; but at last death comes—then, and perhaps only then, when life flickers like a candle flame, can we clearly see the future lit up by the words, "He that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live," and know as it can be known the sustaining hope of the resurrection of the dead.

To the living, who like the Thessalonians, have laid away their dead, it speaks in words of hopeful chiding, "Sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if ye believe that Jesus died and rose again, even them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14.

Cheered by this hope, the Christian has faced death in its most terrible forms without flinching, while to brethren—fellow soldiers of Christ—parted for a time by the rude hand of death, no thought has come to ease the aching heart more gratefully than the hope of meeting again and living forever in the blessed kingdom of God. To the dying, then, what a hope is the resurrection; and to the living what a consolation!

Perhaps it was to be expected of a doctrine of so extraordinary a character, and so far beyond the experience of but a very few of all who have ever lived that many of the world would shake their heads, and count it a "thing incredible that God should raise the dead." Attacks from without are to be expected, especially in view of the apostle's warning to beware of the oppositions of science falsely so-called, but who could have thought of oppositions among the servants of Christ—those who believe in the literal resurrection of the dead, and least of all who could have predicted, after Paul's care to make the matter clear, that the nature of the resurrection body would ever become a subject of contention, and a cause of division among Christian churches?

However improbable it may appear, it will be well known to almost every reader that such a situation exists, much to the prejudice of the truth, and to the injury of the brethren. Some say the sleeping saints will be raised from the dead in mortal bodies, some deny this, believing they will be raised in immortal bodies. Who is right? What say the Scriptures? An attempt to answer these questions resulted in the following letters, which are now submitted to the readers of THE RESTITUTION in the earnest hope that the truth may be advanced in the heart of every reader.

To gain a clear understanding of any subject nothing helps half so much or in the end proves so satisfactory as studying it from the beginning. For this reason we begin this enquiry by considering, What relationship exists between Christ and the believer, what promises he has made to him, what will be gained by faithfulness or lost by unfaithfulness?

These questions have an important bearing upon the issue before us. They are the real beginnings of the subject, for as Christ is the life of the world, and the record true "That God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son," and that "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," 1 John v. 11, 12, it follows that these principles will rule in determining the nature of every body in the resurrection. Is it not safe to say, that as it is now it will be the same in that day—"he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life?"

We ask then, What are we to Christ, or what is Christ to us who believe? John the beloved apostle says, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God....Beloved now are we the sons of God." 1 John iii. 1, 2.

Paul tells us that "As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God....and if children, then heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." Rom. viii. 14, 17. In the same strain he wrote to the Galatians: "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ....and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 26–29.

To the saints at Ephesus he declared: "We are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones." Eph. v. 30. To the Corinthians Paul wrote that they were not their own, for, said he, "Ye are bought with a price." 1 Cor. vi. 20. That price was the life blood of Jesus Christ—"Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." Titus ii. 14.

We are then "bond servants" of the Redeemer. 1 Cor. vii. 21. It is little of a surprise after reading such testimonies as these to find believers spoken of as Christ's brethren. Indeed it almost seems as if the very strength of the language had been exhausted in trying to picture how close the union is which unites Christ and his church in the purposes of God, and how true is the bond upon which the believer's hope and destiny is built. It rules in death with the same power as it binds in life. For "none of us liveth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; or whether we die, we die unto the Lord, whether we live therefore or die we are the Lord's." Rom. xiv. 7, 8. The grave cannot hide us from the eye of Christ, nor can death blot out our names from the Lamb's book of life. No, ones enrolled there, nothing in heaven or upon earth, but our own folly and wickedness can ever separate us from his interest and love.

As believers then, what are we to Christ? It might almost be said, what are not to him? For are we not spoken of as his brethren, as children of God, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. We are his bondmen for life for he died to deliver us from death. We are members of the church which is his body, the fullness of him which filleth all in all. In short we are his, and his Lordship and love binds us to him in death as in life—now and forever.

All this being as we believe according to the Scriptures of truth, we naturally ask, Of what present or prospective benefit is such a relationship to the believer? Or by what promises have we been induced to enter the service of him whose yoke is easy, and burden light?

The benefit is much every way, for the service is of godliness, which we are told is profitable unto all things; having promise of the life that now is and of that to come. 1 Tim. v. 6. No one possesses the present so truly as him who is sure of the future, and no one is sure of the future unless he is sure of being one of Christ's chosen ones; but once his then what the apostle said is true, "Whether it be.....the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's." 1 Cor. iii. 22.

Life, Life Eternal, is the grand prize offered in Christ for it is the supreme need of man, mortal and fallen. Hence we read:

"This is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John v. 11.

"When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall we also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 3, 4.

"Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 54.

"He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation (judgment) but is passed from death unto life." John v. 24.

"He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son hath not life." 1 John v. 12.

The meaning of these passages is far too clear to be easily misunderstood. Words cannot be found which will express more strongly the simple idea that to be in Christ is to be an heir of life; for in harmony with the above is it not said, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. viii. 2.

These words indicate clearly what the gift of God is to them that believe. They are heirs of the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus. Nor will the promise fail—not even to the humblest in Christ's body will the word of God fail. All are heirs of life, and as if to put the promise beyond doubt, in the passages we have quoted, the gift is spoken of as already realized, while as long as this mortal life lasts, we can at best be but heirs of that better life which will be given to all the faithful when Christ comes again.

The passages just quoted view the subject entirely from the Divine side of it. They tell how faithful God will be to his word. But there is another side—the human. The promise is not unconditional; its ultimate realization will entirely depend upon our faithfulness. Hence we have so many exhortations and promises coupling the reward with a steadfast loyalty to the Master we have chosen to serve. We read:

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Rev. ii. 10.

"We are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." Heb. x. 39.

"He that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." Rev. iii. 21.

"He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life." Rev. iii. 4.

It surely must be clear to every one from such testimonies as these that the realization of the reward will in the end depend upon faithfulness. Beside this one thing the promises are independent, and free from any other obligations necessary to their fulfillment. To the faithful servant of Christ nothing can come between him and eternal life. Do we not read, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." Rom. viii. 1. And "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."

Here we rest for the present. As far as we have been able, we have shown the benefit of belonging to Christ, and what reward will follow a faithful continuance in his service.

In our next we will try to show what will be lost by unfaithfulness, and how that will affect our relation to Christ and judgment.

OUR PLATFORM.—No. 4.

We read—Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God. And again, For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have eternal life.

THE MANNER OF GOD'S LOVE.

The best explanation of the first of the above texts is given in the second. We have no words or language at our command that will add to the force of the words used by the evangelist—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," a most magnificent gift! one worthy of the infinite Jehovah; one every way worthy of him whose very nature and being is love. What an object for our love, our homage and adoration! How deep the degradation to which we have fallen when we reject such boundless love and mercy as is offered to us in his unspeakable gift, even his dear and well beloved Son.

How amazing the thought, that man, made in the likeness of his Creator, put on probation for immortality, having power to stand yet free to fall, should yield to temptation and plunge the whole race into rebellion, degradation and death; from which there was no way of escape.

Dear reader, but for a moment let your minds rest upon the fearful condition he was in after he had disobeyed the law of his Creator! What a thrill of horror must have seized the guilty pair. Nature gave signs of woe that all was lost.

How cheering! "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Oh the boundless, matchless love of God in the gift of his dear beloved Son to redeem poor fallen and ruined man from such a dreadful degradation, and make it possible for him to again shine forth in the image and likeness of his Creator. We need only repeat our text: "Behold what manner of love," to raise our wonder and admiration of the love God in this great and best gift to man.

Do you see that dark, deep pit into which that poor wayfaring man has fallen? Oh see! he is just sinking in utter dispair. Hear his piteous cry for help.

An elevator is lowered, he is offered a complete and safe deliverance, and is requested to get on the—Our Platform—he hesitates, and asks who owns this elevator. The answer is given—the great and mighty God, the maker of the universe. In whose interest is it run? Answer, for poor lost sinners like yourself. Who is chief engineer? Answer, the Lord Jesus Christ, the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved. What! Jesus of Nazareth, despised and rejected of men! No, I would rather sink in this dreadful pit and never see—be saved by that despised Nazarene. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life."—Jesus.

This is but a faint representation of the lost and ruined condition of poor, sinful, fallen man; but oh! the amazing love of God, through a crucified Redeemer, to raise him up to stand on an equal platform with the Elohim; to be called the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty.

This is the great work concocted and arranged in the councils of Eternity, which has been in process of execution for 6000 years, and will be completed in the next age of 1000 years, the millennium, in which the disabilities will be taken off from man and earth, that have been groaning under the curse since the great transgression.

The times of the Gentiles have almost filled out their allotted period, the gospel has done its allotted work. As a witness, the end of the age is upon us; coming events cast their shadows before them. The delusive dream of a good time coming has vanished in thin air; the judgments of God in the earth, in the air, and in the sea, are the sure premonitions of the speedy ushering in of the great day for which all other days were made. Will the love and glory of God shine forth in his judgments with the same lustre as in his creative power? Our faith affirms when his whole work is complete, all things made new, the kingdom presented to the Father, that God may be all in all; or, in other words, that God has a clean universe; then will his attributes—Love, justice, mercy, and truth—shine forth with equal and refulgent splendor.

A FEW REFLECTIONS.

1. That through the love of God in Christ Jesus, poor, lost and ruined man will be raised to honor and glory, immortality and eternal life—this consideration should engage our time and our talents, our homage and our adoration; a tribute of gratitude, of praise and thanksgiving should constantly go up to God for the great salvation provided through a crucified Redeemer—God's Son.

Without holiness no man can see the Lord. How is it to be attained? By faith and obedience, through a resurrection from the dead or a change from mortal to immortality at Christ's coming. These vile bodies will be changed and made like the most glorious body of the Son of God. How it shone on the Mount of Transfiguration! what a motive power for action, to follow the dear Redeemer in his holy godly life. May we be close imitators of our Great Example.

NEWELL BOND.

(To be Continued.)

Report of the Discussion Between W. J. Fennimore and R. Thompson, Held at Russiaville, Howard County, Indiana, February 14th to 18th.

Prop. 1. Resolved, That the Scriptures teach that the eternal salvation will be the work of God, independently of works to be performed by man. Thompson affirms.

Argument.—Rom. iv. 1–8: "By grace are we saved through faith and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." Abraham was justified by faith and not of works. Rom. iii. 22–24: We are justified by the grace of Christ and not of works ourselves, lest any should boast. If works, then we need no Savior. Christ came to save his people, which were chosen from the foundation of the world. Proof that a part of the race were damned from the foundation of the world. Rom. xi. 8: Rare they have and hear not. Eyes they have and see not. It is God that worketh in you, both to do and will with his own good pleasure.

Query.—Will Mr. Fennimore show us where Christ died for every man?

I tell this respected audience he knows he can't do it.

Fennimore.—I will admit the gentleman's position, viz: "That we are saved by grace through faith and that (grace) not of ourselves but it is the gift of God," but will not admit that we are not to save ourselves by faith and virtue of our relation and a continual obedience to the plan of salvation, by which we prepare to receive this grace or gift.

Proof.—James ii. 17–20; xxi. 24: "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?" "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." The gentleman quoted you Rom. xi. 8, to sustain the position that part of the human race were damned from the foundation of the world. I wonder if he don't know that blindness happened to the Jews until the Gentiles' time be fulfilled, and hence the language of his own quotation

I will now answer Bro. T.'s question. Rom. v. 18; Heb. ii. 9: "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

Prop. 2. Resolved, That all that pertains to man becomes unconscious in death. Fennimore affirms.

Gen. ii. 7. "Man was formed of the dust of the ground and God breathed the breath of life into his nostrils and man became a living soul." "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." "And Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years and died." Psa. vi. 5. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. lxxxviii. 11, 12. Psa. cxv. 16, 17. "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men. The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Job xiv. 20, 21. Hence all men, with two exceptions, from the primogenitor down to the present have died, and I defy Bro. Thompson to show from God's word where man, or any part of man, never died. 1 Cor. xv. 21: "For since by man (not part of man) came death, (not a separation, as Bro. T. concludes) by man came also the resurrection of the dead (not part of man)."

Thompson.—Question: 1. Does every thing pertaining to man return to its previous state?

2. Why does the spirit of man go up and of the beast down?

The body, and not dead men, go to the grave, but the spirit or soul does not, and I defy Mr. Fennimore to prove by God's word where dead men do go to the grave. Phil. iii. 8: Acts vii. 58, 59. "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Now if all of men dies let Mr. Fennimore answer this. Luke xxiii. Please mark what Christ says, "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." But Mr. F. tells you that all of man goes to the grave. O, what nonsense! Psa. xxii. 26. "The heart shall live forever." James ii. 26. "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Rom. vi. 22–25. I would like for Mr. Fennimore to tell us what is meant by the inner man? 1 Peter iii. 3, 4. "But let it be the hidden man of the heart."

Now in view of these Scriptures, every man in this house can see that Mr. F. must be wrong, and he knows it. Now, Mr. F., do not forget to answer these questions.

Fennimore.—In answering the gentleman's queries I discover his nearsightedness or ignorance of the words, spirit and soul. The spirit, (Hebrew, ruach—Greek, pneuma)—breath, air, wind, or breath of life, hence the spirit, or breath of life returns to God who gave it and as to the word soul I will show the gentleman that David's and Christ's soul was in hell—sheol, hades—a grave. And further, Ezek lii: The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Now who has the nonsense?

Now to the gentleman's challenge or defiance concerning dead men. I suppose he is a learner of this prophet Isaiah, xxvi. 19, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Answer to Acts vii. 58, 59, Stephen calls on Jesus to receive his spirit or the breath of life, or Greek pneuma.

Gentlemen, you see how he would veil you by misquoting the thief on the cross. You look after this, just for your own good.

Thompson.—Mr. Fennimore you see is a Greek scholar, and fixes words or things just to suit his own taste. Now, in answering his speech I would like for him to give us the Greek on this, Luke xxiii. 43. No, no, Mr. Fennimore would have you all soul-sleepers, and I know this intelligent audience will never believe this. No, sir!

Fennimore has fifteen minutes to close. O, shame on Mr. Thompson. If Mr. Thompson's theories be true, you need no Bible. Now don't you see where he has led himself? This is an acknowledgment that every man who forms a union with Christ will be saved and not only a little forerudained flock of the Baptist church.

Prop. 3. Resolved, That the kingdom spoken of by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles, is the throne and kingdom of David restored, and will be set up on earth, and that it is necessary in order to salvation to believe it. Fennimore affirms.

God's original purpose concerning man and earth was for man, by virtue of obedience, to have dominion over all the earth. There is no evidence that Adam would have been translated to any other locality from this earth, had he remained loyal. Gen. xxii. 18. "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Paul tells us in Gal. iii. 16, that this seed is Christ. 2 Sam. vii. 12–16; Psa. cxxxii. Here God promises to set Christ on his throne after his days to be fulfilled. This he swore to by his holiness. Luke i. 31–33. The angel's testimony at this point is that Christ shall reign on David's throne forever. Proof that this throne will be hereon earth. Zech. xiv. 9; Psa. xxxvii. 27. Proof that salvation depends upon believing the foregoing. Acts ii. 36–40.

Thompson.—In reply to the gentleman's arguments I would just say that I do not care anything about the promise to Abraham and David. My position is that I have nothing to reply to.

Query.—Will Mr. Fennimore tell when this kingdom will be restored? and also that it is necessary to be believed in order to salvation?

This speech of Mr. Thompson's was finished with an exortation, and his belief of the kingdom, viz: that it was the church militant and is now set up, with an appeal to Fennimore to define kingdom; and then used such expressions as these to sustain his theory, viz: the kingdom is at hand, the kingdom is within you, etc.

Fennimore.—As Bro. T. has evaded all of my first speech, or God's promise and oath, and calls you by saying he does not care for God's promises, I can do nothing only answer his questions.

1. Restoration of the kingdom. It will be when he gathers Israel from the four winds of the earth and plants them in the land of Canaan, and when Christ shall come again.

2. Necessity of believing this prophecy in order to salvation. Paul commands us to believe; and Christ and all of the apostles command us to believe, repent, and be baptized. Believe what? To believe what they taught, which is included in this prophecy.

Now I will show Mr. T. that Christ's kingdom is not set up yet. Why? Zech. xiv. tells us that in that day Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited, and there shall be no more destruction. And also Isa. xlv. tells us there shall be no more infant of days, nor weeping, nor crying, and in that we shall learn war no more; and 1 Cor. xv. that flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom of God.

3. Define kingdom. A kingdom is a country ruled by a king, and never once does it mean church, as Bro. T. says, and seventy years after Christ's ascension he was on his Father's throne. Rev. iii.

Now gentlemen, in conclusion I will forever put the quietus on the gentleman's theories. Why? Because in his last speech he exorted you to search and read carefully the Scriptures for your own good. Now comes forever the bottom out of that theory, viz: foreordination. Why search, read and be interested in the Scriptures? No, no; Bro. T. knows that God's plan of salvation is conditional, for Paul commands us to work out our own salvation.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

OPINIONS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 31, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 29, 1881.

"Everything is scholastic. By copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Herald Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again. * * It is next in point of [illegible] and doctrinal truths to the Book of [illegible]."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book. "The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses."—S. M. P., Va.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address All Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel: the literal resurrection of the dead: the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty it—Hof of the gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

No 103.

J. P. WEETHEE.

As the Revelations progress, the plans of Jehovah unfold.

What occupation, therefore, can be so ennobling to the Christian, and so intensely interesting, as to follow the Divine foot-prints?

Day by day this holy calling is our meat and our drink. Let others take pleasure in this world's callings. Let them strive for worldly honors, and take delight in worldly amusements; but let the absorbing theme of our life be the brightness and the glories of the future. Come, Lord Jesus—quickly.

John, as an inspector, receives orders to enter upon his work of survey, or inspection. "Measure the temple of God, and the altar; and them that worship therein."

The body of believers are viewed as a worshipping congregation—it is properly denominated as a temple; the ecclesia. Their worship would be the altar—and those occupied in these altar services were the worshippers. The church with its forms of worship were to be examined and noted: also the character of its worship and of its worshippers. This work was assigned to John. His task was faithfully done, as his report in chapters xi., xii., xiii. and xvii. clearly shows.

The church, its institutions, its worship and its worshippers, constituted the objects to be surveyed, and carefully inspected. No other measurements were required, since no others are reported. To express his official work in modern terms, we should say, that John was ordered to collect materials for a prospective ecclesiastical history; and that the witnesses, the sun-clad woman, the fourth beast of Daniel, and the harlot, are its chief symbolic agents. The true church and her two great enemies: the one an embodiment of civil power; the other an ecclesiastical power. Christ's altar and his throne against Satan's altar and throne. The altar, throne, and seat of Satan John was to cast out and not reckon.

These great rival interests were at work in the days of Paul, but in the days of John's revelations, they had become so distinct that the true church could have a separate measurement. The true church, the temple of the living God, adhered to and sustained the system of truth, reared by Christ and his apostles; the growth and progress of that temple the apostle was commanded to measure; the great national apostacy, John was commanded not to measure.

This court was that of the nations—without the living temple. It is a symbol of the idolatrous world.

The entire Christian era has been the the theatre of struggles between rival altars and rival priesthoods; between those who adhered to the priesthood of Christ, and defended and sustained his system of truth: and, consequently, were God's builders in his holy temple; and those who went off with the apostacy, and united with the nations in building up and sustaining the great system of idolatry, of which Satan was the master-spirit. The rival bodies were two churches surveyed by John under the symbols of two witnesses: a sun-clad woman, and a harlot, sustained in her corruptions by the fourth beast of Daniel and its family. The territory of their struggles is the outer court; the one party is called the nations, because allied with the nations; the other is termed the holy city, since it was the community of the true temple of God while the other is termed "Mystic Babylon," which ruled over, and was sustained by the idolatrous nations. With these general remarks, the terms are readily understood.

Court without the temple, leave out cast out as unclean, forming no part of God's temple. This court was a Gentile court; sometimes called the Christian national court; it being occupied by nominal professors, after the church was nationalized by Constantine the Great. John was to cast out this court, as belonging to idol temples.

Gentiles—Those nations that allied themselves with apostate Christianity in oppressing the true worshippers.

Holy City—The true Christian community, under gospel precepts and Divine government. Citizens may dwell in cities, towns, or in the country. A citizen of Boston, New York, or Philadelphia, is also an American citizen. Rome gave her name to the whole empire. We are citizens by faith of the heavenly Jerusalem, in training for its holy society. "Our citizenship is from heaven." Phil. iii. 20. These citizens are trodden down by Babylon.

Tread under foot—trample upon the citizens, and upon their laws and upon their worship. The history of these forty-two months is the best commentary on its meaning.

Forty-Two Months.—How long?

1. We must follow the scale of the prophetic chart. This chart covers the lives of communities and empires represented under the symbols of women and beasts. If those communities, whose real duration is over one thousand years, are symbolized by beings whose lives are less than a century, the time is symbolized to suit the scale. This scale has, therefore, Divine authority, and is not simply a human theory.

2. The Bible itself authorizes this interpretation. In Num. xiv. 33, 34, the spies were forty days in searching the land. They were to wander in the wilderness as many years, each day for a year.

In Eek. iv. 5, 6, 390 days and 40 days are typical of 390 years and 40 years. We have another witness, whose testimony is conclusive.

The 70 weeks of Dan. ix. 26, 27, are weeks of years, or, 490 years. The chronological argument that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, is founded upon the truth of this interpretation. Christ's manifestation to the Jews at the close of the 69 weeks of years, is clear proof. The one week is made, at least, 2520 days long—or a day for a year. The covenant week theory makes seven days (one week) 2,555 days long, according to one writer. Forty-two months contain then (allowing 30 days to the month) 1260 days. But, as above, one day is one year; and 1260 days would be 1260 years. Hence we conclude that the 42 months (symbolic) are 1260 years.

In Dan. vii. 25, it is said, "And he (little horn) shall speak (great) words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time" (3½ times)—1260 years.

As Daniel and John describe the same event, we regard the symbols (3½ times and 42 months) of the same literal duration. The history of the events establish the interpretation. We have been particular relative to these dates since they have a direct bearing on the character of the witnesses, as will soon appear.

Rev. xi. 3. "And I will give (power) unto my two witnesses, and they shall (that they may) prophesy a thousand two hundred (and) three-score days clothed in sackcloth.

"I (Christ) will give." Extraordinary power for an extraordinary work in a period of great danger. It is proper that all agents should be endued with power to suit the exigencies of their mission.

"My two witnesses." "My" refers to Christ. Those revelations were made by Christ through his angel (Gabriel his interpreter) to John.

What was the mission of these witnesses?

To prophesy.

What labor did that involve?

They were teachers of Divine laws in all their simplicity; teachers in Christ's stead; they were to utter the denunciations of Jehovah against all unrighteousness.

These prophets were witnesses. Their testimony was sealed by their lives. These facts show the nature of their prophecies, bearing testimony against the corrupt teachings and practices of the period in which their mission was to be accomplished.

How long were they to prophesy?

Twelve hundred and sixty days.

Literal, or symbolic?

If these witnesses are the saints, the days are symbolic, the same as the 70 weeks of Dan. ix. 24–27. And if the days are years as in Daniel, then the witnesses are the saints, or orders of saints.

1. The position of these days is presumptive evidence that they are symbolic. They are in symbolic prophecy, as is clearly shown in their death, exposure, and resurrection.

2. They are so closely associated with the 42 months, during which the nations were to tread down the holy city; or the saints, as a community, which history demonstrates to be 1260 years, that it is exceedingly difficult to escape the conclusion of their identity.

To identify these witnesses, it will be as well, first, to take a negative view, and show who they are not.

1. They are not "Elijah the prophet, and John the revelator."

We have before us, by the editor of the Christian Unitist, the above identification. To this theory we beg leave to object; and to assign some reasons why we dissent from this construction.

1. We object to Elijah for the following reasons, among others that could be urged.

a. Elijah was translated that he did not see death. God sent from heaven a chariot of fire, and horses of fire. And Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

After an absence of 928 years, on a lone mountain, Elijah suddenly appears in a vision to Peter, James and John. He is conversing with Jesus. In that vision he is seen. In that vision Jesus makes known his power and coming; the kingdom in its elements is there made visible. Elijah is the type or representative of those who will not sleep, but will be translated to meet the Lord in the air. Being made immortal equally with Enoch, how could he undertake such a death mission? The witnesses were slain, and lay under the power of death three days and a half at least; and remain dead, according to a certain theory, when the saints are translated.

2. The Scriptures, correctly understood, do not teach that doctrine. The following passages are quoted by its advocates:

"Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Mal. iv. 5.

To the priests and Levites, John answered, "I am not the Christ." John i. 20.

"I am not Elias (Elijah). I am not a prophet" (one of the prophets risen.) Verse 21.

"I (am) the voice (herald) of one crying in the wilderness. Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias (Isaiah)." Verse 23.

The argument may be stated as follows:

The day (Mal. iv. 1) is the judgment at the second advent of Christ: Elijah will be sent 3½ years before that coming; will testify in sackcloth 3½ years in Jerusalem; remain unburied 3½ days; rise from the dead, and ascend literally into heaven. John's answer to the Jews removes the only objection. We propose two questions:

1. Does Mal. iv. 5, establish the theory?

2. Does John's answer remove the objection?

Let it be granted that Malachi speaks of the great burning day. And suppose, also, that we admit (which we do not admit) that this one witness is a literal person; and that he will be sent, as above stated, before that great burning day comes, (for the orders we admit); how long before that day?

"Before," does the order, but not the definite time.

How long before? What expression in Malachi answers that question?

The 69 weeks of Dan. ix. 24–27, are before the 70th week. How long before? The answer is before us; let us read it:

"At the end of sixty-nine of those (70) weeks Messiah was cut off." "One week of the seventy remained. That one week begins by the confirmation of a covenant with the vile person." "No such covenant has been made." Dec. 14, 1881. The 69 weeks end A. D. 29.—Arch. Bish. Ush. Dec. 14, 1881. Seventieth week, not commenced. "Before," allows a space of 1881–29=1852 years.

Why, then, is before so limited in Malachi?

PALESTINE IN PROPHECY.

Amid the ups and downs of history—and the changes which mark this singular age—the prospects of Jewish autonomy in Palestine may well receive careful attention.

The children of Eber, the Israelite, the Joctanite, the Ishmaelite, have moulded the political history of the world. Theone, though down-trodden for ages, gives inspiration through, Christ, to the genius of Christendom. The other, undoubtedly gave Egypt its Intellect and prowess during their 700 years supremacy; and the third, through their proselytes, the Moslems, swept in resistless tide after tide over Europe to the sea, and Eastward to the Ganges.

But for 2000 years it seemed the mission of this last Semitic force to unite with the western element to the destruction of the Israelite. How fearfully have Ishmael and Hagar been avenged! Yet like the character given to the "Wandering Jew" it was impossible for the promised seed to perish. But the Canaan of their nativity has been the center of the great conflict between the two great systems of civilization—the Semitic and Japhetic—until the wasted territory drank royal blood from nearly every kingdom in the world. Thus while the systems of theism born of Judaism—Christianity and Mohammedanism—have been the source of inspired thought and future hope, even to India, the land which gave this people birth has been the centre of the political conflicts which have made history for the world.

For centuries the leprosy of sand and the tyranny of the Osmanli have encroached upon Palestine, until, like Edom she was dwarfed to insignificance in her resources. Her poverty and loss of individuality were extreme. Still, in the depth of her despair—lifting her shrivelled arms in prayer—there were the accents of hope that Jerusalem would yet again rise from the ashes of her desolation.

In view of the recent climatic changes in Palestine, let us glance at her earlier condition. In ancient times Canaan was a garden of fertility. In the days when Greece and Rome held her as a province her agricultural resources were very great. She was crowded with cities and villages. It was said that she outrivalled Italy. But the word of the Lord had gone forth: "I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries to desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it." "As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest." Jeremiah, Isaiah and Ezekiel are definite and profuse in such prophecies. But for a thousand years after Jeremiah and Isaiah the land had not materially lost its fertility. But the ravages of war, of tyranny—of sand—and lack of rain reduced it to the last stage of poverty. While Aleppo, Tripoli, Damascus and Acre were yielding a revenue of £122 000 sterling per annum—Palestine yielded nothing. For hundreds of years it has been hardly possible for a horseman to make his way through the thick thorns choking up many a former populous region. Burckhardt says Tiberias was particularly crowded with these thorns. "The land mourns, and is laid waste, and is become as a desolate wilderness. Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briars." And again, "they shall be ashamed of their revenues."

It has been urged that other nations have become desolate. But it is true only of those mentioned in prophecy. Edom, Ammon, Moab, Philistia, etc., were as bitterly cursed as was Canaan. The downfall of Greece, Rome, Egypt, and even Phoenicia did not bring such desolation.

Whatever may be understood by the "fulfillment of the times of the Gentiles," it is at least true that in this age of mission work, of the Evangelical Alliance, of Egyptian and Assyrian revelations, the glimmer of a grand hope is roused in the Jewish breast. A climatic change is in process in Palestine which promises a restoration of her ancient fertility. Rain is falling abundantly. The encroaching sand is being hidden under herbage, and the people are arousing to a new activity—at least the new element introduced by the demands of commerce are awaking the old valleys to effort and to recuperation. Luxuriant gardens are springing up, and new dwellings appear about her villages.

These facts are intensely interesting in view of the prophecies. Only last month the word came that during the late Passover Festival, rain fell so abundantly that a prosperous harvest is assured.

In educational matters the progress of Palestine has been almost beyond belief. There are fifty educational establishments of character and influence in Beirut alone. They include Protestant, Catholic, Greek, Moslem and Hebrew institutions.

The tendency of Jewish immigration is very strong and on the increase. Jerusalem in 1800 had a population of about 400. It now has from 20 to 30,000. It has Jewish synagogues and hospitals, and the influence of a growing independence is just beginning to be felt. For years they have been assisted by charity, but the morning seems to dawn in which the day-break lifts their hearts with hope and joy. There have been several schemes to colonize Jewish farmers, but none have yet taken definite shape. That of Mr. Oliphant to take by purchase 1,500,000 acres beyond Jordan has not yet taken definite form although it is still being considered. Many very prominent and titled people have purchased property there, among them the Marquis of Bute—who has a dwelling and plantation on a hill near the Mount of Olives. A Jewish paper remarks: "You may as well attempt to turn the course of the Atlantic as to stem this tide."

A strong company has been formed in England and Massachusetts to build a railway from Cairo, in Egypt around the Mediterranian to Ramleh, Jerusalem, Joppa, and Megiddo. A the latter place it divides. One branch going by way of Tyre, Sidon, Beirut, and Antioch to Iskenderoon; the other by way of Damascus to unite with the Euphratean railway.

The statement that the Rothschilds hold a past due mortgage upon Palestine has been denied, and again iterated. At all events they hold past due claims upon the Turkish Government of great moment, and are taking an active interest in the regeneration of the land of their ancestors. It is generally understood that the death of Disraeli was an advantage to the Jewish occupation of Palestine, for the great Premier, in his devotion to his English polity, had stood in the way of Jewish nationalization.

The recent antagonism to the Semitic element in Europe is also a factor for future Jewish individuality. Thousands of them have gathered—even in tents—in eastern Austria—waiting for events to decide their future course.

After 1,800 years of persecution—of banishment from a home and a government to which their hearts could cling—will it not be a singular confirmation of a multitude of prophecies if they are at the close of this century gathered from every clime—to create anew the nation founded by Abraham.

In this regard note a single prophecy of Isaiah:—

"In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians."

"In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the land."

"Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt, my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance."

Whatever reluctance the world may have to accept prophecy—the fact of the continual course of history in confirmation thereto must in time arouse them to a just appreciation. It indeed looks as though the great consummation of Israelitish faith was about to come. EVERETT W. PIATT, M. D.

THE NATURAL AND SPIRITUAL.

H. V. REED.

Now that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; then that which is spiritual. 1 Cor. xv. 46.

Everything connected with the natural and spiritual states is governed alike by law. It is as consistent to believe in spiritual forces acting through spiritual agencies with spiritual results as it is to believe in natural forces acting through natural agencies with natural results. In each case there are laws which regulate all of the phenomena of existence. There is nothing any more miraculous about the spiritual state than there is about the natural. On the human side nature itself is one stupendous miracle, but on the Divine side there are no miracles, either natural or spiritual. Every age, whether natural or spiritual, visible or invisible, mortal or immortal, flows from one eternal source—the foundation of all wisdom, power and goodness—and that source is God. The modes of existence, the zones of life, and the various conditions through which all existence passes is from the one all-pervading Spirit.

The Scriptures plainly teach that man, as such, in his personality will pass beyond the natural to the spiritual, from the earthy to the heavenly, from the mortal to the immortal. These two states of man are not contemporaneous but successive. The natural is now, the spiritual will take the place of the natural—or the natural will emerge into the spiritual. Certain laws applicable to man in his natural state will be carried over into the spirit state. The pure emotions of affection which make man akin to a higher life will glow through immortal bodies, and the worship of a devoted child from the earthy sphere will shine out in holy radiance in the spiritual world.

The text at the head of this article pointedly states that the natural is first and that the spiritual comes after. The allusion is plainly to the Adam from the earth, who was constituted of dust, and the second Adam who became a life-giving spirit by a resurrection to the spiritual state. The two Adams represent the two states of man, the one natural which is now, and the other spiritual, which comes in after the resurrection from the dead. Sin brought the first Adam into death. Obedience brought the second Adam to the perfected life of immortality. The earthy man lives, moves and has his being in the natural zone or on the mortal plain. The air he breathes, the food he eats and the very elements of his frame are all earthy, justifying the statement of Moses that he is made of dust. There can be no denial of man's unity and identity; he is of the earth, earthy. Death is a legitimate result of the nature of his wonderful organism, but death is not a finality. The mental make-up shows aspirations for another life. Man is not satisfied with his limited existence, he longs for another life. The epitaph upon the marble is a notice of a suspended life which shall return in the re-living of the dead. The religious functions find no completion in the mortal life. The appetites, the passions and the offspring are gratified within the present earthy zone, but the hope and faith—the love and worship, and the moral and religious longings reach out beyond the grave. It is as philosophical to look for the to-morrow of our existence as to argue that we came out from the yesterday. The to-day of life would be as incomplete without a to-morrow as to-morrow would be without a yesterday.

Whatever view we take of man, we must treat him as a unit. This applies to his destiny as well as to his origin. The present existence is what the Scriptures call "the life that now is" which is characterized by sin, disobedience and mortality. The future existence is called "eternal," because life will be manifested through an incorruptible body. Man never has nor never can exist as a bodiless spirit. He must be "clothed upon" with an immortal investiture in order to extend his existence through all time. The present state is natural, the future state is spiritual. In order for man to become a denizen of the spiritual world he must be changed. The mortal must give way to the immortal, the earthy must give way to the heavenly. The apostle embodies it all in these words: "Behold I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we all shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye....for the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed. For this mortal must put on immortality and this corruptible incorruption.... and then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, I will be thy sting; O grave, I will be thy victory." 1 Cor. xv. 51–58.

The resurrection is the boundary line between the natural and the spiritual. In other words man, who sleeps in the grave, must be awakened to the immortal life through the power of our coming Lord, who is the first fruits of them who sleep in him. When man becomes spiritual in his whole being he will have been born of spirit and become a perfected son of God by a resurrection even as Christ became a son by his resurrection. Please see Rom. i. 1–4; Luke xx. 34–36. The natural man must be changed whether living or dead in order to participate in all of the possibilities of the new world which succeeds the present kosmos or order of things. There are then, two creations: the old and the new; two natures, the natural and the spiritual; two births, the one of flesh the other of spirit; two Adams, the first and the second. Under the first Adam as a federal head, we have the sinful state of the curse; under the second Adam we have the perfected state. He came to seek and "save that which was lost." The new world will not be another world, but this world redeemed, purified and glorified, so man will be changed so as to be adapted to the new order of things in Christ our Lord.

THE RESTITUTION.

B. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 15, 1882.

THE article—The Future of Palestine—was written by E. W. Fisk, M. D., author of a work on the Egyptian Pyramids. It is a contribution to our columns of peculiar interest at the present time as our readers will be made more fully aware shortly.

For the small map of Palestine, illustrating the anticipated railways, we are indebted to the kindness of Bro. H. V. Reed, former editor of THE RESTITUTION. Communications from him and Sister Reed will be found in other columns, which are both timely and most thankfully received.

ISRAEL.

As some of the prophetic periods that mark events connected with the Jewish restoration are on the very eve of transpiring, and as the signs of the times indicate that an eventful crisis in human history is near at hand, our attention is drawn to that wonderful people whose preservation, during their dispersion among all nations, is such an incontrovertible proof of divine revelation. Prophetical periods are not given to tell the time of the advent of Christ, but to measure the times of Gentile domination, and especially the duration of the antichristian powers. The Western Papal antichrist has lost his political supremacy as a power among the western kingdoms, and the Eastern Mohammedan antichrist will soon be dispossessed of his usurpations in Immanuel's land. The time has come for the exiled Jew to return to the land of his fathers. Hence everything connected with the expectations and movements of the dispersed wanderers among the nations—though not of them—is fraught with interest. We give the following from an exchange for whatever it may be worth to our Millennarian brethren:

THE MESSIAH OF ISRAEL.

Apropos of Jews, I heard a story the other day that admirably illustrates their intense belief in their future. It was told me by a poet. He said:

"A few years ago I was visiting at the house of———, (mentioning one of the best known names in New York) and there was a brilliant company assembled there. One morning there was a reception, and among the people who came was a gentleman of such noble mien, such lofty features, such a superb and dignified presence, such a placid serenity, such a manly beauty in every line of his face and person, that as he moved in the crowd I couldn't turn my eyes away from him. He seemed to hold me with a spell. I think he was the handsomest man I ever saw; it wasn't merely physical beauty, it was spiritual beauty as well His whole face was radiant with the 'solar light.' He had very dark eyes—large Oriental eyes—a leonine mass of black hair, and was full-bearded. I was so fascinated by him that I hardly felt like talking, but after a while found myself seated beside a charming Jewess; Miss X———, a young woman full of enthusiasm for her race, and proud to talk of it.

'Oh,' said she, 'the day is not far distant when we shall go back to Jerusalem. We are accumulating wealth and power that we may bring them together there, and make it like the city of a dream. The great bankers, the Rothschilds, and the rest, will bring their wealth there, and we shall rebuild the temple with their treasure. We have the capacity to do great things. Our blood makes good leaders. Beaconsfield is a Jew, Jules Simon is a Jew, and there is Hebrew blood in Gambetta's veins. Then in the arts we have shown our capacity for success—hark, they're playing one of the Songs Without Words—Mendelssohn was a Jew, Rachel was a Jewess; there is no knowing to what heights we may rise if the foot of the world was taken off our necks, as it surely will be, for God has promised—your God and mine.'

'Then,' said the poet, 'you'll choose you a king—one of the Rothschilds, I suppose?'

'No—no—we have our king. Our king must be of the lineage of David.'

'And can you find a son of David after all those centuries?"

'Oh, yes; it is a part of our religion to keep the family records. There must be a setting straight of genealogies at every week of week-years (forty-nine years). We know where to find our king—he is already chosen, waiting to be crowned.'

'And where is he now?' asked the poet.

'There,' said the Jewess, and she pointed to the man who so fascinated me. 'He is the Baron———, of London; he is recognized by all who keep the faith, as the one upon whose head the crown would be placed if the day of restoration should come to-morrow.'"—New York Letter in Boston Traveller.

LETTERS FROM PALESTINE.—No. 1.

———

BELLA FLOYD.

Joppa—Ancient and Modern—Population—Harbor—Mail Arrangements—Business—Gardens and Seasons—Habits of the People.

Having promised a long time ago to write you a letter from time to time for publication with the beginning of the new year I commence. I suppose there is not a country in the world that so much has been written about as the Holy Land, and yet it would take years to describe what has never been described.

I shall begin my first letter at and with the most ancient city in the world—Jaffa, Joppa Joppa, or Japho, now called by the natives Yafa. In the division of the land Japho was given to the tribe of Dan. Josh. xix. 46. When king David established his kingdom at Jerusalem, Joppa became the port of Jerusalem. It was to Joppa, Hiram, king of Tyre, sent in floats the cedar and fir wood that was cut in Mount Lebanon, and used in building Solomon's Temple at Jerusalem. 1 Kings v. 8-13; 2 Chron. xi. 16. It was to Joppa cedar trees from Mount Lebanon were again brought, by the grant from Cyrus, king of Persia, for re-building the second temple, under Zerubbabel, after the captivity. Ezra iii. 7, 8. It was at Joppa that Jonah embarked in a ship for Tarshish, to escape from the presence of the Lord. Jonah i. 3.

During the captivity the commercial importance of Joppa seems to have saved the city from ruin. During the Maccabean wars Joppe (as it was then called) was the principal stronghold of Palestine. 1 Macc. x. 75; xiv. 5, 34. The inhabitants of Joppe so disliked the Jews that dwelt among them that they invited them out in boats for a pleasure trip, and then drowned 200 men, women and children. 2 Macc. xii. 3, 4.

It was to Joppa that Peter came from Lydda and raised Dorcas from the dead.

In the present city there is a house by the seaside which is still called the house of Simon the tanner; and, as Dean Stanley said: "All the circumstances are in favor of the site." The broken stone staircase, which leads to the roof, is old. From the roof the view helps to identify the place. Overhead is the wide noonday heaven, and in front the bright sweep of the Mediterranean sea, its near waves broken by the reefs which were famous in ancient times. Here and there we see fishermen wading among the rocks, which at that time no doubt reminded Peter of the nets he left by the Lake of Galilee, and the first promise of his future call to be a fisher of men. It was here that Peter had the vision which we find narrated in Acts x. 9-23.

The city of Jaffa is built on a hill which juts out into the sea. Its houses are all built of stone and have flat roofs. From the sea it looks beautiful; but that beauty is soon changed on entering its streets, which are narrow, crooked, filthy lanes.

Jaffa has a population of 22,000, 2,000 of whom are Christians, about 200 Jews, and the rest Mohammedans. There are three convents in the city—Greek, Latin (Roman Catholic) and Armenian, the latter said to have been a prison when the city was held by the French in March, 1799. At that time all the prisoners were pardoned by the order of Napoleon.

Jaffa has no harbor, all steamers touching at Jaffa have to anchor from one to two miles from the city. The mail, freight and passengers have to be landed and put on board in small row boats. The facilities for receiving and sending away the mail have greatly improved since I first came to this country in September, 1866. At that time only two lines of steamers were due to touch at Jaffa, and that once in two weeks; whereas now there are three lines: the Austrian, due every Monday (or rather one on Sunday and one the following Monday week); once a week from Europe and every Thursday going to Europe; the French every other Monday from Europe and every other Saturday going to Europe; the Russian every other Tuesday from Europe and every other Tuesday going to Europe. But in the winter and spring, on account of stormy weather, the steamers are not always up to time and sometimes the sea is so rough that they have to pass without landing mail or passengers.

There is a line of an old wall which is from 50 to 200 feet from the city, and the water inside is from one to ten feet deep. It affords some shelter for small vessels and row boats, but is of no use for large vessels or steamers.

The row boats go out and come in through a pass in the west side of the walls, which is about twenty feet in the clear between the rocks. I have seen many boats thrown by the waves on the rocks and smashed to pieces in trying to get through the pass with passengers who wished to embark on a steamer.

The city of Jaffa was surrounded by a high wall until 1872, when it was taken down and the stones sold to build houses and shops with. The bazaars are almost always supplied with excellent fruit. The streets are so crowded with camels, donkeys and lazy men that at times it is difficult to pass.

Jaffa is indeed a busy place, much more than most people think. It has several soap factories, and large tanks of olive oil. The oil is shipped to all the important places in the east, and to Europe. Large quantities of wheat and barley are shipped from Jaffa to Europe every year. The fruit trade is also large and increases every year. The city is surrounded on three sides by orange, lemon, pomegranate and other fruit gardens. About 4,000 of these gardens raise the best oranges in the world—about 50,000 to 100,000 a year in each garden. They grow to an enormous size, measuring from ten to twenty inches in circumference. The retail price for oranges is three or four for a cent, and from four to six dollars per thousand. The seller has to count out 1,500 for every thousand, that is the old custom. The buyer always has the right to select the best. Lemons are sold four or five for a cent; they are large and full of juice. Pomegranates are generally sold one for a cent; they are large and handsome, full of little red seeds which are most delicious. If a drop of the juice gets on ones clothes the stains will never come out. The peal is used for coloring, and makes a bright black dye. Pomegranates ripen in September, lemons in December, and oranges in March.

The orange trees blossom in March, and it takes one year for the fruit to grow and ripen; they are good to eat some months before they are ripe. All these gardens are hedged in by the cactus, which grows fifteen to twenty feet high, and two or three feet thick. It bears a fruit in summer called prickly pear—which is quite sweet and much liked by the natives.

In the summer and autumn (the dry season) the gardens have to be irrigated. Each garden has a large well of water over which is very primitive machinery to which the gardener attaches a mule to wind up water. The water is first conveyed into a large stone tank made for the purpose, and when filled it is let out and conducted to each tree by little canals made in the ground. One-third of the trees are watered each day, and all the trees in each garden once every three days. On either side of the little canals they raise vegetables. By irrigation one can raise three and four crops of vegetables a year, and so have them all the year.

Olives, apricots, peaches, quince, figs, almonds and grapes grow in abundance without irrigation. A few dates which grow on palm trees, apples, and bananas, grow around Jaffa; but none of those trees bear more than one crop a year, except the fig which has small figs in the early spring; these drop off before the good fruit grows. It was called the "untimely fruit" or figs. Rev. vi. 13.

In this country the seasons, and habits of the people are quite changed from ours. We plant in spring; they in autumn. We harvest in autumn; they in spring. We feed our cattle in winter; they in summer. Our vegetables die in winter from cold; theirs in summer from heat. We dress our feet and limbs in winter to protect them from the cold; they their heads in summer to protect them from the heat. Our farmer-women wear shoes and stockings; theirs go barefooted and bareleged. We eat our heartiest meal in the day; they at night. We sit in chairs; they on the floor. We eat with knives, forks and spoons; they with their fingers. We wash our hands and face before eating; they after. Our women do the work indoors; theirs do the work outdoors. Our women ride; theirs walk and carry loads. We have rain in summer; they in winter. The rainy season commences in November and continues at intervals till April; so from April to November there is no rain, and the earth becomes like iron or brass, as Moses and the Levites predicted it would, if the children of Israel did not hearken unto the Lord their God. Lev. xxvi. 15-19; Deut. xxviii. 23.

So I might continue to point out difference between the East and the West but will close for the present. Your friend and brother in Christ.

THE PROPHETIC ASPECT OF THE JEWISH PERSECUTION.

The well-known novelist, whose remarkable conversion last year was described in the pages of the Christian Herald, has written to an English daily paper a letter on the subject of the Jewish persecutions from which we extract the following remarks:

"The Jewish nation, though under a cloud, will eventually resume their ancient territory, which is so evidently kept waiting for them. The prophecies are clear as day on two points: That the Jews are to repossess Palestine and, indeed, to rule from Lebanon to Euphrates; and that this event is to be the first of a great series of changes, leading to a vast improvement in the condition of poor suffering mankind and of creation in general. Now we have here in prospect a glorious event as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow. The only difference is that the sun will rise at a certain hour, and the Jews will occupy Syria and resume their national glory at an uncertain day. No doubt it is the folly of mankind to assume that an uncertain date must be a distant one. But that is unreasonable. Surely it is the duty of wise and sober men to watch precursory signs and lend our humble co-operation, should so great a privilege be accorded to us.

"This sudden persecution of the Jews in the very nation where they are most numerous—may it not be a precursory sign and a reminder from Providence that there abiding city is not in European Tartary? I almost think some such reminder was needed; for when I was a boy the pious Jews still longed for the Holy Land. They prayed, like Daniel, with their windows open toward Jerusalem.

"Yet, now that the broken and impoverished Saracen would cede them territory at one-tenth of its agricultural and commercial value, a cold indifference seems to have come over them. I often wonder at this change of sentiment about so great a matter, and in so short a period, comparatively speaking, and puzzle myself as to the reason.

"Two solutions occur to me: 1. Dispersed in various nations, whose average inhabitants are inferior in intelligence and forethought to themselves, they thrive as individual aliens more than they think so great a multitude of Jews could thrive in a land of their own, where blockheads would be scarce. 2. They have for centuries contracted their abilities to a limited number of peaceful arts and trades; they may distrust their power to diversify their abilities, and be suddenly a complete nation, with soldiers, sailors, merchants, husbandmen, as well as financiers and artists.

"But it is now proved that sojourning among inferior nations has more drawbacks than living at home. True, the Russian yoke) has for years been selling to the Jews his summer labor in winter, and at a heavy discount. But the improvident Russians have turned like wild beasts upon them, and outwitted, lawfully, have massacred them contrary to law. Palestine can be colonized effectually from Russia alone, where there are 3,000,000 Jews trembling for life and property; and the rest would follow. As to the second objection, History is a looking-glass at our backs. Whatever Jews have done Jews may do. They are a people of genius, and genius is not confined by nature, but by will, by habit, or by accident. What have these people tried and failed in? Warriors, writers, builders, merchants, lawgivers, husbandmen, and supreme in all! In this history repeats itself.

"They shall be great in the arts of peace and war, and their enemies melt away before them like snow off a dyke. Should they seem to require help at starting from any other nation, blessed will be the nation that proffers it; and the nation that persecutes them will be made an example of in some way or other. Therefore, if by any chance this recent outrage should decide the Jewish leaders to colonize Palestine from Russia, let us freely offer ships, seamen, money—whatever we are asked for. It will be a better national investment than Egyptian, Brazilian, or Peruvian bonds."—Charles Reade.

DISCUSSION.

The Kingdom of God yet Future.

JOHN FOORE, Affirmative.

A. H. SOUTT, Negative.

To continue our subject, we now refer to Zech. xiv. 1, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh." With this Peter agrees: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." 2 Peter iii. 10.

Now what takes place in the day of the Lord?

God says, "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle."

What else?

"Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle."

Now if Elder Scott would learn how the stone smites the feet and toes of the image which are of iron and clay, let him look and see:

"And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem: their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongues shall consume away in their mouth."

But who will accompany the Lord?

All the saints. Verse 5.

But what more scenes in that day?

"And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." v. 9.

But what further?

"And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." v. 16.

And what more?

"And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be." v. 8.

But why do they worship the King, and why do living waters go out from Jerusalem, if there be no probation to the left of the nations, and to the twelve tribes of Israel?

Should the Elder say that all the saints come from heaven with him, I have shown that the dead arise and that the living are changed, and that they are caught up together in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so are ever with the Lord, and that the Jerusalem that is above—the exalted Jerusalem, our mother—the bride, the Lamb's wife, the Redeemer's church, comes down from God out of heaven, and that the throne of God and the Lamb is in her—that the tree of life bears its fruits—that its leaves are for the healing of the nations—that the saved nations walk in the light of it—that the kings of the earth bring their glory and honor into it, and that the curse removed is no more. Hence it is the new heaven and the new earth that we look for according to his promise.

[Here Brother Foore reports some very coarse ribaldry as uttered by the negative which we think best to suppress.]

If such arguments will satisfy people let it be so. If God's word will not reach you I cannot do anything for you.

But the negative objected that Solomon sat upon the Lord's throne, or God's throne, and ruled all Israel—all Israel obeyed him.

By the Elder's rule of interpreting Scripture, where was God while Solomon sat on His Throne?

Now for the facts in the case; the throne was called God's throne because it was God's kingdom over Israel that God appointed Solomon as David's successor; and the same God has appointed that His Son, the anointed Jesus, shall sit upon David's throne, and David's kingdom; to order it, and establish it with judgment, and with justice forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. This kingdom will be God's kingdom, the kingdom of God's dear Son, the kingdom of heaven, being the kingdom that the God of heaven sets up. Dan. ii. 44.

But Elder S. told us that this kingdom would be in the new heaven and the new earth, and in ridicule asked—"How much land do you want? 160 acres?—what kind of a house?—what kind of a vineyard?" and charged again—what is not true—that our brethren taught the resurrection of animals, and tried hard to leave the impression that J. M. Stephenson and Dr. Thomas taught these monstrosities—claiming that he had debated with the former.

Now let us see what is in the new heaven and the new earth which Peter says we look for. Let us turn to Isa. lxv. 17-26, and read, and keep in mind that this is the new heaven and the new earth that God has said that he would create, and that the Elder pitched his tent here. We look and find that they plant vineyards, and eat the fruits—they build houses, and inhabit them—here we find the wolf, the lamb and the lion—here we find that the sinner that is an hundred years old is accursed—and here they bring forth, but not for trouble. Now as the Elder labored hard to cut off the restoration of the twelve tribes of Israel, and probation to the left of the nations, let him tell us who build houses and live in them?—who plant vineyards and eat the fruits?—and tell us who it is that brings forth?—and what about the wolf, the lamb and the lion?

I believe, as Jesus said, that "those that are counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 35-37.

These die no more. And also, that the twelve tribes of Israel will be restored back to the land whence they were driven—that the left of the nations will have probation during the reign of conquest—that upon those who refuse to serve the King there will be no rain—that Christ will be King upon his throne into the age—that into that age he will be a priest after the order of Melchizedec, which is King of righteousness, and then King of Salem which is King of peace—that Christ, to whom the future habitable is to be in subjection, will reign in righteousness: will subdue all enemies and reign upon Mount Zion—that they will beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks—that there will be peace, give was God given peace, and that the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of God. The whole earth groans and travails in pain. And not creation only, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, the redemption of our body.

Now if the Elder meets these facts by telling you that we teach that Christ is selecting out of the nations the noble and the acute in mind—the poor of this world to be the heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him, still we are teaching just what Jesus taught. Some have eyes, and see not, and ears, and hear not. He that has ears to hear let him hear. Paul—"What then? Israel has not obtained that which he seeketh for: but the election has obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Rom. xi. 7.

The prophets and apostles taught that God visited the Gentiles to take out a people for his name—them that have ears to hear. If God had designed to take out those that have ears to hear, and hear not, and eyes to see, and see not, he would have used some other means than the gospel of the Kingdom of God, which uses persuasion.

But God's ways are not Elder Scott's ways; for in Abraham and in his seed shall all—all nations—all families—all kindreds of the earth be blessed.

The Elder wanted me to point out a promise of the restoration of the twelve tribes that might not have been fulfilled at any time. To this the answer is, God's promises are fulfilled at the appointed time, and God appoints his own time. Jesus said that Jerusalem should be trodden down by the Gentiles till their times should be fulfilled. And speaking of signs that mark the fulfillment of these times, and his coming, Jesus said—"When you see these things come to pass, then know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." But this looking ahead through the prophets to see things that are in the future troubles many, for which I am sorry. Jesus said to his disciples that the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Matt. xvi. 27.

"Verily I say that there be some standing here, which shall not taste death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom. And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, up into a high mountain apart." They then had a vision of his glory—that glory in which he will come. Jesus, Moses, Elias, and the three witnesses were manifested in that glory. In this vision of his future glory, and of his coming into his kingdom, the body of God's Anointed is represented in one new man. When the vision is fulfilled the saints living and dead will meet him in the cloud of glory. And this Heavenly Body will, in power and glory, take the kingdom and possess it forever and ever. Math. xvi. 27, 28; xvii. 1-10; Dan. vii. 27. In vision Daniel saw the thrones cast down, and the Ancient of Days take his seat, and multitudes stand before him in judgment.

John saw a great white throne and him that sat thereon from whose face the heaven and earth fled away, and he saw the redeemed church, under the figure of a golden city, coming down from God out of heaven. I would be glad if you by faith could see these things. My prayer is that the whole earth may soon be filled with God's glory, and his will be done on earth as in heaven: Amen.

Thus wound up a debate lasting nine evenings; and, although we had a scholar and a twister to contend with, yet I believe victory was on the side of truth. Four intelligent ladies presented themselves for baptism during the discussion. The debate closed Wednesday evening and on Thursday morning we met them and baptised them into Christ—when the time came to leave them. My aged brother Kinsey stood by me and held up my hands—in fact all did their duty.

But as this Goliah was both a scholar and a boaster I needed the sweet counsel of Brother Kinsey so that I might keep in the spirit and fight as David fought Goliah. May the Lord bless the brethren and sisters in that part of the vineyard; and if we never meet them in the mortal state—may we all meet in that Kingdom of God which I tried to set before the people in its true light, which is my prayer for Christ's sake. Amen.

LEFT DESTITUTE BY THE FLOODS.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Mar. 12. — Lieut. Vedder, detailed for duty in Arkansas to ascertain the extent of the suffering caused by the overflow, arrived here this morning. He estimates that the Government will have to provide for 20,000 destitute people in Arkansas for sixty days from the 20th inst., as the suffering is on the increase, and will continue long after the waters subside.

The overflowing waters of the Mississippi river, in Arkansas and Mississippi, are, at some points, over fifty miles wide. Many of the best cotton plantations of the Southwest are under water. The extent of the aggregate money loss is estimated at millions of dollars.

The death of two centenarians, both Irish women, is announced—Mrs. Winnifred Howard Lally, of Chicago, aged 108, and Mrs. Mary McElroy, near Greensburg, Ind., aged 106. The latter perished in the flames of the burning house of her granddaughter.

THE YEARS TO BE.

A. A. HOPKINS.

O grandeur of the Years to be!
O future all sublime!
Fulfilled within thyself we see
The promises of time!
There bloom within thy hallowed air
The rare of flowers of speech,
And action in the sun shall bear
The sweetest fruit for each!

We sow the goodly seed to-day
Thy many hands shall reap;
We give the golden grain away
Thy garners soon shall keep!
Who tills to-day the teeming field
Might recompense shall earn;
Thy harvest-time shall only yield
The glorious return.

Thy nights with newer stars shall blaze,
Thy suns shall brighter glow;
No gladder, grander yesterdays
Thy consciousness shall know.
Thy song:—"Rise in joyous mood
Borne proudly on the breeze,
Freedom over every land,
And wafted o'er the seas.

We plant to-day a single tree,
or drop a single seed,
And millions in the Years to be
Shall praise the simple deed.
The thing we do unwarnedly for
Beyond our farthest thought;
The tidings of the present are
With freest blessings fraught.

With thy new light, O Years to be!
Shall beam a brighter morn,
And manhood with thy dawn shall see
Its truest being born!
The earth will ring thy coming in
With gladdest peal on peal,
For then shall gloriously begin
Humanity's best zeal!

And then shall all the echoes cheer
Man's rapid onward march;
For bless angelic hands shall rear
A grand triumphal arch!
No land shall know a desert bare,
No trackless waste a sea,
The world shall smile a garden fair
Within the Years to Be.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 7.

Bashan and its Giant Cities.

J. L. PORTER, A. M.

"Once more we look, and all is still as night,
All desolate! Graves, temples, palaces,
Swept from the sight; and nothing visible,
.....save here and there
An empty tomb, a fragment like a limb
Of some dismembered giant."

SCENERY OF BASHAN.

With the first dawn of the new morning, I went up to the flat roof of Sheikh Assad's house. The house is in the highest part of the town, and commands a wide view of the northern section of the mountain range and of the surrounding plain. The sky was cloudless, and of that deep dark blue which one never sees in this land of clouds and haze. The rain of the preceding day had cleared the atmosphere, and rendered it transparent as crystal. The sun was not yet up, but his beams shed a rich glow over the whole eastern sky, making it gleam like burnished gold, and throwing out into bold relief a ridge of wood-clad peaks that here shut in the view. From the base of the mountain on the north, a smooth plain, already green with young grass, extended away beyond the range of vision, dotted here and there with conical tells, on whose tops were the remains of ancient fortresses and villages. But on the west lay the objects of chief interest; the widespread rock-fields of Argob, the rich pasture-lands of Bashan encircling them, and running away in one unbroken expanse to the base of Hermon.

Long and intently did my eyes dwell on that magnificent landscape. Now, the strange old cities rivetted my attention, rising up in gloomy grandeur from the sea of rocks. Now the great square towers and castellated heights and tells along the rugged border of Argob were minutely examined by the help of a powerful glass; and now the eye wandered eagerly over the plain beyond, noting one, and another, and another of those dark cities that stud it so thickly. On the western horizon rose Hermon, a spotless pyramid of snow; and from it, northward, ran the serried, snow-capped ridge of "Lebanon toward the sun-rising." Josh. xiii. 5. As I looked on that western barrier of Bashan, the first sunbeams touched the crest of Hermon; and as they touched it, its icy crown glistened like polished steel, reminding me how strikingly descriptive was the name given to that mountain by the Amorites—Shenir, the "breastplate," or "shield." Deut. iii. 9.

For an hour or more I sat rapt in the contemplation of the wide and wondrous panorama. At least a thousand square miles of Og's ancient kingdom were spread out before me. There was the country whose "giant" (Rephaim, Gen. xiv.) inhabitants the eastern kings smote before they descended into the plains of Sodom. There were those "three-score great cities" of Argob, whose "walls, and gates, and brazen bars" were noted with surprise by Moses and the Israelites, and whose Cyclopean architecture and massive stone gates even now fill the western traveler with amazement, and give his simplest descriptions much of the charm and strangeness of romance. So clear was the air that the outline of the most distant objects was sharp and distinct. Hermon itself, though forty miles away, did not seem more than eight or ten, when the sun embossed its furrowed sides with light and shade.

I was at length roused from a pleasing reverie by the deep voice of Sheikh Assad giving a cordial and truly patriarchal salutation.

"What a glorious view you have from this commanding spot!" I said, when the compliments were over.

"Yes, we can see the Bedawin at a great distance, and have time to prepare for them," was his characteristic reply.

"What! do the desert tribes, then, trouble you here; and do they even venture to plunder the Druses?"

"Not a spot of border land from Wady Musa to Aleppo is safe from their raids, and Druses, Moslems, and Christians are alike to them. In fact, their hand is against all. When the Arezah come up in spring, their flocks cover that plain like locusts, and were it not for our rifles they would not leave us a hoof nor a blade of corn. To-day their horsemen pillage a village here; to-morrow, another in the Ghutah of Sham (Damascus); and the day following they strip the Baghdad caravan. Oh, my lord! these sons of Ishmael are fleet as gazelles, and fierce as leopards. Would Allah only rid us of them and the Turks, Syria might prosper."

The Sheikh described the Arabs to the life, just as they were described by the spirit of prophecy nearly four thousand years ago. "He (Ishmael) shall be a wild man; his hands against every man, and every man's hand against him; and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren." Gen. xvi. 12. These "children of the east" come up now as they did in Gideon's days, when "they destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel, neither sheep, nor ox, nor ass. For they came up with their cattle and their tents, and they came as grasshoppers for multitude; both they and their camels were without number; and they entered into the land to destroy it." Judges vi. 4, 5. During the course of another tour through the western part of Bashan, I rode in one day for more than twenty miles in a straight course through the flocks of an Arab tribe.

On remarking to the Sheikh the great number of old cities in view, he pointed out to me the largest and most remarkable of them: and among these I heard with no little interest, the name of Edrei, the ancient capital of Bashan, and the residence of Og, the last of its giant kings. Others there were too, such as Shuka, and Bathanyeh, and Musmieh, whose names, as we shall see, are not unknown in history.

From a general survey of the country I turned to an examination of the town. Hit is in form rectangular, and about a mile and a half in circumference. I traced most of the old streets, though now in a great measure filled up with fallen houses and heaps of rubbish, the accumulations of long centuries. The streets were narrow and irregular, and thus widely different from those laid out in many other cities in this land by Roman architects. A large proportion of the town is ruinous; but some of the very oldest houses are still perfect. They are simple and massive in style, containing only one story, and generally two or three large rooms opening on an enclosed court. The walls are built of large stones roughly hewn, though closely jointed, and laid without cement. The roofs are formed of long slabs placed horizontally from wall to wall; thus forming the flat "house tops," where the people are now accustomed to sit and pray, just as they were in New Testament times. Indeed, the "house-top" is the favorite prayer-place of Mohammedans in Syria. See Acts x. 9; Matt. xxiv. 17; Isa. xv. 3; Zeph. i. 5. The doors are stone, and I saw many tastefully ornamented with panels and garlands of fruit and flowers sculptured in relief. There is not a single new, or even modern, house in Hit. The Druses have taken possession and settled down without any attempt at alteration or addition. Those now occupied are evidently of the most remote antiquity, and not more than half of the habitable dwellings are inhabited. I saw the remains of several Greek or Roman temples, and a considerable number of Greek inscriptions on the old houses, and on loose stones. The inscriptions have no historic value, being chiefly votive and memorial tablets: two of them have dates corresponding to A. D. 120, and A. D. 208. Nothing is known of the history of Hit; we cannot even tell its ancient name; but its position, the character of its houses and of its old massive ramparts, seem to warrant the conclusion that it was one of those "three-score great cities" which Jair captured in Argob. Deut. iii. 4, 14.

The news of our arrival had already reached Sheikh Fares, the elder brother of our host, and one of the most powerful chiefs in Hauran. While we sat at breakfast a messenger arrived with an urgent request that we should visit him and spend the night at his house in Shubba. We gladly consented; and as that town is only four miles south of Hit, we resolved to employ the day in exploring the northern section of the mountain range. Our horses were soon at the door. Sheikh Assad supplied an active, intelligent, and well-mounted guide, and his own nephew, a noble-looking youth of one-and-twenty, volunteered his services as escort. Mounting at once, amid the respectful salams of a crowd of white-turbaned Druses, we rode off northward in the track of an old Roman road. Finely-cultivated fields skirted our path for some distance, already green with young wheat, and giving promise of luxuriance such as is seldom seen in Palestine. The day was bright and cool, the ground firm and smooth, our horses fresh, and our own spirits high. Our new companions, too, were capable to display the mettle of their steeds, and their unrivalled skill in horsemanship. So, loosening the rein, we dashed across the gentle slopes, and only drew bridle on reaching Bathanyeh, about four miles from Hit. Along our route for a mile and more, we observed the opening of a subterranean aqueduct, intended in former days to supply the city with water. Such aqueducts are common on the eastern border of Syria and Palestine, especially in Hauran and the plain of Damascus. They appear to have been constructed as follows:

"A shaft was sunk to the depth of from ten to twenty feet, at a spot where it was supposed water might be found; then a tunnel was excavated on the level of the bottom of the shaft, and in the direction of the town to be supplied. At a distance of about a hundred yards another shaft was sunk, connecting the tunnel with the surface; and so the work was carried on until it was brought close to the city, where a great reservoir was made. Some of these aqueducts are nearly twenty miles in length; and even though no living spring should exist along their whole course, they soon collect in the rainy season sufficient surface water to supply the largest reservoirs. Springs are rare in Bashan. It is a thirsty land; but cisterns of enormous dimensions—some open, others covered—are seen in every city in the village. It was doubtless by some such "conduit" as this that Hezekiah took water into Jerusalem from the upper spring of Gihon. 2 Kings xx. 20.

Prophetic Times.

EGYPT, ASSYRIA AND ISRAEL.

S. BONHOMME.

"In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrians shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptians into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land: "Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance." Isaiah xix. 23-25.

From the many passages which foretell the revival of Egypt in these latter days, we refer to these, as they fully summarize the glorious future. The fullest prophecy, which, in fact, reads more like a narrative of past events than an unfulfilled prediction uttered 2500 years ago, is that recorded in Isaiah, chapter 19. From verse 4 we learn that Egypt will be given over unto a cruel teacher, and a fierce king will rule over them in days near at hand. That this despot (Dan. xi. 12-43.) shall stretch his hand over the countries, and Egypt shall not escape, but he shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver, and over all precious things of Egypt. But from this chapter we learn that this wilful king at his first attempt will not be victorious, but will form an alliance with Egypt's king. Subsequently he will conquer Egypt by deceit and lies, and carry away its spoils. But, happily, after undergoing all the horrors of the latter days, Egypt will be purified, it will resume its ancient place among the leading eastern nations; nay, it will be one of the "Three" central kingdoms from whence God's glory will radiate. Thus Isaiah xix. 24-26. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land (earth). Whom Jehovah shall bless, saying "Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel my inheritance." It is not too much to affirm that fifty years ago so little was thought of the east that it was scarcely a factor in the politics of Europe. But now questions connected with Bible lands engross the attention of European statesmen; and with the tightening grasp of Russia on Asia, the whole of Western Europe is brought face to face with problems which it is feared that moral force cannot solve.

Who, with the Bible in his hand, can doubt that Egypt though still nominally forming a part of the Turkish Empire, has virtually achieved its independence during the last fifty years? Prophecy indicates that Egypt will be an important factor in the events destined to wind up this dispensation. Already we can trace those initial stages which imply that just as Egypt was degraded from its prominent position amongst Gentile kingdoms, for its rank idolatry and bitter oppression of God's chosen nation, so shall it resume its former station as a leading state when Messiah comes to set up his glorious theocracy. Isaiah xix. 22. "Jehovah shall smite Egypt, he shall smite and heal it; and they shall return unto Jehovah, and he shall be entreated of them and shall heal them." Even if Isaiah, Daniel, and Zechariah did not give us any definite information respecting the position of Egypt during the Millennium, we might without much fear or hesitation predict it from what is now most surely transpiring. Already Egypt has only a nominal connection with the Turkish Empire. It has an hereditary ruler styled the Khedive: it is permitted to make treaties with other nations on equal terms, it has a standing army of 30,000, and its Pachas rule from Alexandria to Lubia. Its only connection with Turkey is an annual tribute of $1,500,000, and had it not been for the jealousy of England, Mohamet Ali, the founder of the present dynasty, would undoubtedly, in conjunction with France, have achieved complete independence in 1840.

Egypt, after holding a foremost place amongst the nations for above 1500 years, was conquered first by the Assyrians, and in more modern days by the Ottomans. And now, as a tributary to Turkey, it literally fulfils the prediction of Ezek. xxix. 15, it shall be the basest of kingdoms, neither shall it exalt itself any more above the kingdoms. For the Lord hath brought Egypt into its low condition, its sentence being written in unmistakable terms, Jer. xlvi. 17, "why are thy valiant men swept away! They stood not because Jehovah did drive them. Egypt is but a noise, he hath passed the time appointed." In ancient times the population of Egypt exceeded 8,000,000, but what with the ravages of war and the plague, and the semi-starvation of its Fellahs, its population is now under five and a half millions. Of these, the Copts, the undoubted descendants of Pharaohic times, are variously estimated at from a quarter to a half a million. They have the very lineaments of the ancient Egyptians, as depicted on their monuments, and though, with the process of time, their original language has been much corrupted, yet linguists have traced above five hundred root-words in the modern dialect. The Copts are nominally Christians, but their creeds and rites, like those of the Latin and Greek communions, bear not the slightest resemblance to the doctrines and simple ritual of the apostles of Christ. Degraded by centuries of oppression, they have all the vices incident to slavery, and when the Turks wish to point a bitter insult, they call them the posterity of Pharaoh.

An important factor in the present condition of Egypt, foreshadowing as it does the great climatic changes of these latter days, cannot be omitted from the sketch of Egypt, as it was, is, and will be. Most frequent travelers in Egypt have noticed the great physical changes which have occurred since the construction of the Suez canal.

It is authoritatively stated that a belt of land between Port Said and Suez, about ninety miles long and thirty broad, has already had a manifest surface and climatic change. Before the construction of this waterway to India, the bordering region was notorious for its unrelieved barrenness, but now shrubs of all kinds spring up in all directions spontaneously. For though the water of the canal, the product as it is of two seas, is salt, yet as it filters through the sand or evaporates under the burning sun, it loses much of its saline qualities, and so it is fitted to promote vegetable growth. Even the temperature of the bordering region is already sensibly diminished through the evaporation of the water and the heavy dew which falls on the vegetation at night. These facts remarkably confirm the pre-report of Isaiah xxxv. 12; "The wilderness and the solitary places shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose, it shall rejoice even with joy and singing."

Yet after all, the facts now recorded are but prelibations of the joy springing from the revival of Egypt. But they powerfully illustrate the words of the angelic messenger to Daniel, after he had given a full outline of the future connection of Egypt with the wilful King. Dan. xii. 9. The conversion of the Egyptians will not be that half conversion which believes but is not obedient, but a godly life will be the outward expression of a godly creed. Thus we read the remarkable words, Isa. xix 21. "The Egyptians shall know Jehovah in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea they shall vow a vow unto Jehovah and perform it." One of the great tasks of obedience will be the observance of that Feast of Tabernacles which is directed to be kept by all the nations of Gentile origin during the Millennium in Jerusalem. Zech. xvi. 16, 19.

As prophetical forecasts were never given to feed idle curiosity respecting the world's future, but to incite believers to holier believing and more active services for our Lord, ought not what is revealed of Egypt's future in these latter days, as illustrated by what is now passing around us by unmistakable circumstances, to stimulate us to greater inner and outer consecration. For these and all other signs of our times speak as with trumpet tone. Ezek. xii. 24. The days are at hand and the effect, i. e. fulfillment of every prediction.

By thus acting as faithful watchmen in a world either fast locked up in sleep or gaily dancing the dance of death, we shall give our practical adhesion to the truth uttered by the beloved disciple, 1 John iii. 3. "Every man that hath this hope purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Or in the still more impressive words of the coming Deliverer, never more needed than in days when the church seems bent on trying that fatal experiment of marrying the world, Rev. iii. 3. "Behold I come quickly, hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

The religion of Mohomet was to prevail in the east for the space of 1260 years, and then its final end is to come, which is very rapidly advancing, when the restoration of the Jews, and settlement in Palestine is to be accomplished. Upon the whole, what an amazing prophecy we have, comprehending so many various events and extending through so many successive ages, from the first establishment of the Persian Empire, about 530 years before the first advent of Christ, to the final consummation of the present gospel dispensation. The Scripture prophecies were intended for the instruction and illumination of future ages. Pagan oracles are no sooner understood, than they are rejected, whereas the reverse is true of the Scripture prophecies, and the better understood, the more to be admired because of truth and divinity. It is to be observed that Mohamed began his imposture about the same time that the Bishop of Rome by virtue of a grant from the wicked tyrant Phocas, first assumed the title of Universal Pastor, and thereon claimed to himself that supremacy which he had been ever since endeavoring to usurp over the Christian Church. Phocas made this grant A. D. 606, which was the very year that Mohamed retired to the cave to forge that imposture there, which, two years after, A. D. 608, he began to propagate at Mecca.

What stronger and more convincing proof can be given or required of a Divine Providence, and a Divine Revelation, that there is a God who directs and orders the transactions of the world, and that there is nothing hid from his presence, but all things are naked before him, and that Daniel and Isaiah, prophets inspired by him, men greatly beloved, have given us, more than 2500 years ago, predictions of the events now transpiring in the East, as to Egypt, Turkey, the wilful King, and their final issue, gradually shaping their accomplishment, when Egypt shall be God's people, Assyria the work of his hands, and Israel his inheritance?

At some future time we shall show from the inspired Word of God that Assyria is to be reconstructed, in a day not far distant.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

The learned tell us that the nineteenth century requires advanced thought. I visit the nineteenth century was over. I have heard it bragged about so much that I am sick of the nineteenth century. We are told that this is too sensible a century to need or accept the same gospel as the first, second, or third centuries. Yet these were the centuries of martyrs, the centuries of heroes, the centuries that conquered all the gods of Greece and Rome, the centuries of holy glory. And all this because they were the centuries of the gospel; but now we are so enlightened that our ears ache for something fresh, and under the influence of another gospel, which is but another, our beliefs are dwindling down from Alps to ant-hills, and we ourselves from giants to pigmies. We will want a microscope soon to see Christian faith in the land, it is getting to be so small and scarce.—Spurgeon.

Waiting for Papa.

Dear little brown eyes gazing
Out through the twilight gloom,
Watching, so earnestly watching,
Waiting for papa to come;
High chair pushed back from the table,
Sunny face patterly sweet,
For papa must ask a blessing,
Ere little Bessie will eat—
Listen, I hear his foot-step,
Eddy a moment to wait—
Bring back the smiles, little brown eyes,
Papa is opening the gate!

Noble Courage.

A poor boy was attending school one day with a large patch on the knee of one of his trowsers. One of his school mates made fun of him, calling him "Old Patch."

"Why don't you fight him?" cried one of the boys, "I'd give it to him if he called me that."

"Oh," said the boy, "you don't suppose I'm ashamed of my patch, do you? For my part, I'm thankful for a good mother to keep me out of rags. I'm proud of my patch for her sake."

This was noble. That boy had the courage that would make him successful in the struggles of life. We must have courage in our struggle, if we hope to come out right.

Home Love.

Home love is the best love. The love that you are born to is the sweetest you will ever have on earth. You who are so anxious to escape from the home-nest, pause a moment and remember this is so. It is right that the hour should come when you, in your turn, should become a wife and mother, and give the best love to others; but that will be just it. Nobody—not a lover, not a husband—will ever be so tender or so true to you as your father or mother. Never again, after strangers have broken the beautiful bond, will there be anything so sweet as the little circle of mother, father, and children, where you were cherished, protected, praised, and kept from harm. You may not know it now, but you will know it some day. Whomsoever you may marry, true and good though he may be, will, after the love days are over and honeymoon has waned, give you only what you deserve of love or sympathy—and usually much less; never more.

You must watch and be wary, lest you lose that love which came in through the eye because the one who looked thought you beautiful. But those who bore you, who loved you when you were that dreadful little object, a small baby, and thought you exquisitely beautiful and wonderfully brilliant—they do not care for faces that are more graceful than yours. You are their very own, and so every way better to them always than any others.

The Covenanter's Daughter.

It was a beautiful evening in October. The setting sun bathed the waters of the Highland loch in a flood of golden light, and the tiny wavelets leaped and danced like little flames. A few fleecy clouds sailed across the deep blue sky, and the shadows chased each other over the heather-covered mountains.

Creeping cautiously down the precipitous pathway was a little Scotch girl who had numbered some twelve summers. Carefully and noiselessly she glides along, half concealing herself in the shadow of the tangled brushwood till she comes to a clump of trees, where, putting aside the hanging boughs, she enters a cave so carefully concealed that a person unacquainted with the hiding place would have sought in vain for it. A man was lying on the ground on a heap of straw, deeply engaged in reading a well-worn Bible.

"Father!"

"My child!" and the dark eyes lighted up with pleasure as he beheld his little visitor and drew her toward him.

"My child! my only treasure! Were it not for thee I would willingly leave this earth, beautiful though it be. Listen, my loved one! Our Master says, 'In my Father's house are many mansions.' There shall be no night there! God shall wipe away tears from off all faces! Oh, child, shall life, shall death separate us from Christ? No; in all these things we are more than conquerors. Yet, oh, my lonely church, my beloved flock! Who will minister to you now? Who will show you to the kingdom of heaven?"

"Oh, Father, God watches over us. He will be our guide."

"Yes," said the minister; "he shall feed his flock like a shepherd. I will trust him to the end. But, Mary, my child, I fear for you to be alone at night. Leave me now while it is yet light. God bless thee, my only earthly treasure, and grant that, if we meet no more on earth, we may meet in the kingdom of heaven."

Slowly and sadly Mary turned [illegible] the village. Would God forget to be gracious? Would her beloved father never stand again in the pulpit of his little church, and invite the people to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world? Would—

A loud shout fell on her ear, and the tramp of horses came nearer and nearer. Three soldiers, their carbines flashing in the sun, were coming up the hill, and in a few minutes would reach the place where she stood. Shall she fly? She can not; she seems rooted to the ground. Happen what may, she will not betray her father's hiding place. The brutal Claverhouse is one of the party.

"Ah!" laughs he, "we shall unearth the old fox now. Tell me, girl, where is your father hid? You have been to him now. We saw you leave the wood ten minutes ago."

"I cannot tell you where he is."

"You cannot? You will not?" cried the infuriated Claverhouse. "I vow that in five minutes you shall die, if you do not."

Mary dropped on her knees. "Oh, God, receive my spirit. Bless my father, and keep him from these cruel men."

"Stop your nonsense, girl! Will you tell?"

"No!"

"Then die!" and drawing a pistol, he fired.

Poor Mary fell on the grass, her life-blood staining it crimson, and with a gentle sigh she died. The troopers rode off to continue their search, leaving her body lying on the turf, where it was found later in the evening by some villagers who came to seek her. A simple stone, with the initials "M. H." marks the spot where Mary Harvie chose death rather than betray her father.

Whether the old man's hiding place was ever discovered I know not; but this father and child will be united in the mansions of that God whom they both loved.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake." Matt. v. 10.

BEAUTY.

The loveliest eye is that of faith,
Which upward looks to God;
The neatest feet is that which has
The path of virtue trod.

The sweetest lips are those that never
A word of guile has spoken;
The richest voice is that of prayer,
One ne'er a vow has broken.

The prettiest hair is that which Time
Has silvered o'er with gray,
He covers o'er an honest head—
Its beauties ne'er decay.

The fairest hand is one that's oft
In deeds of kindness given,
The purest heart is one that Christ
Has sanctified for Heaven.

WANTED.

LIZZIE A. REED.

WANTED—MEN—And thank God we have a few—men who are out for sale—who will stand by truth and righteousness, though the earth should tremble and the heavens fall.

Men who walk unscathed through the fires of temptation, and the crucible of trial—who bear the wrongs and crosses—who meet the pains and perils of life with a brave and patient courage which can only be born of faith.

Men who never falter in their loyalty, whether in storms or sunshine—who realize in the wildest tempest that a strong hand is at the helm, and that he who holds evenly the scales of justice, will at last vindicate the right.

Men who pursue the even tenor of their way, in that sublime faith and patience which "hopeth all things and endureth all things."

Politicians who care more for the public weal than private spoil—who are ready to grapple with wrong and fraud and crime—who will hold high the banner of justice amid the hosts of wrong.

Ministers who will preach the truth regardless of financial results—who will tell men of the danger they are in, instead of flattering them that God is so very loving, that he will reward them for disobedience and disloyalty—who shall bring the "good news" and "glad tidings" into the lonely wastes of earth—who can comfort aching hearts, by pointing them to the unfailing source of rest and peace.

Men who shall surely wear the crown that is promised to "him that overcometh."

WANTED—WOMEN—Who shall be earnest and faithful in every department of life—whose loyalty to God and humanity is a part of their very existence—who care more for peace than popularity—more for faith than fashion, and more for truth than trifling.

WANTED—HOMES—Which are founded upon honesty and integrity—where love reigns, not as a passing sentiment but as the corner-stone of the whole structure.

Homes which are the nurseries of faith—the nourishings of principle, and the cradles of true manhood—which are the centres of attraction from the toils and turmoils of the age—the few resorts of earth, which are crowned with welcome and canopied with peace.

WANTED—CHURCHES—That shall be free from envyings and jealousy—free from selfish ambition and pride.

Churches which shall bow to no creed save the written word—which shall accept no "interpretation" of the Book which violates the spirit and letter of its teachings—which have no test of fellowship save Christian character—no bond of union, save Bible truth and Christian love.

Churches whose members with clean hands and earnest hearts work faithfully for God and humanity while they wait for the coming King.

WANTED—REST—Beyond the storm-clouds of life—beyond the chill of changing friends, and the fever of anxious pain.

Rest amid the unfading flowers of a world made new—on the shores of the crystal sea.

Rest with the loved ones of earth, where weariness cannot pale their cheeks, or disease quench the love light in their eyes.

Rest on the banks of "the beautiful river" where partings are unknown and estrangements cannot come—where no tempest can darken the sky, no heart can ache with loneliness or regret—where humanity learns at last, the boundless wealth of a Father's love and tender care.

Rest, where doubts and fears are lost in the golden depths of Divine peace, and all tears are wiped away by the hand of Infinite love.

THE SOUL OF MAN.—No. 7.

D. H. HALL.

In calling the reader's attention to the passages which are supposed to teach the consciousness of disembodied souls between death and the resurrection, let me here say that, if it could be conclusively shown that souls thus exist, it would be far from proving the immortality of the soul, for, as we have seen, the wicked are to be destroyed both soul and body in Gehenna. And, then, it would not only contradict the most explicit declaration of the inspired wise man—that "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol whither thou goest," but as we have seen in this investigation, the whole tenor of God's Word. But we shall see, on examination, that the Scriptures we shall now refer to do not even intimate the existence of disembodied souls.

Rev. vi. 9. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar [of sacrifice—not in heaven] the souls [persons] of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest [not in heaven, but in their graves] yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they, should be fulfilled."

That John saw no disembodied souls, or, real persons, or real white robes is certain from the fact that these "souls" or persons were not yet in being at the time of the vision, as the things seen were under the fifth seal, and the vision was given and recorded for the encouragement of the saints who were to live afterwards and suffer persecution and be slain for the word of God. Neither was there to be a literal crying of these "souls" to God to "avenge" their "blood on those that dwell on the earth" any more than there was a literal crying of the "blood" of Abel "from the ground" against Cain. It is as certain that these "souls" represent persons as that soul and souls mean person and persons in the following Scriptures: "Let every soul [Diaglott-person] be subject unto the higher powers;" "wherein few, that is, eight souls [Diaglott-persons] were saved by water;" "and we were in all in the ship two hundred three score and sixteen souls." The Diaglott has the passage, under consideration, as follows: "I saw under the altar the persons of those who had been killed;" and also Rev. xx. 4, as follows: "And I saw thrones.... and the persons of those who had been beheaded," etc. There is no more evidence of the immortality of the soul, or of disembodied souls from the use of this term psuhee—soul in the New Testament than there is that the fish of the sea have such souls because this term is applied to them as follows, Rev. xvi. 3: "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea." Thus like men, the fish are souls and die, and have souls and lose them—lose their life when they die.

We will next notice the case of Moses and Elias, who appeared on the mount of transfiguration; for it is assumed that it was the disembodied soul of Moses and not "Moses" that thus appeared. But three of the Evangelists (John don't record it) affirm that Moses and Elias appeared and talked with Jesus; Luke says, "And, behold, there talked with him two men [not disembodied souls], which were Moses and Elias." God had said of Moses, "My servant Moses is dead." But theologians virtually say: "Not so Lord, thy servant Moses is alive and in heaven. And the devil, also, it would seem, charged God with falsehood, for Jude, in referring to the dispute between Michael and the devil, says: "Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, presumed not to bring against him a railing judgment [Diaglott], but said, The Lord rebuke thee." The devil knew that God had declared Moses to be dead, and that he (God) had buried him, and when he sees Moses alive and in his proper person on the mount with Elias and Jesus, how very natural for the devil, the father of liars, to charge God with falsehood.

The appearance of Moses and Elias is a very plain case—look at it—Moses dies and God buries him; Moses appears on the Mount; and what is the natural presumption? why, that Moses has been raised from the dead. Christ had said (Matt. xvi. 28): "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom, or Royal Majesty," as the Diaglott has it. And then comes the transfiguration, as related in the very next verse of the seventeenth chapter, which is a miniature representation of the second coming of Christ into his kingdom with power and great glory—"His face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias [Moses, to represent the (to be) resurrected ones, and Elijah to represent those who shall not see death, but should "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" from mortality to immortality] talking with him." And Peter confirms this view in the following language (2 Pet. i. 16-19): "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the Holy Mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy [than this miniature representation that Christ will come into his kingdom]; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the [resurrection] day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

It is affirmed by the "orthodox" that the thief on the cross went to heaven with Christ on the day of crucifixion, and they form the opinion by a misinterpretation of the words of Christ to the thief—"Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." To show their great mistake, it is only necessary to remind the reader that Christ did not go to heaven that day, nor to "hell" to preach to disembodied spirits, nor to "paradise," unless Hades is paradise, for he did go to Hades, where Solomon says "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." Christ said to Mary at Joseph's tomb after his resurrection—"Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my Father,"—and it was forty days after that he ascended to heaven.

Now, shall we receive the common interpretation given to Christ's words to the thief, which the reader can see contradicts the express words of Christ to Mary, or, shall we receive and believe the latter? While these words of Christ to Mary can never be harmonized with the "orthodox" interpretation of his words to the thief, his words to the thief can be harmonized with his words to Mary in three ways.

1. By testing the prayer of the thief explain the answer, or, in other words, understand that the language of Christ is the answer to the thief's prayer. "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom"—referring to his second coming to set up his kingdom on the earth, and not to his going to heaven. Christ is coming again, not only to judge the world in righteousness, but to purify the earth by fire, and restore it to more than its Eden splendor. Peter says: But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up....Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." "And we shall reign on the earth," not in heaven, for "The meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Now, the thief in his intelligent prayer embraced all the above—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, this day [the day of my coming] shalt thou be with me in paradise."

2. By changing the punctuation—which is not the work of the inspired penman, but of uninspired men, who have made many changes from time to time—and putting the comma after to-day, we have the true meaning in substance as above explained. "Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise," [when I come into my kingdom according to your prayer.]

3. "Verily I say unto thee, this day shalt thou be with me in paradise"—paradise, as compared with this intense suffering, for we shall sleep and be at rest. Though this last explanation, suggested to my mind while writing, being new so far as I know may be deemed fanciful, it does not make Christ contradict his own words to Mary, as does the "orthodox" interpretation.

Some have objected to placing the comma after To-day, or This day, (semeron, is rendered both ways) because, they say, it is unnecessary for a speaker to inform his hearers that he is speaking to them "To-day" when they know it; but it is nevertheless often done by our best orators, and was done by Daniel Webster in his great speech at Bunker Hill Monument. One says, "I speak to-day for the people." Or again, "I say to you This day our glorious institutions must be preserved." Now we change the comma and write it—"I say to you, This day our glorious institutions must be saved." The reader can see how the meaning is changed by placing the comma after the different words. But we have many Bible examples showing it to be proper to place the comma after to-day, or this day in such passages. Deut. vi. 6. "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart." "And the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them." See also xi. 13-28. There can be no question, then, of the propriety of placing the comma after to-day in the Scripture under consideration. Either this or some other explanation which will harmonize the words of Christ to Mary.

We have only space to notice two more passages that are relied upon to prove the separate existence of the soul, the first of which is found Phil. i. 20-25, and reads as follows: "According to my earnest expectation and hope, [which was being "clothed upon with his house from heaven,' when it (the holy city) should 'come down from God out of heaven" ] that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by life, or by death. For to me to life is Christ [gain to Christ's cause], and to die is gain [to Christ's cause, for Christ shall be magnified whether by life or by death]. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor [namely, magnifying Christ]: Yet what I shall [should] choose I know not. For I am in a strait betwixt (the) two [life and death, not knowing which will magnify Christ the most], having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better [than either life or death]. Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."

I have thus paraphrased the words of the apostle which paraphrase not only gives his true meaning, but also very clearly shows that the translation of the Greek term analusia by the word "depart" supposed to refer to his death, is an incorrect one, and involves the apostle in an inconsistency if not a contradiction. For he had just said that he did not know which to choose between life and death, and the translation makes him choose death, when in truth it was a third thing he desired, which he says "is far better" than either life or death—better than life with all its toils and persecutions, and better than death with its unconsciousness. And that third thing, if it was not translation, was "The returning and being with Christ," which he preferred, and which he considered better than life and better than death. The Emphatic Diaglott version has the 24th and 25th verses as follows: "I am indeed, hard pressed by two things; —I have an earnest desire for the returning, and being with Christ, since it is very much to be preferred;—but to remain in the flesh is more requisite on your account." This version has to this passage the following foot note: "To analusai, the loosing again or the returning, being what Paul earnestly desired, could not be death or dissolution, as implied by the word depart in the common version, because it seemed a matter of indifference to him, which of the two—life or death—he should choose; but he longed for the analusai, which was a third thing, and very much to be preferred to either of the other two things alluded to. The word analusei occurs in Luke xii. 36, and is there rendered returns;—"Be you like men waiting for their lord (master), when he will return from the wedding." Jesus had taught his disciples that he would come again, or return. John xiv. 3-18; this, also, the angels said to them at his ascension, Acts i. 11. Paul believed this doctrine and taught it to others, and was looking for and waiting for the Savior from heaven, Phil. iii. 20; 1 Thess. i. 10; iv. 16-17, when his mortal body would put on immortality, and he would ever be with the Lord."

The other passage is 2 Cor. v. 1-10, which is also relied upon as evidence of the separate existence of the soul, and which has no more reference to this dogma than the Scripture already noticed, as will be seen by a Scriptural paraphrase of the Apostle's language. For to believe that Paul, who did not expect his "crown" and "reward" until the second coming of Christ and the resurrection, here teaches what "orthodoxy" alleges would be to convict him not only of inconsistency, but of palpable contradiction—not only of all his teaching in his epistles and preaching, but contradiction of the whole Bible.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle [not our body, as alleged,—Macknight renders it—"if our earthly house, which is a tent"] were dissolved, [as Peter says it will be, (2 Pet. iii. 6-11) that is, the earth which Paul calls "our earthly house"] we have a building of God, [New Jerusalem] an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this [house—not body] we groan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon [or invested] with our house [the holy city] which is [to come down] from heaven: if so be that being [thus] clothed we shall not be found naked [destitute of a habitation]. For we that are in this tabernacle [not body, but skenous, a tent, or temporary dwelling—this world; do groan [as Paul says: (Rom. viii. 23) "Even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting (for heaven at death? no, but waiting) for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body"] being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed [destitute of an habitation—my "orthodox" brother, to be consistent, would have to say disembodied, though this would make Paul inconsistent, for he says, "Not for that we would be unclothed,] but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven; ver. 3], that mortality might be swallowed up of life], or mortality put on immortality at the last trump when the dead are raised. See 1 Cor. xv. 52-53.]....Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body [that is mortal, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." 1 Cor. xv. 54]. We are absent from the Lord. (For we walk by faith, not by sight:) We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the [mortal] body, not to be present with the Lord [in the immortal body.] Wherefore we labor, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ [not at death. "For God hath appointed a day in which to judge the world by Jesus Christ,"] that every one may receive the things ["done" is not in the Greek] through [dia, not en-in] the body [not 'the disembodied,' but through the resurrected body,] according to that he hath done, whether good or bad."

Thus we have briefly noticed the passages that are relied upon as evidence of disembodied souls, and not only fail to find any thing in them to justify such belief, but on the contrary every thing against it.

I have not referred to the two or three passages which are quoted in proof of the immortality of the soul,—such as:—"These shall go to everlasting punishment," etc., which simply means an everlasting deprivation of life, or cutting off from life. The primary sense of kolasin, the root of kolasin here rendered punishment, is "To cut off;" and as here applied to the wicked must mean the cutting off from life, which would be the antithesis of the "eternal life" of the saints. But there is no antithesis as the passage stands, and as was certainly intended by Christ, for punishment and eternal life do not make one. Hence theologians, seeing the necessity of one, have substituted the word happiness for "eternal life" to make one, and then argue that the punishment—which they assume to be torment—of the wicked is just as enduring as the happiness of the righteous, and, ergo, the soul is immortal. But even this resort does not help them, for punishment is not always torment or pain. Webster says it is also loss, deprivation, etc.; then it may be the loss of, deprivation of life; and if the wicked shall be deprived of life, as the Bible teaches in two hundred passages, and that life shall never be restored, it will be an everlasting loss of life, and hence an everlasting punishment.

Paul says (2 Thess. i. 7-10): "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be (tormented? no, but) punished with (endless pain? no, but with) everlasting destruction (annihilation,—Webster) from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

That the words of truth presented in these articles for the past few weeks may not only strengthen and confirm those who hold them, but lead many others to see and embrace them is the fervent prayer of the writer.

RAILROAD BUILDING IN THE ORIENT.

How strange it seems to read of railroads being constructed in regions which recall very ancient history. A railroad is in process of construction to connect the Black and Caspian Seas. It is known as the Baku and Tiflis road and will be 500 miles long when completed. It runs just south of and parallel with the Caucasus. Mount Ararat is in sight of a portion of the track. How out of place the steam horse seems to be in such an old, old country.

A LONG WAY ROUND.

The Times of India says: "During the repairs of the telegraph cable near Bombay the steamers Chiltern and Great Northern were about half a mile apart, the former having hold of a shore end cable, and so was in telegraphic communication with Bombay, the latter having hold of a sea end, and so was in telegraphic communication with Aden. The Chiltern cleared the Great Northern to splice on to the cable, and this was communicated by wire from the test-room of the Chiltern, passing through all the coils of cable in her hold and on to Bombay, whence it was sent on to Aden, and back from Aden to the Great Northern. Thus as a speedy means of sending a message half a mile it was forwarded by a route between three and four thousand miles long. The following morning, when the two vessels were within a quarter of a mile of each other, communications passed between them constantly in the same way."

THE SEVEN BIBLES OF THE WORLD.

The seven Bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Try Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zenddavesta, and the Scripture of the Christians. The Koran is the most recent of these seven Bibles, and not older than the seventh century of our era. It is a compound of quotations from the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud and the gospel of St. Barnabas. The Eddas of the Scandinavians were first published in the fourteenth century. The Pitikes of the Buddhists contain sublime morals and pure aspirations, but their author lived and died in the sixth century before Christ. There is nothing of excellence in their sacred books not found in the Bible. The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, "king" meaning web of cloth or the warp that keeps the threads in their places. They contain the best sayings of the best sages on the ethico-political duties of life. These sayings can not be traced to a period higher than the eleventh century, B. C. The three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos, and it is the opinion of Max Muller, Wilson, Johnson and Whitney that they are not older than eleven centuries B. C. The Zenddavesta of the Persians is the grandest of all the sacred books next to our Bible. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, was born in the twelfth century, B. C. Moses lived and wrote his Pentateuch fifteen centuries B. C., and therefore has a clean margin of three hundred years over the most ancient of the other sacred writings.

THE VALLEY OF DEATH.

The valley of death, a spot almost as terrible as the prophet's valley of dry bones, lies just north of the old Mormon road to California—a region thirty miles long by thirty broad, and surrounded, except at two points, by inaccessible mountains. It is totally devoid of water and vegetation, and the shadow of a bird or wild beast never darkens its white, glaring sands. The Kansas Pacific Railroad engineers discovered it, and some papers, which show the fate of the "lost Montgomery train," which came south from Salt Lake in 1860, guided by a Mormon. When near Death Valley, some came to the conclusion that the Mormon knew nothing of the country, so they appointed one of their number a leader, and broke off from their party. The leader turned due west, and so, with the people and wagons and the docks, he traveled three days, and then descended into the broad valley, whose treacherous mirage promised water. They reached the center, but only the white sands, bounded by scorching peaks, met their gaze. And around the valley they wandered, and one by one the men died, and the panting flocks stretched themselves in death under the hot sun. The children, crying for water, died at their mother's breasts, and with swollen tongues and burning vitals, the mothers followed. Wagon after wagon was abandoned, and strong men tottered and raved and died. After a week's wandering, a dozen survivors found some water in the hollow of a mountain. It lasted but a short time, when all perished but two, who escaped out of the valley and followed the trail of their former companions. Eighty-seven families, with hundreds of animals, perished here, and now, after twenty-two years, the wagons stand still complete, the iron works and tires are bright, and the shrivelled skeletons lie side by side.—The Independent Journal.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

"We have not been in the habit of warmly commending to the notice of our readers as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay the careful perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 17, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy to those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 24, 1878.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have here interested ourself, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. * * * Any one not fully conversant with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"We have read it diligently again and again. * * It is next in point of excellence and doctrine truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a fairer exhibit of the gospel of the Kingdom and at the same time one better suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book. 'The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses.'"—R. H. B., Va.

"It is elegantly bound in cloth, and printed in clear type on good paper, 304 pages. The whole of this book can be had for $1."

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 22, 1882. NO. 12.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY.

The Two Witnesses. They are not Elijah and John the Revelator. Not Moses and Elijah. Not Any Two Persons. Time Too Long. Who They Are. Sackcloth State. Prophecies.

No. 104.

J. P. WEETHEE.

If there can be 1852 years between the 69 weeks and the 70th week, two of the consecutive parts of the 70 weeks, when there can be no space between the seven weeks and 62 weeks, consecutive parts of the same 70 weeks, why may there not be an equal space between the sending of the Malachi Elijah, and the burning day, since the word before expresses time only in the sequence?

If before means 3½ years before, it may mean 1334 years before. John's answer to the priests and Levites does not remove all objections. John's reply was to the Jews, who, from John's wonderful character, supposed that he must be the Christ that was then expected, or Elijah his literal, personal, veritable forerunner, or the prophet like unto Moses. Such works taught the Jews, that some ancient prophet had returned to the earth in his own proper person. This belief caused the Jews to send a committee of experts, consisting of priests and Levites, to obtain from John's own lips a solution; for there were all manner of reports in circulation among the common people.

They come to John, when the following dialogue takes place, between [illegible] interviewers:

[illegible] talked with him—Who art thou?

[illegible] Christ," and as the Christ (Anointed [illegible] vicar, will be con

[illegible] What then? Art thou Elijah (the veritable Elijah returned to earth, whom we expect before Messiah comes)?

John—I am not.

Int.—Art thou the prophet (the one like unto Moses)?

John—No.

Int.—Ah, indeed! not Christ, nor Elias, nor the prophet, nor any other literal returned prophet; who art thou then? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

John—I (am) the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord." Isa. xl. 3.

John's answer, when carefully examined, is this:

I am not your Messiah; nor am I your old prophet Elijah, that went up bodily, and alive into heaven, and now in person is visiting the earth; nor, again, am I the prophet, like unto Moses; I am only his herald, sent to prepare his way. I am to the Jews, what Elijah was to Israel, a great national reformer; not the great prophet, but, simply, his voice, to announce his approach, and to prepare the people to receive him.

Int.—Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not the Christ, nor Elias (in person), neither the prophet?"

John—"I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and (with) fire. I am his voice. I am the Elijah of Malachi; sent to do what that prophet was to do. As monarchs, who, when entering upon expeditions through desert countries, send harbingers to prepare for their passage, pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments: so am I sent before Messiah to prepare his way. I am to the Jews and their King, what Elijah was to Israel and Ahab their king."

We shall now affirm, and prove that John the Baptist is the Elijah of Mal. iv. 5.

We have already examined the testimony of John himself; and did not find that it conflicted with the truth of the above proposition; he admits that in character, in spirit, and in his work, he is the Elijah of Mal. iv. 5. We are now prepared to introduce direct, and inspired testimony.

1. Their missions are identical. Elijah, of Mal. iv. 5, was, to turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. Isaiah's voice in the wilderness, (John the Baptist) crieth, Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Isa. xl. 3. For their fulfillment see Matt. iii. 1-13, and Luke iii. 2-9.

Gabriel's Testimony.—"Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John. And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb. And many of the children of Israel shall be turned to the Lord their God. And he (John) shall go before him (the Lord) in the spirit and power of Elias (Elijah), to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Luke i. 13-17.

The Testimony of Christ.—It will be granted that Christ knew who John was, for he was his own herald. Let us examine with attention what Christ said of him.

John, from his prison, hearing of the works of Christ, sent two of his disciples to Christ, with this question, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? They were sent back after seeing many miracles. To the multitudes Jesus began to testify of John. What went ye out into the wilderness to see?

His first answer is—He is more than a prophet.

Second—This is (he) of whom it is written. Isa. xl. 3; Mal. iii. 1. Behold, I send my messenger before thy (Christ's) face, which shall prepare thy (Christ's) way before thee. Matt. vi. 9, 10.

Third—"And if ye will receive (it), this is Elias (Elijah), which was to come." Verse 14. Mal. iv. 5. "And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the Scribes that Elias (Elijah) must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias (Elijah) truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." Matt xvii. 10-14.

With such direct, positive and Divine testimony, it would be an insult to the veracity of Gabriel and of Christ to attempt to adduce any more testimony. That class of persons called out to herald the return of Messiah, is called by other names.

2. John the Revelator is said to be one of the two witnesses. Of John's claim to that honor we have but little to say. No person can prove that he is one: and his position relative to these revelations, renders such an idea rather absurd. He, at the time of this revelation (Rev. i. 2), was a witness; and continued such to his death; but, that he should be called up 3½ years before the resurrection of the just; prophesy in sackcloth during those years his three days, at least, under the domination of a second death, seems in a high degree improbable.

3. Moses and Elias are called by some the two witnesses. It is not necessary to say any thing more about Elias. As to Moses, he was a witness, and a lawgiver under the old covenant. What his position will be under the new covenant, we think is not stated. He will probably be a pillar in God's living temple, and will faithfully accomplish whatever may be assigned him: but that he will be called from his sleep 3½ years before the waking up of the just: prophesy in sackcloth 3½ years at least; and lie under the dominion of a second death for 3½ days, while the other saints, translated on the day of his martyrdom, are in glory with Christ; for such a view we can find no Scripture testimony. It is useless to follow any further the personal witness theory. The duration of their prophesyings is too long for the life of any one person, 1260 days; prophetic days. Each day being a year, the period is 1260 years. If these days are years, the theory of two individual persons is at an end, the lives of the two witnesses are not limited to their sackcloth state. The language clearly implies an antecedent existence. "I shall submit my witness to a severe trial of their faith; greater than they have ever experienced, their terrible persecutions under the Pagan priesthood, is as nothing in duration and severity, to the one that will follow under the great apostacy."

It is very generally admitted that the 1260 days synchronize with the 42 months; but the 42 months cover that space of time during which the nations, constituting the family of the fourth beast of Daniel, under the control of the Roman apostate hierarchy, trampled under foot the Holy City.

But the Holy City, we have shown to be the Christian Community as it exists, and has existed in the world—the citizens by faith, of the heavenly Jerusalem. They are of that community, who, in Dan. vii. 18, 21, 22, 25, 27, are called the saints of the Most High, and where the same synchronic events and time are given.

"And he (little horn) shall speak (great) words against the Most High, and shall wear all the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." Dan. vii. 25.

History demonstrates that this holy city has been trodden down by the Gentiles, under the control of the great apostacy, for, at least, 1260 years; hence the prophetic days must synchronize with, or be 1260 years long; hence the witnesses prophesy in sackcloth 1260 years, consequently, no two persons; especially as the sackcloth period is only a part of their lives as we shall attempt to prove.

Their prophesying in sackcloth covers a space of 1260 years. "Clothed in sackcloth." The costume of mourning and distress. Sackcloth; the symbol of the state of the witnesses, denotes severe persecution which was to continue through the period.

Verse 4. "These (the two witnesses) are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks (lamp-stands) standing before the God of the earth."

The explanation must have been understood, since no question was asked; as if he had said to John, that you may know the names of these witnesses, I will give you their symbols—two olive trees, and two lamp-stands, standing before the God of the earth.

John had been told by Christ (Rev. i. 20) that lamp-stands were churches, "and the seven lamp-stands are the seven churches." He now tells John that the witnesses are lamp-stands. If, then, the witnesses are lamp-stands, and the lamp-stands churches, the witnesses are churches. But the witnesses are olive trees, therefore the olive trees are churches also. By church is meant a congregation of believers, witnesses are congregations of believers, those that are called in Dan. vii. 25, "Saints of the Most High," living stones, (each stone, in itself a living temple) in God's living temple, built into it, and upon Christ its living foundation.

Christ's witnesses being churches, or congregations of believers, are as old as the church itself, and, therefore, must be a succession of saints, necessary to supply the removals by death. That churches are witnesses will appear from the meaning of the term, and from its Scripture use.

A witness is one that gives testimony to any thing. Personal knowledge is a necessary element; also, position and competency. Hearsay, and think so, are not testimony.

These witnesses stand before the God of the earth; and, consequently, are worshippers in his temple, though downtrodden by a power bearing rule in the same temple—God's visible ecclesia.

The Bible use of the term witness is that which concerns us.

How was it used in the Old Testament? How did the apostles use it? How did Christ use it at his first advent? How did he use it in his Revelations to John?

These usages will fully decide the point in question; for, if the head of the church, which, is his body bride, and temple, has always regarded the church, collectively, and her members, individually, as witnesses, he does the same in Rev. xi.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE.

High as the name of Rothschild stands in the esteem of the Jewish community it does not occupy the first place. That is reserved for Sir Moses Montefiore, who is loved and venerated by Jews of every clime. Nor is this feeling undeserved. His life has been one of self-sacrifice; his money, his time, and his energies, have been unreservedly consecrated to the welfare of his people, and their debt of gratitude to him is beyond computation. The cry of suffering has never failed to awaken a response in his breast, and though that cry might be uttered by men thousands of miles away, this grand old man, regardless of personal ease and comfort, undeterred by considerations of danger, has repeatedly risked his life that he might personally aid in alleviating their affliction. Not without reasons does the Jew, whether he live under Africa's tropical sun, among the snow and ice of Russia, or in the genial climate of Asia Minor pronounce a benediction at the mention of the name of Montefiore.

The Montefiores are of Italian descent and possess considerable wealth. The subject of our sketch is nearly a centenarian, having been born October 24, 1784. He was united in marriage in the year 1812 to the daughter of Mr. L. B. Cohen, and for more than half a century that lady was his constant companion, sharing his anxieties, his journeys, his fatigues, and his triumphs. He loved her with a devotion rare in these days, and she gave him not only the ardent affection of a true wife, but cordially sympathized with him in the dominating principle of his life. To her he confided his hopes and plans, and from her he received wise counsel and encouragement, and when she died in 1862 he grieved as only great minds can grieve. He erected over her remains a monument the fac-simile of that erected in memory of Rachel "in the way of Ephrath which is Bethlehem;" he endowed a scholarship in her name at the Jews' Free School, and gave other generous testimony of his regret in the way she would herself have chosen.

Christians as well as Jews have testified to the noble qualities of this eminent philanthropist. In the year 1837 he held the high and honorable position of High Sheriff of London. It was during his term of office that Queen Victoria paid a visit to the city and was entertained at the Guildhall, and on that occasion the honor of knighthood was conferred upon him. A few years later, royal letters were issued permitting him to add to his coat of arms a distinction reserved for peers, and a short time afterward he was made a baronet.

The Jews of Palestine have been the especial objects of Sir Moses Montefiore's solicitude. He heard many accounts of their miserable condition and had given liberally for their relief. But in 1827 he resolved to visit them and see for himself if anything could be done to ameliorate their lot. With his wife he journeyed to the Holy Land remained there for several months. He found the Jewish colony little else than a collection of paupers spending their time in the study of the Talmud and subsisting on the bounty of their co-religionists in Europe. He exerted himself to arouse them from their apathy and induce them to enter upon some occupation that would make them independent. Six of the most intelligent boys he carried back with him to England, where he had them taught the art of cotton spinning, and then sent them back to Palestine with looms and machinery to introduce the manufacture. The effort failed, but Sir Moses though disappointed was not discouraged, and still continued in other channels his efforts on their behalf.

A memorable journey was that Sir Moses undertook to Damascus in 1840. A Roman Catholic priest had suddenly disappeared from Damascus and the Jews were accused of having murdered him. Eight Jews were arrested and were subjected to torture of the most revolting character to force a confession of guilt from them. One or two of them in their indescribable agony made a confession, but an investigation of their statements showed they were innocent, and had only accused themselves in the hope that they might be killed outright instead of enduring further suffering. Then sixty-four Jewish infants were seized, carried away from their mothers and kept on scanty fare, with the expectation that maternal love might wring from the distressed parents a confession. But it was useless, the Jews were innocent, and the authorities were devising other ingenious methods of torture when Sir Moses Montefiore arrived in company with the distinguished French Jew M. Cremieux, and by personal intercession induced the Pasha of Egypt to put an end to the horrible persecution. It was at the farewell meeting held in London before Sir Moses Montefiore's departure on this mission that the sainted Baptist Noel delivered his famous speech on the Jewish question.

From Alexandria the philanthropist went to Constantinople, where he had an audience with the Sultan of Turkey, and secured for the Jews of that country many concessions previously denied them. Only two years afterward Montefiore was again in Palestine. A terrible epidemic had broken out and the death rate was appalling. Sir Montefiore found his brethren in abject misery without hospital or medical attendance. He immediately established a dispensary in Jerusalem with a supply of medicines, employed a physician and nurses to attend to the sick, and defrayed the entire cost out of his own pocket for three years until the health of the community was restored.

The year 1846 found Sir Moses Montefiore and his wife enduring the rigor of a Russian winter in St. Petersburg. As usual, it was the sufferings of his people that caused the journey. The semi-barbarous Czar Nicholas was engaged in persecuting the Jews, and had issued an edict the effect of which would have been fatal to thousands of them, and would have consigned many thousands besides to abject poverty. Sir Moses interceded for them, and the charm of his manner, his disinterested sympathy, and his appeals to the Czar's clemency, procured a withdrawal of the edict. On his way back to England he visited the Jewish settlements in several countries, and cheered them by his sympathy and counsel.

In 1858 the Mortara case, which has become historic, agitated the Jewish community. The Mortaras were a Jewish family living at Bologna, then under the misgovernment of the Pope. They had a Roman Catholic nurse girl who, incited by the priests, surreptitiously baptized one of the children who was only one year old. When she gave the information to the priests they obtained a company of soldiers from the Pope and carried off the infant to a convent. The distress of the parents may be imagined, and Montefiore went to Rome to plead with the Pope for the restoration of the child. Pio Nono refused to see him, and his chief minister, Cardinal Antonelli, gave a curt refusal to his petition.

In October, 1863, at the age of seventy-nine, Sir Moses Montefiore undertook a journey to Morocco. The Spanish collector of the Port of Saffi had died suddenly, and the authorities had made the fact of his servant being a Jew a pretext for persecuting the Jews on the charge of having murdered him. Four Jews were arrested, two of them were hanged up by the feet, head downward, and beaten almost to death, then they were placed naked in casks, through the staves of which sharp nails projected, and the casks were rolled along the roads. Then they were taken out and their sufferings ended with a thrust from a dagger. The other two Jews remained in prison and it was for their release that the venerable man undertook to plead. He was so far successful as to obtain an order liberating them, but was unable to have the inhuman monsters punished who had committed the outrage. Still later, in 1870 and again in 1875, Sir Moses Montefiore visited the East on missions of mercy, the former on behalf of the Roumelian Jews and the latter for the benefit of the Jews in Palestine. In both cases he was able to render them substantial benefits.

The hope of a Jewish empire in Palestine has all through his life been ardently cherished by Sir Moses Montefiore. He firmly believes in the ultimate return of the Jews to their own land, and only a short time ago he said, with much emphasis, "Jerusalem is destined to become the seat of a Jewish empire. It is the dream of my life, which will be fulfilled when I am no more." He has purchased extensive plots of ground in Jerusalem, and last year it was announced that he had given orders to prepare for cultivation the land in the front of what are known as the Judah Touro houses in Jerusalem. The rocks will be removed, terraces built all along, as it used to be in the time of King Solomon, and divided into twenty-two partitions, so that every inmate of the Touro houses will have an opportunity of cultivating the land, which will produce the necessary vegetables, etc., for the maintenance of himself and family. Sir Moses has also caused a very large cistern to be constructed in the centre of the field, which will secure a full supply of water for all of them. In his little book which records his seventh visit to Palestine, in 1875, he pleaded with his co-religionists to assist their brethren in Palestine, beginning, "in the first instance, with the building of houses in Jerusalem," and shows his impatient earnestness by adding, "Commence at once, begin the work this day if you can."

We trust, at no very distant period, that the Jews will be restored to the land of their fathers; when "the Lord shall comfort Zion, when he will comfort all her waste places, and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord. Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." We believe, according to the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, that the "Times of the Gentiles," during which the "treading down of Jerusalem" is to continue, are nearing their completion. They were to last for 2520 years, which, if they commenced, as is generally believed, in Nebuchadnezzar's era, will end about 1893; and that the political restoration of many Jews to Jerusalem and the rebuilding of their temple will commence about seven years before the end of those 2520 years, that is to say, about 1886.

Sir Moses has already promoted the return of many Jews to Palestine, and he may live to witness their completed restoration, and the Second Advent of Christ, who is, though they know him not at his first coming, the true Messiah for whose coming the Jews look according to the Old Testament.

Second only in Sir Moses Montefiore's mind to the re-establishment of the Jews at Jerusalem, and, indeed, forming part of that scheme, is the Jewish College, close to the baronet's residence, and attached to the synagogue. It provides for ten aged Hebrews proved and learned in Jewish laws and Talmudic literature.

So vigorous is Sir Moses Montefiore that even now his powers of conversation show no signs of falling off, and his political opinions are as clearly defined as ever. He now spends most of his time at East Cliff Lodge, Ramsgate. Few men have borne the weight of years so well as Sir Moses Montefiore. Gifted by nature with a tall and massive frame, he has preserved health and vigor far beyond the allotted term of human life. His kindly outward aspect reveals the inner man. So large hearted is his charity toward the suffering of all races and all creeds that, it is said, no man ever sought help at East Cliff and was denied. Albeit the charity of Sir Moses is dispensed without regard to age, sex, religion, or country, he remains a Hebrew of the Hebrews. So powerful even over generous souls and highly cultivated intellects are the influences of association and early education that even this noble old man, whose life has been spent in going about doing good, fails to see in Jesus of Nazareth him of whom Moses and the prophets did write. It is also to be feared that the cruelty and injustice perpetrated by men calling themselves Christians may have had something to do with prejudicing him against the doctrines of Christianity, toward which, if he rightly understood them, his gentleness and charity would have been attracted.

Sententious.

Where the will is ready the feet are light.

Talking comes by nature, silence by understanding.

Constantly choose rather to want less than to have more.

He who best knows Christ is the best Christian.

Earthly things must remind us of heavenly. We must translate the book of nature into the book of grace.—Thomas Taylor.

The grand essentials to human happiness are something to do, something to hope for, and something to love.

Think for thyself—one good idea,
But known to be thine own,
Is better than a thousand gleaned
From fields by others sown.
—Bliss.

If your wish success make perseverance your bosom friend, experience your elder brother, and hope your guardian.

Keep doing, always doing. Wishing, dreaming, intending, murmuring, talking, sighing, and repining, are idle and profitless employments.

What will it matter, by and by,
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light—
Under a grey, or a golden sky,
When I look back on it, by and by?

He who betrays another's secret because he has quarreled with him, was never worthy of the name of friend; a breach of kindness will not justify a breach of trust.

Art thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain
In sorrow sweetest things will grow
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and thou shalt have sun,
When clouds their perfect work have done.

The Bible tells us of the streams, that it may allure us to the fountain; it tells us of the past acts of God's faithful love, that we may be led to set our hope on God, and to feel assured that he who hath helped will help, and that he who hath loved will love unto the end.

A man may talk virtuously, but if he lives in secret an impure life his unconscious influence for evil will destroy the effect of his words. Character influences independently of its professions, and this influence of character is the heaviest weight in the scale of life.

That man may breathe, but never lives,
Who much receives, but nothing gives;
Whom none can love, whom none can thank
Creation's blot, creation's blank.
But he that marks, from day to day,
In generous acts, his radiant way,
Treads the same path the Savior trod,
The path to glory and to God.

A HALF-FINISHED WEDDING.

The young people of Cincinnati are excited over a promised wedding that didn't take place. The young man and young woman had known each other from childhood, and were prominent in society circles. The wedding guests were assembled, and the loving couple were on the floor. The minister propounded the usual questions to the bride as to whether she would take the man for her husband, etc., when, much to the surprise of all present, she answered, "No." Thinking he misunderstood her, the minister asked the question again, and again she answered, "No." This stopped the ceremony, and the story came out. The young man, addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, had promised reform if the lady would consent to marry him, and had signed the pledge. He had been on trial for months, but, as the bride turned to him as they stood side by side before the minister, she caught the odor of whisky on his breath, and detected signs of incipient intoxication. She closed the extraordinary scene by stating that she could not trust her future to a man who had broken a promise so solemnly made. Expostulations and entreaties were all in vain. The wedding did not take place.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Wherever lies the path of duty, wherever you may be most useful, there the Almighty will make you the most happy. Happiness is not the offspring and growth of indolent repose in this world: self-denying exertion is necessary to its production. The imagination of a state where everything will be to our taste is pure folly. We must be content to take our share in the ills of life, and look for our chief happiness in this world from seeking to do our duty.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Mar. 22, 1882.

THANKS to Br. H. Heyen for late London papers.

THE first number of a new paper entitled The Christian Helper has come to hand. It is published by Eld. H. G. McCulloch & Son, Odebolt, Iowa, and contains some very good practical articles.

WE acknowledge the receipt of a package of garden seeds from James W. Wilson, Austin, Illinois. He is a grower and dealer in choice new seed, vegetables and agricultural specialties. Many thanks for the favor.

OUR next paper will be delayed till April 5. After having paid our indebtedness it will tax our means to the utmost to issue four numbers each month without falling behind in our expenses. We hope the day will soon come when our list will make the paper self-sustaining without extra relief—a position not yet attained although we slowly approximate it year by year. Personally we will do all we can for our much loved paper, and invite our friends, who can spare some means, to aid us in heralding the coming kingdom.

THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL.

"Irrepressible conflicts" are not settled by diplomacy but by the sword. The horrors of slavery culminated in the horrors of war. There are other questions in the Old World that Conferences of Great Powers will never solve. The final decision will be by the arbitrament of the sword. The great question of our age is the Oriental Question. There are some others of moment—the more or less remote connection with this. Like the finger-script on the wall the indications of impending revolution are significant and not particularly difficult of interpretation if read in the light of prophecy. The Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin of our times is thus written in political hieroglyphics. The feet and toes of the Great Image are doomed. We extract from an exchange: "The Irish question, the crisis in Egypt, the Herzegovinian revolt, the uproar in Germany, the Nihilistic question in Russia, and the French cabinet question are the special topics of interest in the old world at the present time. Before the people finish discussing all these, there will probably be some change in the map of Europe."

THE REVOLT.

H. V. REED.

It must be evident to the most casual observer that men of piety and learning are rapidly coming to the front, and openly protesting against the doctrine of eternal misery. The fear of being crucified, of being excommunicated, and of being legislated out of heaven no longer deter them from investigating this question. There have been earnest honest men in all of the "leading" denominations who have openly, for many years, opposed the doctrine; some of these have been tried for heresy, found guilty, and cast out, while others have maintained their silence—and their position.

But the time has now come when a fair, candid investigation is demanded, by all who love truth more than dogma, and Christ more than human opinion.

We are glad of this state of things. There is nothing in the character of God which demands the sufferings of finite beings; there is nothing in the plan of redemption which necessitates the eternal duration of evil, and there is nothing in the nature of man or of the soul requiring endless existence in torment. On the contrary, the love of God as a loving Father, toward the race, the sweet spirit of pardon and sacrifice breathed out in the beautiful life of Christ, and the whole drift of the gospel of promise and prophecy forbids a conclusion so gloomy and terrible.

The descriptions of the final state are such as to convey to the mind the idea of a complete cessation of all pain and the triumph of good over evil. The eternal state is represented as a world wherein there shall be no crying, no pain, and no more death. This state of things can obtain only in one of two ways. Either the sinner will wholly die out along with all that is perishable, and as a part of the curse, or a reconciliation between God and the sinner will be consummated in Christ our Lord. It is clear that sin and death came into existence after our world was created, and it seems that this state of things will continue during all the ages of discipline even until the eternal state is ushered in.

But it must appear paradoxical to argue that sin and pain shall exist forever when it is admitted that they came into existence this side of the world's creation. Now to have the results of the curse carried over into the new or eternal state is admitting that sin outlives the redemption in Christ.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." The divine historian says nothing about the creation of hell, but on the contrary he states that all was good! Sin, pain and death, are not mentioned in connection with the creation of the world. But after man revolted, we have all the terms in the catalogue of sin coming into force. The flaming sword, death and the grave, encircle the path of man. But the second Adam lifts the gloom from the ages and points to the eternal consummation of His blessed reign where there shall be no more pain, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more death. For the FORMER THINGS are passed away, and he that sat upon the throne said: Behold, I make all things new." See Rev. xx. 12-15; xxi. 1-5.

Before the curse came upon our world there was no pain nor death. When the curse is removed and the world shall be again blessed, all sin and sighing together with death and hell shall be no more. As there was no hell before the curse neither shall there be when the curse is removed. No system of reasoning nor theological mysteries can transfer sin, death and hell over into the eternal state. They are bounded by the scenes of the curse, and will forever cease when the "former things" give place to the joyous song of men and angels. "And I heard the WHOLE CREATION of the heaven and the earth and underneath the earth, and of the sea, and all that is in them, saying: To him who sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb, be the blessing, and the honor, and the glory, and the power forever and ever." Rev v. 13. (Wakefield).

It is well then, that men, imbued with the love of God, should grasp the beatific vision and proclaim that message which will bring a final end to sin and evil. Endless existence in torment, either mental or physical, can in no way contribute to the happiness of the redeemed, nor to the glory of God. Hence all who cannot be reached by the law of love will be included among the former things which give place to the eternal verities of that world where there is no death.

We are pleased to note that many distinguished clergymen in England and America are in sympathy with this view of divine mercy, which removes a black stain from the character of our Father, and enables men to see that it is the goodness of God which leadeth to repentance!

Editor Restitution:

Please suffer the notice of our yearly communion to appear in your columns for the benefit of many of our brethren who are interested in the return of the Lord. While many brethren are watching me in regard to the yearly observance, they seem to have lost sight of the weekly communion, and so neglect it entirely—observing it neither weekly, monthly, quarterly nor yearly. I have baptized twenty-eight this winter and have the promise of a few subscribers soon. May the Lord bless and keep you is my prayer.

Our annual meeting on the anniversary of our Lord's death comes this year, 1882, Apr. 2, at eight o'clock, P. M. The Lord permitting that event will be celebrated at my home, three and one-half miles east of Galesburg, Kan., at the day and hour above specified.

Friends of our Redeemer who find it desirable to unite with us on this occasion will be welcome.

A REMARKABLE ARTICLE.

ROME, March 20.—The Nuova Antologia publishes a remarkable article by the secretary of the committee of the general staff, urging the prompt completion of the military organization, and the alliance of Italy with Germany and Austria against a probable France-Russian alliance.

The destruction caused by the floods in the Lower Mississippi is frightful indeed. The following extracts from exchanges will convey some idea of the sad state of affairs:

Those who have not fully informed themselves of the calamity inflicted upon certain States that border on the Mississippi river, have no correct conception of the immense loss that will be sustained from the effects of the present disastrous overflow. In an interview with a reporter the other day, Colonel Edward Richardson, of Mississippi, the richest man in the South, and the owner of over twenty sugar and cotton plantations, said that he regarded the overflow as likely to prove more calamitous in its effects upon these portions of the South than the war, not only in the destruction of property and the disorganization of labor, but in the widespread suffering which must result. He did not think the trouble had yet reached its culmination. All the levees above Vicksburg are doomed, and the entire territory of the bottom lands, which produces about six hundred bales of cotton annually, will yet be flooded, he thinks. A large portion is already under water, and the rest soon will be.

The area under water reaches 6,000 square miles. In a general way the basin affected is from thirty to forty miles wide and 200 miles long. These figures were obtained from State officers at Vicksburg, who base their estimate on figures of the surveys. They are not the result of guesswork by any means, but can be relied upon. Some idea of the density of the population in this basin may be gained from the statement that Cohoma, Bolivar, and Washington counties, which lie in the western portion of the submerged district, have respectively 26,000, 16,000, and 28,000 people. Tunica, Issaquena, Sharkey, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Quitman are not so populous. Still, all of them are largely populated.

A Storm on the Sun.

After a time of comparative quiet another storm has burst upon the sun. Two or three weeks ago the great disk of the luminary shone in the telescope with hardly a spot of a variation anywhere in brilliancy except the ordinary mottling, which sometimes appears strikingly suggestive of a mass of tremendous flames, on the tops of which the spectator is looking down. Then a spot of small size appeared and moved slowly across the disk. Presently a congeries of little spots broke forth like an eruption, surrounded by faculæ in glowing waves and torrents banks. In a day or two the outlines of a large spot could be seen coming around the eastern limb of the sun. It seemed to grow as it advanced. In a short time a white filament pushed its way across the very centre of the spot, looking like a snow bridge over a dark chasm, and then the spot split in two and slowly disappeared. Now the eastern edge of the disk began to be crowded with on-coming spots. The wrinkled lines of faculæ showed where the surface was agitated, and where new spots were likely to break forth at any moment. They came in groups, and one huge spot with a dark central chasm capacious enough to swallow the earth seemed to be their leader. Cloudy days intervening interrupted the sight, but with every return of sunshiny weather the telescope revealed new spots and new groups, until now the sun is spotted like a leopard. The sight with a magnifying power low enough to show the whole disk at once is wonderful. The spots are of all sizes, from great caverns in whose dusk purple depths the eye fancies it can detect strange forms, mysterious creations of the sun, to little specks that but for their congregating in the neighborhood of the larger spots would hardly be noticed. It is a beautiful spectacle, and only systematic observations and measurements can convince the beholder that he is witnessing such a battle of elemental forces as this earth has never behold since it hardened from a rotund mass of fiery gases into a firm and habitable globe. A little careful watching and calculation soon show the real meaning of what the telescope reveals. It is the heaving and lashing and swirling of a storm not a storm in any sense in which we understand the word from our experience here on the earth, but a storm born, probably, in the interior of the sun itself, and exercising its fearful energy upon a belt of glowing gases. But those gases are in the most unheard-of and marvellous condition. Among them are many whose names are familiar to students of chemistry, and which in our laboratories are airy things that reveal themselves only by their effects. In the sun they are heated up to such a degree that no earthly chemist would recognize them, at least not by their conduct, for in that unparalleled furnace they are freed from many of the laws which chemistry imposes upon them here. And more wonderful yet, men of science tell us, so tremendous is the pressure to which they are subjected in that heart and centre of gravitation that, though they are gases still they must resemble in their mechanical behavior rather ice or honey than the airy substances which we know under their names. These gases, continually ascending or moving away from the centre, become partially cooled at what appears to us as the surface of the sun, and fall back in showers of heat-metallic rain! It is under such surroundings that the sun forms spots and from such that they are born.

Here is the most splendid field for discovery that is open to man in the physical universe. Science has learned a great deal about the sun since the first Hebrew had taught that it might be a habitable globe, but yet it has hardly reached the threshold of knowledge in this direction. It has learned that the existence of life upon our globe depends upon the sun, and that any considerable change, one way or the other, in the amount of heat and light with which the sun supplies us would extinguish the little torch of human existence and end the history of our race. It has learned that the sun is not the clear, calm, unspotted, and undisturbed luminary that it was supposed to be before the telescope and the spectroscope were invented, but that it is, on the contrary, the scene of the most tremendous commotion, the sport of forces mighty enough to dissipate the earth in a puff of fiery vapor. But whence the sun derives its energy, what its composition is, how long it will continue to supply vitality to the system, whether it is made-going or is likely to undergo any changes that may bring danger to the earth, are all questions upon which more light is needed before they can be satisfactorily and finally answered. Anybody who wishes to assist in this search for knowledge can easily and cheaply furnish himself with the necessary means. Telescopes are no longer very costly instruments. A good one, made to order by a responsible optician, and furnished with all the needful necessaries, can be purchased for a half or even a quarter of the price of a grand piano. Even if no discoveries are made with it, it will give no end of instruction and amusement. Observations made by persons not conversant with the processes of astronomical science are not without value, provided they are carefully and accurately made and recorded. The astronomers are always glad to get such records, and they know how to put them to good use.

The present sunspot period is now at its height. It will in a few months begin to diminish, and then some eleven years must elapse before another maximum is reached. It is to be hoped that the present opportunity of obtaining more accurate knowledge of the sun will not be neglected. Everybody who owns a telescope or a spectroscope can help. Some of the best work ever done in astronomy has been that of amateurs. In England this is better understood than in this country. There astronomy is the favorite study of many clergymen, who own fine telescopes and write valuable papers for the scientific societies. In the United States we have clearer skies than the English and a more favorable latitude. America ought to be the country of astronomers, and the secret of the sunstorms should be discovered here.—N. Y. Sun, March 13.

The Pharaoh of the Exodus.

Dear Sir: I see in the Messenger for January an extract from the Christian World, stating that Rameses II., was the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites. Perhaps it may interest your readers to know that there is nothing but surmise in favor of this statement. It is merely assumed that because no mention is made in Judges of the conquests of Syria by Rameses and his father, Seti I., therefore these conquests must have taken place before the Israelites settled in Palestine.

Rameses II. died B. C. 1203, while our Bible chronology makes the date of the Exodus B. C. 1491. The dynasty to which Rameses belonged had been long settled on the throne, so that no new king arose at that period.

The following extracts from the Graphic of 2d February, 1878, give the ascertained facts about this matter:—

Amasis I. heads the great eighteenth dynasty, and in his sixth year forced Avaris, the last and most formidable stronghold of the Hyksos or shepherd kings, who had domineered over Egypt during the 511 years of the so-called middle empire, to capitulate. He thus became the founder of the new empire. He ruled after this event twenty-five years and four months. His son and successor, Amenophis I., reigned twenty years and seven months. Thothmes I. reigned thirteen years, and was succeeded by his son Thothmes II.

Thothmes II. was a fainéant king, and reigned but a year and three-quarters. His name and reign have both dropped out of the Greek list though traces remain that Manetho recorded both. According to Canon Cook, the editor of the Speaker's Commentary on the Bible, and one or two other Egyptologers, this was the Pharaoh of the Exodus.

The same identification was made 2000 years ago on the authority of Heliopolitan tradition by the Greco-Egyptian chronicler Artapanus, who calls the king Chenephres, which is a monumental name of Thothmes II.

Thothmes II. was succeeded by his wife and sister Hatasu, as queen of Upper Egypt, and by his younger brother, Thothmes III. the Great, who carried his conquests from the sources of the Nile to the confines of India. These facts bear out the narrative in Exodus in a most remarkable manner. The Pharaohs with whom Moses had to deal reigned at Heliopolis, or On, within an easy walk of the present Cairo, not at Thebes, as the later kings did. They had just reconquered the country from an alien dynasty coming from Palestine, and friends of the Israelites. The new king "who knew not Joseph" would seem to indicate a complete change of dynasty, and new laws, and knowing, as we do, the number of the children of Israel, the words of Ex. i. 9, distinctly indicates a weak state, still fearful of attack from powerful enemies, and would be wholly inappropriate if spoken by a ruler of the whole empire of Egypt.

Moses was eighty years old when he stood before Pharaoh, and as there are only sixty five years from the accession of Amasis I. to the accession of Thothmes II., the Pharaoh who knew not Joseph would most likely be one of the first leaders of the revolt against the shepherd kings, and ruling only over a part of Lower Egypt. Knowing that the Israelites were protected by these kings, and would therefore be upon certain friends of the new dynasty, the treatment of them by the Egyptians, and the statement of the relative number of the two races, becomes intelligible; such a statement would be utterly false if made at any later date. The immediate successor of Thothmes II. conquered nearly the whole of the then known world, and some of his conquests are commemorated on the Obelisk now standing on the Thames Embankment.

He ascended the throne May 7, 1515 B. C., and as the Egyptian throne was never supposed to be vacant, each monarch dated his reign from the death of his predecessor, the night between May 6 and 7, 1516 B. C., would be the night the Israelites crossed the Red Sea.

The Bible chronology makes the date of the Exodus 1491 B. C., but as the Jewish year was inexact, the above date is doubtless the correct one.—James Dundas, in Glasgow Mercury.

Jews In Russia.

Peter the Great was the first to admit Jews into Russia. They emigrated to that country in large numbers, and at first were treated fairly. Christian prejudice was soon aroused, and in 1743 the Empress Elizabeth expelled 35,000. They were readmitted by the Empress Catherine.

Until the time of the Emperor Alexander I., in whom they found a friend, they were held in the most abject condition, and denied all the more important privileges of citizens. Alexander granted them full liberty of trade and commerce.

The decrees of Alexander were cancelled by his successor, Nicholas, and since that time, in spite of the schema of 1835, which contemplated the improvement of their condition, and the extension of their liberties, and occasional and intermittent favors of a subsequent date, the Jews have had a hard fate in Russia.

In Poland they found a home at a much earlier date. As early as the fourteenth century they were in high favor in court, a Jewish maiden of great beauty having won the affections of Casimir the Great, and for many years the whole trade of the country was in their hands.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries they had fallen into distavor, and they gradually sank into a condition of deplorable ignorance and most abject poverty. To this day the Polish Jew, in spite of admitted improvement in late years, is the meanest in Europe, one of the most wretched specimens of existing humanity.

Up to the time of Nicholas, Jews were not allowed to possess land, to give evidence in civil suits, to have synagogues, or to inhabit the holy cities of Kiew and Moscow. They were obliged to wear a particular dress so that their nationality could not be mistaken, and out of every Jewish family one child was always taken by the state to be educated as a Christian at his parents' cost. Some of their disabilities have since been removed. The Jews have synagogues, hire school and his municipal privileges; and he is allowed to celebrate the festivals of his church with public displays. But he is not yet in the enjoyment of equal right with the native population as to him. He holds no land, but he transacts trades successfully, and it is estimated that two thirds of the trade of the Southern States and at least one third of that of the North is in Jewish hands.

Causes of the Success of the Jews.

Those who are in doubt as to the causes and specific traits that have contributed to the pecuniary success of the Jewish race, may at the same time solve a problem and learn a lesson from the manner in which the Jews of this city have met and conquered the difficulties raised by the Russian persecution, and the consequent exodus of the race from Russia.

It is but a few weeks since the detailed facts of the persecution were made public by refugees arriving in this country, after losing nearly everything that is valuable in life. Vague and general reports of the condition of affairs crept into the press some few months ago, but the bigotry, the barbaric cruelty, and the race prejudice that have actuated Russian mobs, the enormities practiced by them, the murder, arson, and outrage that have marked their footsteps, were not half told until the men who had suffered from them arrived to tell their own stories. Within the last few days, with silence and expedition, leading Jews in this city have perfected the organization of an Aid Society, intended to assist their suffering confreres in founding new homes in place of those razed by Russian bigotry, and taking a new start in life in a country where such persecutions are impossible.

The Russian Emigrant Aid Society proposes to raise $500,000 to meet the emergencies that have thus arisen, and a society that has obtained subscriptions of $250,000 or more within the last four or five days is likely to be successful in its purposes. All this has been done quietly, without angling for newspaper notoriety, and without any ostentatious display of oratory. The fund is to be employed not merely in relieving the wants of the destitute, but in developing schemes of colonization and providing homes and employment for refugees.

Already a successful colony has been established in Louisiana, and it may be assumed that of the 10,000 Jewish refugees who will arrive here penniless within the next few months, few, if any, will become a tax on the public through the ordinary methods applied to destitute emigrants. Homes and employment will be quietly found for them by the society, and they will settle anew without appealing to the public.—N. Y. Times.

THE PENTATEUCH.

One rarely reads a better short response to a destructive Biblical criticism than the answer of the Central Presbyterian to Prof. Robertson Smith. Against the assertion that the Pentateuch was written during, or after the Captivity, the writer refers to the fact that the Samaritan Pentateuch is a monumental and unanswerable objection to the theory. The Samaritans would not have received Leviticus and Deuteronomy from Ezra, being at that time, and for a long previous period, utterly hostile to the Jews. Their copy must necessarily have been much older than the captivity. The writer truly and amusingly says in illustration: "If the law was written before the disruption of the kingdom under Rehoboam, the fact is explained. If not until the days of Sanballat, how came it to be received by the Samaritans? If accepted by them from the Jews, it is well said, 'It would be something like the Irish accepting the Prayer Book of the Church of England at the hands of the Conservatives in England, with the explanation that it had been discovered in the Tower and was the work of St. Patrick.'"

Great consternation has been caused in Constantinople by a report that the Mosque of St. Sophia is in danger of collapsing; for there is a tradition among the Turks that the fall of this basilica will herald the dismemberment of the empire. The mosque was restored at great expense by the Sultan Abdul Medjid in 1849, under the superintendence of the Italian architect, Fossati. But the work does not appear to have been very well executed, for the grand dome, which is 120 feet in diameter and 250 feet high, is in imminent danger, according to the report of the architect who has been called in by the Minister of Public Works. It may fall in at any moment. In other respects the interior of the mosque is in a fairly good state of preservation. Among the many relics preserved in the Mosque of St. Sophia is the carpet upon which Mohammed was wont to pray, and close to the place where the carpet is suspended stands the pulpit from which the Khatib reads the Koran every Friday, leading in his hand a drawn sword as symbolic of St. Sophia having been conquered from the infidel. The walls of the mosque are covered with green slabs, on which verses from the Koran are engraved in letters of gold.

A Mr. W. T. Lynn writes to the London Standard: "The old idea that our Lord's passion and resurrection occurred in A. D. 30 is given in most Bibles which have dates in the margins; was founded on the traditional belief that he was about thirty-three years on earth combined with the idea that the date of his nativity was four years later than it really was (the actual date of that event being, in all probability, B. C. 4). The only real doubt about the date of the resurrection is whether it was A. D. 29 or 30. Now, astronomy tells us that the full moon, which would be Paschal in the former year, fell on a Saturday (April 7th) which is inconsistent with the circumstances narrated. But in A. D. 30 that full moon was on Thursday, April 6, on which day the Passover meal was eaten, and our Lord suffered the next day (in our reckoning,—the same day in the Jewish), on which other observances connected with the Passover were still to be kept. This, then, I have very little doubt, was the true year; and, if so, of course the first Easter was on April 9, on which day we shall this year celebrate its anniversary."

—BY WILEY JONES.—

SUBJECTS OF THE WORK.

"We have no hesitancy in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader."—The Restitution, Plymouth, Ind., May 14, 1879.

"It evinces a thoughtful and earnest spirit, deep reverence for the truth of God, very careful study of Holy Scripture, and uniform courtesy toward those who differ from him."—The New York Times, New York, Nov. 29, 1881.

"Everything is substantiated by copious quotations from the Scriptures—and to say that we have been interested merely, would not convey the idea. We have been deeply absorbed, for some of the topics are second to none in importance to us. . . . Any one not fully acquainted with the subject in all its bearings, and who wishes to see the question presented in a clear and convincing way, should buy this book."—The Rural Messenger, Petersburg, Va., May 17, 1879.

"I have read it diligently again and again, & it is next in point of excellence and doctrinal truths to the Book of books."—D. M. L., Mo.

"I do not know that I have ever seen from the pen of any modern writer, a plainer exhibit of the gospel of the kingdom and at the same time one to be more suited to general instruction on that subject, than that which brother Jones gives us in his book, 'The Gospel of the Kingdom,' advocated in a series of Ten Discourses."—H. M. S., Va.

It is elegantly bound in cloth, and printed in clear type on good paper, 208 pages. To obtain this book send $1.00 to

IT'S BETTER FARTHER ON.

When fervent hands relax my oar,
I keep with a smile life's ripple and
And breathe—it's better farther on.

THOUGHTS ON GOD.

BY E. F. WILLETT.

The greatest desire [illegible] to be Godly. Grace, or character [illegible]
Oh Lord, how near God is to [illegible] when [illegible] heart than words [illegible] all.
My prediction of how [illegible] I could be glad in the Lord.

Among the various and diverse objects by which we are surrounded—dogmas concerning doctrines, dogmas concerning trifles,—sometimes it is a relief to walk out under the open sky and look upward with these thoughts of the Psalmist in our minds. It lifts us away up beyond the petty squabbles of quibblers; it braces the mind, and opens the heart. The awful vastness of his works, the grandeur of the conceptions that originated them, the gigantic energy that drives them, the strength that supports them—these are thoughts beyond our complete comprehension.

It has become fashionable to doubt even the existence of the creative mind. Some of the noted scientists (so-called) have seen fit to write long works on nature, ignoring in the most systematic manner the idea of a constructor in the construction of the universe, and of course, the "act" must follow the example, for "to be out of the fashion is to be out of the world" with some people; and so they are like the silly daughters of the famous Vicar of Wakefield, who only could talk of "Shakespeare and the musical glasses" after their London visitors talked "Shakespeare and the musical glasses," and we, like the unfortunate vicar, will be compelled to hear and read for some time longer. I suppose, about the survival of the fittest, and evolution, etc. We will hear of the work without the worker, of the music but not the musician, of the magic but no credit to the wonder working hand.

Is it possible that men who write and talk in this manner have any idea of construction? Is it possible that they have ever tried to invent anything? One might think not, for the first principles of invention and construction necessitates that the whole of the subject be understood before even commencing the design. Is it a bridge? Then the foundation, the pier, the length, the weight, the strain, cost, and even the allowance for weather, must all be considered. Is it an engine? The same thing, all the minutest details, from the weight and diameter of the fly wheel to the shut of the slide valve. Everything that ever was registered in the patent office had, before even the invention was commenced, to be considered and designed, then executed.

Apart from construction or organization, there is no utility; materials do not arrange themselves. It is the easiest thing in the world to get them deranged, for their own wear and tear will do that, and to "keep things running" a constant, careful, thoughtful attention is necessary. This is the case more or less with every arrangement or construction of which I have any knowledge, from a wheelbarrow to a man-of-war ship, and from an apple-stall to the United States Government.

Now is anyone trying to convince us that the arrangement above us, beneath us, about us, whirling planets, circling suns, dashing comets, sparkling meteors, are whirling, circling, dashing, and sparkling, all in a haphazard sort of a way and never come to general grief? A runaway horse is no comparison to the speed at which we travel on this planet, but even a horse has more sense than an inanimate ball, yet none of us but what would feel uncomfortable in having any material connection to the runaway even at his comparative snail's pace.

Can you wonder then that some unfortunate people scare themselves and their simple neighbors with occasional rumors that the sun will burn all out one day, and leave us "out in the cold world," or that our planet will in a certain number of years, with a suitable number of cyphers, have exhausted its running force, and tumble us into the sun, or a comet will knock us into asteriods before we know anything at all about it?

Understanding as they do that the arrangement designed itself, arranged itself, and is now running itself, and at such a break neck speed, we cannot wonder at such expecting a break down or a burst up. A wild horse without a driver, a ship without a helmsman—an anarchy—no sane man would take in surance risks on such a thing. But there are none so blind as those that will not see, for where can we look and not behold design, adaptation, construction? He that planted the ear shall he not hear, and he that formed the eye shall he not see? Is it unfair to argue that the human eye shows us knowledge of the laws of optics, or that the ear is a trumpet hole, made apparent. Why everything that is shows by its very construction that it has reference to something outside of itself: the leaf to the flower, the flower to the bee—the bird to the berry, the berry to the bird; and a thousand other familiar illustrations. Creations that mingle and are yet distinct. Curious laces that are interwoven, delicate effects, wonderful complications, dazzling bewilderments, myriads of worlds, countless forms of life from insect to leviathan, and from the lichen to the vine and palm, but all the countless myriads are one.

Nature is our great "balance of power." A long list of destructive forces restrain, and neutralize each other. We are poised among a thousand deaths, but it is the equilibrium that saves us; it is the careful manipulation of the most complicated of all mechanisms that we depend on for daily life, but the dexterity of the Hand that holds is equal to the great task.

"BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS, AND SO FULFILL THE LAW OF CHRIST." Gal. vi. 2.

"Bear ye one another's burdens" says the apostle, yet presently he says, "Every man shall bear his own burden."

What is meant then by the former sentence? Is there any contradiction between the injunction and the statement which almost immediately follows? Certainly not.

The fact is that there are some burdens which we must bear alone, none can bear them with us or for us; on the other hand there are burdens which we need not bear alone, others beloved and trusted may help us to lighten their load. In many circumstances we cannot if we would, help those around us, and here we can fully understand the sad truth of every one bearing his own sorrow.

But we desire to consider here in what manner it is possible for us to aid another. The burden of infirmity, of errors in judgment, mistakes in conduct or weakness of any kind. Let us look back to the preceding verse. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness (not with anger, reproaches, not in the spirit that rejoices over another's fall, but in the spirit of meekness—why?) considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." We should deal tenderly with those overtaken in sin; remembering our own liability to fall, conscious of our own weakness. How should we ourselves like every little or every serious fault to be made the subject of satire or unjust criticism; let us then in view of this act towards all, as we desire all to act by us.

There are the burdens of sorrow, of sickness, of death; from these few are long exempt; sorrows which press more heavily on some than on others, which we may be able to lighten by wise, timely and kindly sympathy after the example of One who wept with those sorrowing ones at the grave of Lazarus. The burden of poverty which some of us may help our poorer brothers and sisters to bear, by helping them as God has blessed us; for if any one of us should be living at ease without ever even thinking of ministering to the needy, we may be sure that we are not fulfilling the apostle's injunction, nor following the example of him who though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty should be made rich. In all these ways and in many others we could bear each other's burdens. "A new commandment, said the Lord, I give unto you that ye love one another, as I have loved you." This then is the law of Christ; he gave it, and was himself the brightest example of its fulfillment. How then are we called upon to receive and obey this new commandment?

Hear the words of Paul, "Be ye kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgive you."

Hear the words of James. "If any of you do err from the truth and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins."

Hear what Peter says, "Have compassion one of another, be pitiful, be courteous, not rendering railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing knowing that ye are thereunto called that ye should inherit a blessing."

And lastly hear the beloved John, "If a man say, I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar—hereby we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of error."

A few reflections are we close. It is so common, so very common for those who call themselves friends, to condemn and reproach us for mistakes of judgment, telling us they do it for our good—they talk, they harangue, they wound or annoy in every possible way, and expect, positively expect, that we should be grateful for their interference: never is a greater mistake made than when one brother or sister-believer, brother, thus takes upon themselves that prerogative which belongs alone to Christ. Who art thou, says Paul, that judgest another, for we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. To him he all the gratitude, all the praise, for we he suffered, taking our nature upon him, for us he died, and rose triumphant from the grave, for us he now stands at the right hand of God making intercession for his people.

JANET CARLYLE.

The Rev.(?) Mr. Mills, of Chicago, and His New Departure.

BY J. F. WILCOX.

I regard the facts brought out by the new departure of the above named gentleman as a most frightful commentary upon the times. The world now knows him for a confessed Atheist. No God, no Christ, no Bible, no future life in his theology, and yet he is surprised and grieved that a majority of his congregation should request him to resign his pastorate! He believed that he could still remain and acceptably perform the functions of a Christian minister for a congregation of professed Christians. He expected to remain, and was taken by surprise at the effect his atheistic harangue produced. He evidently supposed his congregation were in the main with him, and cannot reconcile himself to his disappointment. And, indeed, as the vote on the question of his dismissal proved, he was right in the case of at least thirty-eight members, who voted nay.

We may therefore conclude that a professedly Christian church in Chicago has thirty-eight members, headed by their pastor, who are avowed Atheists. Besides this, since the prompt and definite action of his congregation has severed his connection with it, a movement is on foot to build him a ——— what shall we call it? Not church, certainly, for that is the building to which a congregation is supposed to come to worship; nor yet a temple, for even heathen erect temples to such gods as they have—well let us call it a Gymnasium, where he can without hindrance instruct the people that as God is dead and man has no more ground of hope for a future life than the brute, he can now conduct himself like a brute without fear. Indeed that as he has nothing higher now to live for, true wisdom demands the present gratification of appetite without restraint.

"Let appetite, my brethren, henceforth be your god. Eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

Is it any wonder that a land where such teachers abound should be filled with violence? That the multitude should think of nothing but money-making and money-spending? That utter disregard for the property and lives of others should prevail? That murders, suicides, robberies and every species of crime should multiply with such rapidity that it is impossible to build jails and gibbets fast enough to accommodate even the very small minority of criminals who are apprehended?

If ever a man deserved to be safely locked in an asylum for the insane, where his mad ravings would be harmless, as coming from a maniac, it is Rev. Mr. Mills, and Rev. George Chainy should keep him company, notwithstanding he shows a glimmer of reason in repudiating the title "Rev." since he has lost his "reverence."

We do hope kind heaven will spare Chicago the misfortune of the Rev. Progressive Mills in perpetuity as contemplated by the madman who proposes to erect a—what you call it—for his benefit.

A Song for Little May.

Have you heard the waters singing,
Little May,
Where the willows green are bending
O'er their way?
Do you know how low and sweet,
O'er the pebbles at their feet,
Are the words the waters repeat
Night and day?

Have you heard the rubies singing,
Little one,
When the rosy dawn is breaking,
When the alone?
Have you heard the wedding bee
In the blossomed orchard tree,
And the happy hum of bees
In the sun?

All the earth is full such
Little May
Such, and be
On the way.
Let their other voices fall
In thy heart with happy call
Praise the Lord, who loved all,
Night or day,
Little May.

"All Gone."

"I cannot understand" said a little boy, "what becomes of our sins when God takes them away.

"When you do a sum, Willie, and take a sponge and wipe your slate, what becomes of the figures?"

"O, I see now," he said, "they are all gone."

And so God says he will blot out our transgressions, and will not remember our sins. Isa. xliii. 25.

Have you ever watched the icicle as it formed? Have you noticed how it froze, one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more? If the water was clean, the icicle remained clear, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled: Just so our characters are formed. One little thought or feeling at a time adds to its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be deformity and wretchedness.

Honesty Rewarded.

George and Harry worked in the same shop; but as the working season was almost over, and there would be little work during the summer months, their employer informed them as they settled up on Saturday evening that he could only give one of them work hereafter. He said he was very sorry; but it was the best he could do. He told them both to come back Monday morning, and he would then decide on the one he wished to remain.

So the young men returned to their boarding house a good deal cast down; for work was scarce, and neither knew where he could obtain a situation if he was the one to leave.

That evening, as they counted over their week's wages, Harry said to his friend:

"Mr. Wilson has paid me a quarter of a dollar too much."

"So he has me," said George, as he looked at his.

"How could he have made the mistake?" said Harry.

"Oh! he was very busy when six o'clock came, and handling so much money, he was careless when he came to pay our trifle," said George, as he stuffed his into his pocket-book.

"Well," said Harry, "I am going to stop as I go to the post office, and hand the money to him."

"You are wonderful particular about a quarter," said George. "What does he care about that trifle? Why he would not come down to the door to it if he knew what you wanted; and I'm sure you worked hard enough to earn it."

But Harry called and handed his employer the money, who thanked him for returning it and went into the house. Mr. Wilson had paid them each a quarter too much to test their honesty.

So, when Monday morning came round, he seemed to have no great difficulty in determining which one to keep.

He chose Harry, and intrusted the shop to his care for a few months when he was away on business, and was so well pleased with his management, that when work commenced in the fall, he gave him the position of superintendent.

Five years afterward, Harry was Mr. Wilson's partner; and George worked in the same shop, but as a common laborer.—Methodist.

A Brave Little Daughter.

There is a very pretty story by Miss Strickland, in her "Queens of England," of a little girl who saved her father's life:

"It was the time of Queen Mary, and Lord Preston, the father of the child, was condemned to death for conspiring to bring back the exiled King James to the throne. Her name was Lady Catherine Graham, and she was only nine years old. The poor child was, during the trial of her father, left in the Queen's apartments at Windsor Castle.

The day after the condemnation of Lord Preston, the Queen found little Lady Catherine in St. George's gallery, gazing earnestly on the whole length picture of James II., which still remains there. Struck with the mournful expression of the young girl's face, Mary asked her hastily what she saw in that picture which made her look on it so particularly.

"I was thinking, said the innocent child, how hard it is that my father must die for loving yours."

The story goes that the Queen pondered in conscience by this artless reply, immediately signed the pardon of Lord Preston, and gave the father back to the child."

Macaulay tells of a poor sweetener who made a cathedral window entirely out of pieces of glass that his master had condemned and thrown away: but when completed it won the admiration of all. The master's hearted work was rejected and the window made by the unknown artist from condemned material was given the place of honor in the great cathedral. The wisdom of this world made its painted window of the wise, the learned, and the righteous, but the unknown Jesus of Nazareth became the architect of a new society. He rejected the noble and the wise, and chose the very material that the wisdom of this world had condemned and from the refuse of society he has taken up the fallen sons of men and set them, like diamonds, to sparkle forever in the diadem of his glory.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 31, 1881.

Dear Friends in America:

It is with a sad and aching heart that I now sit down to write my first letter from Jerusalem. I had anticipated much on my arrival at the renowned city, the only chosen place on earth where the God of heaven is to dwell among men forever, as Moses and the children of Israel sang after their deliverance from the Egyptians at the Red Sea: "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for me to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Exod. xv. 17. David says: "He brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." Psa. lxxviii. 54. Again the Psalmist says: "The Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation; this is my rest forever: here will I dwell, for I have desired it." Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14.

Yes, I had anticipated much; and who would not, in expectation of beholding the very place which the God of Israel had chosen for his sacred seat?

But the death of my beloved daughter has brought such a gloom over my mind, that I cannot realize, as I otherwise should, that I am now writing within the limits of that city, where the majesty of the God of heaven is to be enthroned to judge the nations of the earth in righteousness; but it is even so; here I am, a mourner instead of being joyful. I hoped that my darling Bertie would come to cheer me in my labors in this earthly sanctuary, as she always had in America. She has been as a guardian angel to me during the few short years of her life, and I had not realized how sad and desolate I should feel without her.

At first I thought it was impossible to be reconciled to the will of God, but he can do everything, as Job said; and in his own way he brings the will and affections into subjection to his will and purposes. As David was obliged to rise from weeping at a certain time, so did I find myself in a very peculiar situation; and I was obliged to rise up above all selfish feelings, and go about my business; and by the help of God I was enabled to forget for a time, measurably, my great loss and grief, and set my face towards Jerusalem.

I will relate a dream I had just before Bertie fell asleep. I thought I was in Boston.

She came to me and put her dear arms around my neck and said, "Father Dear," [Bertie was accustomed thus to speak,] and gave me a loving kiss. She then went from me. I tried to call her back, but she passed on, saying, "I cannot come." I sat down and wept; and such a feeling of desolation as came over me I had never experienced before.

I saw her room and the people assembled; and I began to ask—"Is this real, or a dream?" I said: "It must be a dream; I am not in Boston." I tried to awaken myself, and at last did awake; and was glad to find that it was a dream. But I could not shake off the impression it had made upon my mind. There was something about it so dreadful that I said, "I can never enter that room again."

What should I have done if I had not found a home with kind and sympathizing friends?

When our heavenly Father scourges severely, he always provides a shelter from the storm, or a healing balm for the wounds. No one in sorrow ever found kinder friends than I have found in Mr. and Mrs. Floyd. "A friend in need, is a friend indeed." They and Archer are with me now.

I must tell you a little about our journey up from Jaffa, and the location of my tenement. As I wrote, we left Jaffa the 27th of October, but not until 4 p. m. We came to Bubel Wady that night, where we stopped with a Jew, a friend of Mr. Floyd. Here we found a hearty welcome and nice beds. At four in the morning our carriage was ready and we started on for Jerusalem up and down, over the hills—some of which I preferred to walk over. Our journey was very interesting, as Mr. Floyd pointed out many places of which I had read much in the Bible. The place where the ark of the Lord rested at the house of Obed-edom, attracted my attention specially, and caused me to reflect upon the great changes that have taken place in this land since those days. Then there was a God in Israel, who dwelt between the cherubims upon the mercy seat; and notwithstanding he allowed his people to be smitten before their enemies, and the ark with its precious treasure to be carried into the Philistines' country, the God—Christ—that dwelt within it did not leave the mercy seat. Dagon, the heathen god of the Philistines, fell before the God of Israel. Uzzah for attempting to steady the ark with unhallowed hands, was struck dead by the power that dwelt within it.

This displeased David; and he was afraid of God that day, saying, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me? So David brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite." God was teaching David to observe and do his will.

The ark should not have been drawn by oxen or handled by any but Levites.

When David found the mistake he had made, and learned what the due order for seeking the Lord was—that none ought to carry the ark but the Levites, he assembled all Israel, and sanctified the priests, and at the second attempt brought the ark from Obed-edom's house to Jerusalem, and put it in the tent which he had pitched for it, amidst the rejoicings of the whole nation.

Then these mountains, hills, plains and valleys, echoed and re-echoed with the high praises of him who dwelt between the cherubims upon the mercy seat.

While the ark remained at the house of Obed-edom, the Lord blessed him and all that he had.

I have been at the place; but there is no ark there now; no voice from the mercy seat; no special blessing for any one: no God in Israel! I have traveled the same road, doubtless, over which the priests carried this Divine being in the ark, and before which David danced and the nation rejoiced; but the scene is greatly changed. David is not there nor any of the royal line of sons who were to sit upon its throne after him. No priests with their ark, no nation with its high praises. All is desolation.

But does David therefore want a man to sit upon his throne? Has the promise failed? No, it has not failed. There is one living, who, though "he died unto sin once," "being raised from the dead, dieth no more;" "and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." He has been anointed above his fellows, his predecessors, to sit upon David's throne; and though now absent in a far country to receive for himself this kingdom, he will return again; not to be carried up from Obed-edom's house in an ark, but to be hailed King of Kings and Lord of lords.

[It may be proper to call the reader's attention to a few facts concerning this ark of which Mrs. Davis speaks; and show how it came to be at Obed-edom's house.

When Israel first entered the promised land the tabernacle containing the ark was set up at Shiloh, where it remained over three hundred years, until the ark was taken out of the tabernacle and brought into the camp of Israel at Eben-ezer, when they were at war with the Philistines. Here the battle went against Israel; Hophni and Phinehas, the two sons of Eli, who was then judge in Israel were slain, and the ark of the Lord was taken.

These tidings caused the death of Eli. Phinehas' wife named her new born son "Ichabod," saying, "The glory is departed from Israel; for the ark of the Lord is taken;"—Ichabod signifying, "The glory is departed:" or, "Where is the glory?"

The Philistines carried the ark to Ashdod and set it by the side of their god Dagon. In the morning Dagon had fallen to the earth; and though set in his place again, on the second morning he was found upon the threshold of the house with both hands and his head cut off. Israel's God is determined to destroy all false gods. The people were also smitten with diseases, because of the ark. They removed it to Gath, and the disease followed.

Then it was carried to Ekron: and the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Israel to us to slay us and our people." The victors who took the ark in that battle at Eben-ezer, were the losers. The ark was a curse to the Philistines, who were perishing because of Israel's God among them. It is a singular fact that they did not attempt to destroy the ark nor the power that dwelt within it.

But after seven months the Philistines were obliged to give up their prize, and send the ark of God back to the people of God. A new cart was prepared; the ark placed upon it with presents to appease as they thought, the God of Israel. Two wild young heifers, with their calves shut up at home, were attached to the cart and turned loose to go where they might be inclined. The two milch kine, "lowing as they went," took the straight way to Beth-shemesh, some twelve or fifteen miles a little south of west from Jerusalem; where "fifty thousand and threescore and ten men" of Israel died for the rash act of looking into the ark. The people of Beth-shemesh, though at first rejoicing to see the ark, were now as glad to get rid of it as the Philistines had been; and "they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come down, and fetch it up to you. They did so; and there it remained at Kirjath-jearim, about eight miles from Jerusalem, until David attempted to bring it into the city, when upon the death of Uzzah, he turned it aside into the house of Obed-edom, the place that Mrs. Davis calls attention to, where it remained three months, while David was learning how to get it to the tent he had pitched for it in Jerusalem. He succeeded at last, as she has said; and it was a happy day for Israel when the Lord was brought into his true dwelling place.]*

We arrived at my new home in Jerusalem, about 9 p. m. I found a clean, quiet double house; pleasantly located in the New City of Jerusalem. I have much to write about this "New City" hereafter.

The English Vice Consul and his amiable sister, occupy the other tenement. The Russian church and gardens are on the opposite side of the street. I have three rooms; one is suitable for a small school. I could accommodate a small family. My rent is seventy dollars for one year, or, fourteen Arabic mouths, in advance.

[As all who have good maps of Jerusalem can see, the Russian buildings are situated upon the hill of Gareb, northwest of the present walls of Jerusalem but within the boundaries of the "New Jerusalem," as shown by Jeremiah xxxi. 38-40. Thus Mrs. Davis, though outside of the walls of the city, is within the boundaries of the New Jerusalem; and this she probably understands, for she calls it the "New City."]*

I have just returned from a walk to the Mount of Olives. A view of the city from this mountain is magnificent; I have never seen anything so grand before. It was a surprise to me, as I find that I had never formed any just conception of the city and its surroundings from anything that I had read or seen, not even from the splendid Cyclorama that was on exhibition in Boston in 1875, which I saw many times. Jerusalem is indeed, "beautiful for situation," and will soon be "the joy of the whole earth."

*The remarks in brackets were added by the editor of Age to Come Herald.

TEMPERANCE FACTS—Randolph Co., Miss., voted for prohibition about one year ago, since which time not one drop of whisky has been sold in our county—for any purpose—that I am aware of, and the place has been changed from a hell on earth to a paradise. While, at the first election, some men of respectability and good standing, opposed prohibition, now I do not believe there is one good citizen in the county who would vote for the return of whisky. Some said it would injure trade. But, instead of injuring trade it has increased it, and the whisky men are bound to acknowledge the fact.—Alabama Baptist.

NOW AND THEN.

T. E. ADAMS.

This world seems dark and drear.
So few that love the Lord,
Whose coming now is very near,
—So reads the sacred word.

Vain fashion's crowd sway
Has charmed and turned aside
The proud the foolish and the gay
To crowd the pathway wide.

Time flees—all things grow worse;
And few there that know
That coming judgment's dooming curse
Will lay the triflers low.

O, soon the time will come
When saints will rise and sing;
And praise our Savior—God's dear Son—
Our dear Redeemer—King.

A friendly voice is heard
Inviting those who stray—
Reform your ways, and love the word,
And hail the Lord's glad day.

LETTERS ON THE RESURRECTION. No. 2.

WM. C. TAYLOR.

Having shown in a previous paper the benefit of being in Christ Jesus, and the reward which will come to every faithful servant of the Prince of Life, we turn now for a moment to glance at the other side. We ask then: What will be lost by unfaithfulness, and how will that affect our relationship to Christ and judgment?

Our question is, Have faithful and unfaithful alike the same relationship to Christ in this age? Some believe that the saint and apostate are equally related to the Master till separated at the judgment seat. We are concerned for nothing but the truth, and in grave doubt that such a conclusion is truth we appeal for an answer to the word of God.

Read John xv. 1–7: "He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life." Rev. iii. 5.

"Little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John ii. 28.

"Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." 1 John iii. 6.

Let us consider what these passages teach as to the relationship of faithful and unfaithful to Christ. What lesson does the illustration of the vine teach us? When does the husbandman lop off the withered branches? Is it not when he sees life has become extinct, and all hope of their ever bearing fruit again is gone—when they are nothing of profit to him, and merely encumber and disfigure his tree? Is it not then I repeat that he judges the withered branch, and severs the dead from the living?

This may be called the natural process, and surely it affords a true illustration of the methods of the Divine husbandman. How clearly and forcibly this is bourne out by the language of John xv: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away." It seems plain this taking away occurs during the period of probation which is beyond doubt the time of bearing fruit. The reason given is unfruitfulness, and it will be well to remember that such a cause for cutting off could only apply to the fruit bearing season, and which, whether applied to man or tree, must lie within the period of natural life.

This same truth is clearly brought out in the second passage I have quoted. He will not blot out the names of those who overcome, but does this not imply that those who fail to overcome will lose their record in the book of life? Surely their names will not remain there when they leave the service of Christ and turn their backs upon the way and word of life. Surely when this last sad step is taken the withered branch is severed from the vine.

Next follows a passage which says, "Little children abide in him." This is followed by another which indicates very clearly that abiding in Christ is quite a voluntary matter resting entirely with the conduct of the individual. Now, I would ask: Why say "Little children abide in him," and why the repeated references about abiding in Christ which occur in John's first epistle, if it is impossible after being once in to get out of Christ till formally rejected at the judgment seat. The exhortations upon this point would have no force or application in such a case, and would be strangely inconsistent with the many warnings to "hold fast" and "abide" in Christ, which we find in the letters of the apostles, and when coupled with the fact that their most earnest desire and entreaty was that every believer would not only abide in Christ but labor diligently to strengthen his position in the Savior, shows clearly that there was not only danger of losing it, but that it could hardly ever be maintained but by constant care and watchfulness.

Surely in the light of the little we have said, we have arrived at no rash conclusion in believing that the teaching of the Word in respect to the rejectors of Christ at least in that they are no longer members of his body. Thus we find for the two classes—faithful and unfaithful—totally different relationships to Christ, and equally different destinies. The one, faithful to the Master they elected to serve, are in Christ and heirs of all things promised by God in his beloved Son. The other, rejectors and despisers of the Holy One have no longer any part in him.

This result is gained by a process of selection or judgment which has been going on steadily since the first stone of the heavenly temple was laid. "Many are called but few are chosen."

The bearing of these conclusions upon the character of the resurrection is very close and important. We have seen that the body of Christ contains all but one class, and that this result is attained by a process of judging similar to that which influences the husbandman in cleaning off the rotten and useless branches from his vines. Let us now, with these conclusions before us, trace the destiny of those in Christ, leaving in the meantime, the fate of the unfaithful for future consideration.

We have already adduced sufficient evidence to prove that they who are Christ's are heirs "according to the hope of eternal life." This is the free gift of God to them who believe through his Son Jesus Christ, for it is written, "This is the promise that he hath promised us—eternal life." 1 John ii. 25.

This then is the promise of God to the body of Christ. It is unconditional, it is unconnected with any trial, and cannot be affected by any rendering account of deeds done in body. It is simply and above all the promise of God to every individual in Christ, and who will be found in him at the time of his appearing. Considering the weight and unconditional character of these promises, what could be more natural or better in accord with them than that the sleeping saint of God should have a glorious resurrection? The body of Christ can only have a resurrection to life, and this Paul clearly understood when he said so positively "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. And "Unto them who look for him shall he appear a second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28. Christ will appear the second time for the salvation of his people. Of that coming and the manner of the resurrection, let us read what Paul said to the Thessalonians. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout....and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain (unto the coming of the Lord) shall be caught up together with them in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

In the first of the passage just quoted above it is said, "When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall we also appear with him in glory," while the second says Christ will bring salvation for those who look for him. Both passages connect salvation with the coming of Christ. The quotation from Thessalonians shows the manner in which this will be realized. We see Christ coming from heaven, we see the sleeping saints raised and caught up along with the living to meet the Lord in the air. Beyond that meeting—the first meeting of the complete body of Christ, there will be no more separations, no more any sad farewells to dim the joys of immortality, for as Paul said "We shall ever be with the Lord."

Two points are here distinctly proved: First that those raised at the coming of Christ are one distinct class, viz: his body, Rev. xx. 4, and second, in connection with, 1 Cor. xv., they are raised incorruptible. A third point might be noticed. Between the moment of resurrection, and the moment when Paul exclaims, "so shall we ever be with the Lord," where will we place that judgment which some claim so earnestly, when the Lord will decide who are his brethren, and who are not, who are to be forever with him, and who banished from his presence? For ourselves we can find no moment of time when such a tribunal could take place. But were this difficulty removed, there would still remain the greater wonder still that Paul never mentioned such an event when speaking about the resurrection. This he did so closely that were such a thing true he could not have failed to speak of it. Yet Paul never placed judgment between resurrection and the realization of immortality, a fact which tells us clearly that the judgment of the saints must be at another time, and for a different purpose than to determine if they are worthy of life or not.

Such then are our conclusions as to the happy destiny of the saved. It is theirs to have part in the first resurrection, the constituents of which are called "blessed and holy," and of whom Christ said, "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." This is that rising from the dead Christ called "the resurrection of life," and the same which Paul hoped for—the resurrection out from among the dead. Phil. iii. 11. It is that resurrection over whose subjects the second death will have no dominion—of whom it is written. "They shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 6.

It is in short that resurrection to be worthy of which, in the event of death, our best energies should be devoted. for in that rising again from the dead, the victory of the grave will be overcome, death will be conquered, we will then be kings and priests and sich in everything which makes the glory of this age poor in comparison with the next.

In conclusion, What of the unfaithful? Our reading has excluded them from any part in the first resurrection, and the question naturally arises, When will they be raised, and what judgment will they have? As we read the testimony says they will sleep on till the thousand years are finished. Here are the words, "The rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished.' Rev. xx. 5. At the end of that period, John saw "the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book was opened which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works." Rev. xx. 12.

Here the book of life comes to view again. I have already said in respect to the words in Rev. iii. 5, that God would not keep the names of any on the roll book of life who deserted his service. It is only affirmed of those who overcome that their names will not be blotted out. It seems a reasonable conclusion to draw from this that the names of those who fail will be blotted out. This is the class who in consequence of this failed of having a part in the first resurrection, and who were not to live till the thousand years were finished.

Of that rising again and judgment it is said, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. xx. 15. Surely this looks like the unhappy end of those who failed to overcome, failed of a share in the first resurrection, whose names at the judgment had no place on the book of life. What an end! May God save us all from such a fate, and may we be diligent to make our calling and election sure.

In conclusion, my idea of the order of the resurrection is fully expressed in the words of Paul, "Christ the first fruits, afterwards (1800 years or more) they who are Christ's at this coming; then ("the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished," Rev. xx. 5.) the end. when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." 1 Cor. xv. 24.

ISRAEL IN EXILE: ARE THE ANGLO-SAXONS THEIR DESCENDANTS?

J. CAMERON.

Zealous endeavors are being made in these days to make out the descent of the Anglo-Saxon race from the ten tribes of Israel carried into captivity by the Assyrians. Several periodicals have been started in the support of the cause. The latest and most reasonable of these is the Standard of Israel. But like too many magazines of the one-idea class, it seems to have no space to spare for anything that calls in question its favorite theory, or any of the reasons by which it is supported.

I had occasion some six or eight months ago to point out to the journal referred to what I considered an untenable ground for the theory advanced in one of its early numbers. And as that ground was professedly derived from the Scriptures, unlike most of the reasons assigned by the advocates of the idea, I really expected that some respect would be paid to any fair criticism offered upon it. The Scriptural reason given was to the effect that great numerical increase is promised to Ismel in the Scriptures, and that this has its fulfillment in the vast numbers of the Anglo-Saxon race in the British Islands and in the colonies under British rule, as well as in the United States of America. I endeavored to show that while great increase was originally promised to Abraham (partly fulfilled in the reigns of David and Solomon), the very opposite was threatened when they should be exiled for their disobedience. And that promises of increase made subsequently by the prophets were invariably connected with, and dependent on, their restoration to the land of their fathers. No notice was taken of the paper in which this was pointed out, and as the subject has a degree of interest in itself apart from the theory of "our Israelitish origin," I take the liberty to offer a few remarks, showing how the matter stands so far as the Scripture testimony is concerned.

The following quotations may suffice to show what was promised in regard to numerical increase to the founder of the Hebrew people:—"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 1–3.

"And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee." Gen. xiii. 14–17.

"And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be. And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness." Gen. xv. 5, 6.

These promises had a partial fulfillment even during the sojourn of the people in Egypt, but their numbers had at least doubled by the time that Solomon reigned. And this although the original inhabitants had been thorns in their sides during the time of the judges and afterwards. This great increase, however, was during their occupation of the land of promise.

Before the twelve tribes entered Canaan they were duly warned as to what should befall them if they were disobedient. Decrease in numbers was distinctly intimated by Moses as one of the marks of the Divine displeasure by which they should be visited.

"When thou shalt beget children, and children's children, and ye shall have remained long in the land, and shall corrupt yourselves and make a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, and shall do evil in the sight of the Lord thy God, to provoke him to anger: I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordan to possess it; ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed. And the Lord shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you." Deut. iv. 25–27.

"If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, the Lord thy God; then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sickness, and of long continuance. Moreover he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee. Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the Lord bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed. And ye shall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou wouldst not obey the voice of the Lord thy God. And it shall come to pass, that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, and to multiply you; so the Lord will rejoice over you to destroy you, and to bring you to nought; and ye shall be plucked from off the land whither thou goest to possess it. And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest; but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life: in the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see." Deut. xxviii. 58–67. See also Deut. vii. 13, 14; xxviii. 15, 18, 25.

But these threatenings are also accompanied with promises of restoration and increase consequent on obedience.

"And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of the heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee: and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers." Deut. xxx. 1–5. See also xxviii. 1–4.

"Multiply thee above thy fathers" intimates an increase beyond what they had previous to the threatened exile. But it must be observed that this increase is not promised to take place during their exile, but after they have been "gathered from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee," and "brought into the land which thy fathers possessed."

The prophets subsequent to Moses also predicted the multiplication of Israel, after their restoration. Thus Ezekiel:—"And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever. Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore." Ezek. xxxvii. 25, 26.

In that glowing picture of Israel's future glory contained in Isaiah's prophecy (chap. lx.) we have these two closing verses, in which the comparative insignificance of Israel, previous to their restoration, and the numbers to which they should increase, are graphically described:—"Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Isa. lx. 21, 22.

Again, from an earlier portion of the same great prophecy (which begins at chapter xl.) we have the following, in which let it be noted, in passing, that Israel shall be brought by the Gentiles to their own land. But if the Anglo-Saxon race is Israel, who are the Gentiles that are to bring them, and what need is there that the Anglo-Saxon race should be brought by any other peoples, seeing that they themselves possess the most ample appliances for such a migration?—"Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. As I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth. For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away. The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me; give place to me that I may dwell. Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been? Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: for they shall be ashamed that wait for me." Isa. xlix. 18–23.

In one of Jeremiah's prophecies, referring to the future restoration, we have the following passage, in which the increase of Israel is also distinctly announced:—"Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them: and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord. And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Jer. xxx. 18–22.

Also again in Ezekiel:—"But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown. And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded: and I will multiply upon you man and beast; they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men. Thus saith the Lord God. Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.... Thus saith the Lord God, I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock. As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts, so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord." Ezek. xxxvi. 8–10.

And in Hosea:—"Ax for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, woe also to them when I depart from them! Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer. Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give? give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts. All their wickedness is in Gilgal; for there I hated them: for the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of mine house, I will love them no more: all their princes are revolters. Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit; yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even the beloved fruit of their womb. My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him; and they shall be wanderers among the nations." Hos. ix. 11.

And in Zechariah:—"And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off; for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them; and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again. I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them." Zech. x. 6–10.

I might here pause, and ask our friends who hold the Anglo-Israel theory to produce a single text to prove the numerical increase of Israel while exiled from the land of their fathers. I am not aware of any such text, and till proof be forthcoming, I must hold that the increase of the Anglo-Saxon race has nothing whatever to do with the fulfillment of any promises in the Scriptures regarding the numerical increase of Israel. The passages I have quoted show that exile, accompanied with decrease in numbers and other evils, was threatened for disobedience. The exile was executed; and we must presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the threatened accompaniments have also come to pass. In the case of that portion of Israel known as Jews, their increase for the last eighteen hundred years has been very small compared with that of other peoples, and is in one respect the natural result of the depressing circumstances in which for a long period they have been placed. And if we accept the theory that the North American Indians are a remnant of the ten tribes, and for which a great deal can be said, it is a well-known fact that they are now decreasing at a rapid rate. But the whereabouts of the ten tribes is a matter that does not affect the question now under consideration.

I submit these remarks with all confidence to the judgment of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, and shall be glad to consider anything that may be offered on this important subject.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 5, 1882. NO. 13.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and six Months at the same rate.

Address all letters and communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The RESTITUTION defines the word "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," to mean the re-establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations. He includes also of Israel, the literal restoration of their city the Jerusalem, of the tribes, and the glorification, of the whole, united literally, in each Christ, and living after Christ in life. Also he very believes of the disciple dispensation, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as conditions of final salvation.

COMING AGE—ITS PECULIARITY.

Two Witnesses Continued. Term Defined and Explained. Its Use in the Old Testament! How Used by Christ! How Used by His Apostles! How Used in the Revelations! Why Two! Trace Its Root Power Through the Old and New Testaments. Ministers of the Word. Ministers of Tables.

No. 10.

J. P. WELTHEE.

Our remarks on the witnesses have been already very considerably extended. We might have said that the witnesses are the saints of a certain period; that the period in its location, and in its character and duration is defined in Dan. vii. 25; but traveling, as we are, many terms were to be defined and explained. Every term in the disputed ground required a full development. "The temple of God" required a full investigation, since it is often asserted that God has had no temple on earth since A. D. 70. We have before us the following:

"This temple (Rev. xi. 1) that John measures was not a reality in A. D. 96, for at that time no temple existed; for, twenty-six years before, the Romans, under Titus, destroyed the last one, since which no other has been built—hence it is evident that the 'temple of God,' viewed by the prophet, is among 'the things which must shortly come to pass.' The events relating to the witnesses and the Lord of the earth presuppose a temple, and if it were possible to prove that a temple will not be erected in Jerusalem, then the prophetic testimony is impeached. The denial also would confront Paul, for he predicted that the Man of Sin would sit in 'the temple of God.' Worse! the abomination which Christ said should stand in the 'holy place,' will have no holy place to stand in; and the 'most holy' (place) cannot be anointed, nor can the sanctuary be cleansed at the end of 2,300 days. A temple will be built, or the prophecy will be proven—a lie."—Dr. E. C. Welch, Editor of the Chilean.

According to the temple views we have presented the objections above stated are obviated; nor are we obliged to involve the prophet or his prophecy in—"a lie."

Titus did not destroy "the temple of God," but, simply, one of his old deserted houses. It ceased to be "the temple of God," the moment that Jesus, his Son, expired upon the cross. Nor did Christ's disciples, after that event, call it "the temple of God." They transferred that name to another structure; a living temple, and called it "the temple of the living God," to distinguish it from the temples of idols—dead gods. The "temple of God" was not only in existence "A. D. 96," but John was in it, and it was that temple that he was commanded to measure. He was one of its living stones, built upon Christ its foundation stone. In that temple the man of sin did sit. We have dwelt at considerable length upon the prophecies of Zechariah, in order to become familiar with the key to the proper understanding of the witnesses. With these explanations let us take up our line of investigation.

Witness.—The Greek of Rev. xi. 3, is as follows: —kai dosso tois martusi mou.

Martus is in the dative, from martus or martur. It is used in the New Testament 34 times. It is translated witnesses 22 times; record, twice; martyr, twice; and martyrs, once.

The primary thought, called martyr—the Greek word—is, one that gives testimony, not defining time, or circumstances. In the widest sense, any person, place, or thing, can be a witness.

Persons are usually the witnesses spoken of in the New Testament: in the plural number, and applied to Christ, his apostles, and disciples. The twelve apostles are witnesses for Christ; and are, therefore, his witnesses. In three places the Greek word martus (martyr) is not translated.

Acts xxii. 20. "And when the blood of thy martyr (martur) Stephen was shed, I (Paul) also was standing by, and consenting unto his death and kept the raiment of them that slew him."

Here the original thought has an adjunct, where the witness seals his testimony with his life's blood.

Christ is the faithful and true witness. "Nevertheless (says my Christ-y faithful martyr)" Rev. iii. 13.

Of the Lord it is said, "And I saw the woman (Mystic Babylon) drunken (Rev. xvii. 6) with the blood of the saints (Dan. vii. 21, 25) and with the blood of the martyrs (witnesses she had slain of Jesus."

In Rev. xx. 4 it is written "And I saw (in vision) the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received (his) mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

We find two classes of witnesses:

1. Those that did not seal their testimony with their blood.

2. Those who did.

These two classes were Christ's witnesses; but one in a higher sense. The lower class were called witnesses; the higher class kept the original name, martyr. Both classes comprehended the entire body of Christians. They were the "saints." Their testimony was given both in words and deeds. The Spirit of God, dwelling in them, made them competent witnesses.

Witnesses under the Old Covenant, or Typical Witnesses.—Passing by the classes that constituted the Hebrew Theocracy, we shall call attention to the officiary of that nation. These consisted of two orders, which we now term Religious, and Civil; the Church and the State. Born out of the Red Sea, they spent their infancy in the wilderness under God as their guide and ruler. It was then a theocracy, a God-ruled nation; and continued such for 450 years, under the name of Church, or Congregation of Israel. They then demanded a visible king like other nations, to go in and out before them, and fight their battles.

God, their King, protested against his rules being rejected yet granted them a visible king. Under Saul began the visible reign, till their nationality expired under the Romans. It was always, however, a nation of Priests. Exod. xix 6. "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." Rev. i. 6; v. 10. The Altar was always above the Throne. Between both God designed a perpetual and happy union. Zech. vi. 13. This holy people, however, always had its temporals, and its spirituals, those interests that were inherent in them individually, and those that belonged to God as the head of the family. Moses stood as the visible head of the one order of inferiors. Aaron was the visible head; God being the Supreme of both.

While these two orders of interests were exercised by two orders of persons, there were conflicts of rival chiefs. The Church and State, designed to be one, were often severed and hostile. The peculiar people of God are to be, and were always designed to be governed by a Royal High Priesthood: its proper type, Melchizedec: its anti-type, Christ the Branch. Zech. vi. 12, 13. The Tabernacle, then the Temple, localized the Altar who is governed the Throne.

"Three times a year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God." Exod. xxiii. 17.

But God dwelt in the inner temple between the cherubim. They appeared before God through their representative, the High Priest and his assistants, as they were not allowed to appear before him in person; nor can we appear before him except through Christ our High Priest and his assistants. Through him, in our Altar devotions, we stand before God. These facts will explain what we now introduce:

"Then said he (Gabriel), These (two olive branches) are the two anointed ones, that stand by (before, Zech. vi. 5) the Lord (Jehovah) of the whole earth." Rev. xi. 4.

The Hebrews appeared before God, by their priests in the temple at Jerusalem; under the old covenant to watch over and instruct his people, and to declare his name and his duty to the nations.

CHURCH TRIALS.

H. A. SCOTT.

Ecclesiastical courts seem to have about as much to do in the way of trying heretics as the civil courts do in trying culprits. The whole thing, when viewed in the light of the New Testament system seems to be a farce. Only think of a body of unlearned men who have learned their creeds in the various colleges or churches of our modern Christendom coming together and passing sentence on a heretical brother because he cannot subscribe to some peculiar statement of some dogma which is in the creed but not one word of which is in the Bible. The doctrine of the "holy trinity" is not expressed in words in the Bible, but has to be reasoned out by astute theologians, then "resolved" in synods, and then put into a creed, then woe to the man who cannot see that Jesus is the subsubsubsub

THE opinion is gaining ground in Europe that a war between Germany and Russia can not long be averted.

LATE London papers with very full reports concerning Jewish persecutions in Russia received from Brother H. Hayes for which the sender has our sincere thanks.

WE will not occupy much room editorially this week, as we are anxious to give all we can from our correspondents and place other interesting and important matter before our readers.

TODAY, April 2, a citizen of Plymouth—James Van Valkenburgh—was buried whose age was 101 years, 2 months, and 12 days. He was the oldest person we ever saw in the coffin. His term of life covered a very eventful period of human history.

COPY of "Songs of Zion" received from the office of The Dawn of the Morning. A neat volume of nearly 200 pages and 260 hymns. Price in cloth 50 cents. Paper and book published at Grand Rapids, Michigan. The paper is one of our valued exchanges.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 8.

Bashan and Its Giant Cities.

J. L. PORTER, A. M.

ANCIENT CITIES.

Scrambling through, or rather over, a ruinous gateway, we entered the city of Bathanyeh. A wide street lay before us, the pavement perfect, the houses on each side standing streets and lanes branching off to the right and left.

There was something inexpressibly mournful in riding along that silent street, and looking in through half-open doors to one after another of the desolate houses, with the rank weeds and grass in their courts, and the brambles growing in festoons over the doorways, and branches of trees shooting through the gaping rents in the old walls.

The ring of our horses' feet on the pavement awakened the echoes of the city, and startled many a strange tenant. Owls flapped their wings round the gray towers; daws shrieked as they flew away from the house-tops; foxes ran out and in among shattered dwellings, and two jackals rushed from an open door, and scampered off along the street before us.

The graphic language of Isaiah, uttered regarding another city, but vividly descriptive of desolation in any place, came up at once to my mind and to my lips—"Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there." Isa. xiii. 21.

Bathanyeh stands on the northern declivity of the mountains of Bashan, and commands a view of the boundless plain towards the lakes of Damascus. About a mile and a half to the north-west I saw two large villages close together. Two miles further, on the top of a high tell, were the ruins of a large town, which, my guides said, was both extensive and beautiful. Three other towns were visible in the plain, and two on the slopes eastward. How we wished to visit these! but time would not permit. From this, as from every other point where I reached the limits of my prescribed tour, I turned aside with regret; because away beyond, the eye rested on enticing ruins, and unexplored towns and villages.

Bathanyeh is not quite so large as Hit, but the buildings are of a superior character and in much better preservation. One of the houses in which I rested for a time might almost be termed a palace. A spacious gateway, with massive folding doors of stone, opened from the street into a large court. On the left was a square tower some forty feet in height. Round the court, and opening into it, were the apartments, all in perfect preservation; and yet the place does not seem to have been inhabited for many centuries.

Greek inscriptions on the principal building prove that they existed at the commencement of our era, and in the whole town I did not see a solitary trace of Mohammedan occupation, so that it has probably been deserted for a thousand years.

The name at once suggests its identity with Batanis, one of the thirty-four ecclesiastical cities of Arabia, whose bishops were in the fifth century suffragans of the primate of Bostra. Batanis was the capital of the Greek province of Batanæa, a part of the territory of Philip mentioned by Josephus, but included by Luke (iii. 1.) in the "region of Trachonitis." The region round it is still called the "Land of Bathanyeh;" and the name is interesting as a modern representative of the Scriptural Bashan.

Turning away from this interesting place, we rode along the mountain side eastward toward Shukk, four miles distant. This is also a very old town, and must at one time have contained at least 20,000 inhabitants, though now it has scarcely twenty families.

Ptolemy, the Greek geographer calls it Saccæa. It was evidently rebuilt by the Romans, as only a very few of its antique massive houses remain, and the shattered ruins of temples are seen on every side. One of these temples was long used as a church, and the ruins of another church also exist, which, an inscription tells us, was dedicated by Bishop Tiberius to St. George in A. D. 560.

Around Shukk are some remarkable tombs, square towers, about twenty feet on each side, and from thirty to forty feet high, divided into stories. Tablets over the doors record the names of the dead who were lay there, and the dates of their death. They are of the first and second centuries of our era. They have been all rifled, so that we cannot tell how the bodies were deposited, but probably the arrangements were similar to those in the tombs of Palmyra. From the ruins of Shukk three other towns were in sight among the hills on the east.

Remounting, we rode for ten miles through a rich agricultural district to Shubbà. We passed only one village, but we saw several towns on the wooded sides of the mountain to the left, and numerous others down on the plain to the right. Crossing a rugged ravine, and ascending a steep bank, we reached the walls of Shubbà. They are completely ruined, so much so, that the only way into the city is over them, beside a beautiful Roman gateway, now blocked up with rubbish. Having entered, we proceeded along a well-paved street—the most perfect specimen of Roman pavement I had yet seen—to the residence of the chief. In the large area in front of his mansion we found a crowd of eager people, and the first to hold out the hand of welcome was our kind host of the previous night, Sheikh Assad. He introduced us to his brother Fares, and we were then ushered into an apartment, where we found comfort, smiling faces, and a hearty welcome.

Shubbà is also entirely a Roman city—the ramparts are Roman, the streets have the old Roman pavement, Roman temples appear in every quarter, a Roman theatre remains nearly perfect, a Roman aqueduct brought water from the distant mountains, inscriptions of the Roman age, though in Greek, are found on every public building. A few of the massive ancient houses, yet exist, but they are in a great measure concealed or built over with the later and more graceful structures of Greek and Roman origin. Though this city was nearly three miles in circuit, and abounded in splendid buildings, its ancient name is lost, and its ancient history unknown. Its modern name is derived from a princely Mohammedan family which settled there in the seventh century. The Emir Beshir Shehab, the last of the native rulers of Lebanon, was a member of the family, and so also was the Emir Saad-el-Din, who was murdered in the late massacre at Hasbeiya on the side of Hermon.

Beside Shubbà is a little cup-shaped hill which caught my eye the moment I entered the city. On ascending I found it to be the crater of an extinct volcano, deeply covered with ashes cinders, and scoriæ—one of the centers, doubtless, of that terrific convulsion which in some remote age, heaved up the mountains of Bashan, and spread out the molten lava which cooled into the rock fields of Argob.

From the summit I had a near and distinct view of the south-eastern section of Argob. Its features are even wilder and sterner than those of the northern. The rocks are higher, the glens are deeper and more tortuous. It looks, in fact, like the ruins of a country, and yet towns and villages are thickly studded over that wilderness of rocks.

The mountains which rise behind Shubbà on the east are terraced half way up, and their tops are covered by oak forests. The vine and the fig flourished here luxuriantly in the days of Bashan's glory, winter streams then irrigated and enriched the slopes, and filled the great cisterns in every city, but the Lord said in his wrath, "I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools. Isa. xlii. 15. and now I saw the words of the Lord were literally and fearfully true.

Sheikh Fares and his brother made all requisite arrangements for our future tour through Bashan. They told us that so long as we traveled in the Druse country we should be perfectly safe; no hand, no tongue, would be lifted against us; a welcome would meet us in every village, and a cordial wish for our welfare follow us on every path. We knew this, for we knew that policy as well as the sacred laws of Oriental hospitality, would restrain the Druses to aid and protect us to the utmost of their power. They warned us, however that some parts of our proposed journey would be attended with considerable risk. They told us plainly that the Mohammedans could not be trusted, and that if we attempted to penetrate the Lejah (Argob), all the power of the Druses might not be sufficient to save us from the fury of excited fanatics.

We attributed these warnings to the best motives, but we thought them exaggerated. To our cost we afterwards found that they were only too much needed.

Sheikh Fares gave us one of his most intelligent and active of his men as guide and companion, he also supplied horses for our servants and baggage, and a Druse escort. Thus equipped, we bade farewell to our kind and generous host, and set out on our journey southward.

For more than an hour we followed the course of a Roman road along the western declivity of the mountain range, passing several old villages on the right and left. At one of these villages, picturesquely situated in a secluded glen, we saw a long procession of Druse women near a clump of newly made graves. They had a strange unearthly look. The silver horns which they wear upright on their heads, were nearly two feet long, over these were thrown long white veils, enveloping the whole person, and reaching to the ground, thus giving them a stature apparently far exceeding that of mortals. As they marched with stately steps round the tombs, they sung a wild chant that now echoed through the whole glen, and now sank into the mournful cadence of a death-wail. I asked the meaning of this singular and striking scene, and was told that eleven of the bravest men in the village had fallen in the late war, these were their graves, and now the principal women of Shubbà had come to comfort and mourn with the wives of the slain; just as in the time of our Lord, many of the Jews came from Jerusalem "to comfort Mary and Martha concerning their brother Lazarus." John xi. 18, 31.

Descending the rugged bank into a rich plain, a quarter of an hour's gallop brought us to Sahem, a small but ancient town, containing the remains of a beautiful temple, and some other imposing buildings.

A few Druses, who find ample accommodation in the old houses, gathered around us and pressed us to accept their hospitality. We were compelled to decline, and after examining a group of remarkable subterranean cisterns, we mounted again and turned eastward up a picturesque valley to Kunawat. The scenery became richer and grander as we ascended. The highest peaks of the mountains of Bashan were before us, wooded to their summits. On each side were terraced slopes, broken here and there by a dark cliff or rugged brake, and sprinkled with oaks; in the bottom of the dell below, a tiny stream, the first we had seen in Bashan, leaped joyously from rock to rock, while luxuriant evergreens embraced each other over its murmuring waters. From the top of every rising ground we looked out over jungle and grove to gray ruins, which here and there reared themselves proudly above dense masses of foliage. Diving into the dell by a path that would try the nerves of a mountain goat, we crossed the streamlet and wound up a rocky bank, among giant oaks and thick underwood, to an old building which crowns a cliff impending over the glen. As we rode up we could obtain a glimpse of its gray walls here and there through dark openings, but on reaching the broad terrace in front of it, and especially on entering its spacious court, we were struck as much with its extent as with the beauty of its architecture. The doorway is encircled by a broad border of the fruit and foliage of the vine, entwined with roses and lilies, sculptured in bold relief, and with equal accuracy of design and delicacy of execution.

The court was surrounded by cloisters supported by Ionic columns, but nearly all gone now. On the north side is a projection containing a building at one period used as a church, but probably originally intended for a temple. The ruins of another building, the shrine or sanctuary of the whole, are still to be seen over the center of the quadrangle. The graceful pillars and sculptured pediment, and cornice with its garlands of flowers, lie in shapeless heaps beneath the shade of oak trees, and almost concealed by thorns and thistles.

Yes, the curse is visible there, not so painfully visible perhaps as in Western Palestine, where only a few stones or heaps of rubbish mark the site of great cities, yet still visible in crumbling wall and prostrate column, one in those very brambles that weave a leafy mantle round the fallen monuments of man's genius and power. "Thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof."—They are here.

And other evidences of the curse were there too. As we approached the ruin not a living creature was visible. The air was still, and the silence of death appeared to reign over the glen and mountain. A solitary fox leaped from his den by the great gateway as our feet crossed the threshold, and took refuge in a neighboring thicket, but this seemed to be the only tenant alike of temple and forest. So it seemed, and so we thought; yet, before we were fifteen minutes among the ruins, three or four wild-looking heads were observed peering over a cairn of stones, and the sunbeams glanced from the barrels of their long-called muskets. We went on with our examinations, and the wild heads and glittering barrels went on increasing. Mahmood, our Druse guide, fortunately saw them, and stepping out from the shade of the portico where we had left him with the horses, he hinted that it would be well for us to keep near him, and complete our researches as speedily as possible. We soon mounted, and as we defiled through the forest a score of fierce Bedawin, armed with gun and pistol, leaped from their hiding-places, and lined our path. We were startled, and began to think that our tour was about to come to a speedy and unpleasant termination; but Mahmood rode on in silence, not deigning to turn his head, or direct a single look to these daring outlaws. We followed in close file, and as I brought up the rear, I thought it well to give them the customary salutation, Ullah mahum, "God be with you." Not a man of them returned it; and plainly, as if the words had been written on their scowling faces, I saw that they were cursing inwardly the stern necessity that kept their hands off us. These we afterwards learned are the chief inhabitants of the mountains of Bashan—reckless, lawless, thieving vagabonds, who live by plunder, and glory in their success as freebooters. The Druses keep them in check, and they know well that a terrible vengeance would be taken on them if they should dare to interfere with any one enjoying Druse protection. How applicable to this section of Palestine, and to many another, are the words of Isaiah—"Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers." i. 7.

JEWISH NOTES.

Writing to the Jewish World, "a Russian Jew" says his brethren in Russia "are bent on emigration at the earliest opportunity," but they "do not wish to change the Russo-Jewish question into an American or Spanish Jewish question, but endeavor, with God's help, to solve it once and for always in a manner promising to be permanent." "Unmistakably," he says, "their goal is the colonization of Palestine. In almost every town in Roumania, and in some of the principal cities of Russia, there have been formed Palestine Emigration Societies with funds of their own; and although the Russian government has not yet expressed its opinion on the movement, there is a strong hope that it will not run counter to it. Long ago the wish had taken root among them, and having waited for some time in vain for their Western brethren to take the initiative in the enterprise, they have at length of themselves taken the matter earnestly in hand. They have chosen Palestine, not on account of any wild dreams of ambition in the immediate future, but because it alone promises to supply the felt and universal requisite of a permanent abode, besides its possessing other qualities, such as the absence in it of undue competition, its proximity to Russia, and the traditional friendliness of the Turkish government towards the Jews."

Mr. Laurence Oliphant, in a letter to the Times, dated 11th February, also mentions the existence of the Roumanian projects referred to, several of which have made appeals to him to aid them in their plans:

"The dominant idea of the Eastern Jew, whatever may be that of his co-religionists in Western countries, is to return to Palestine. This sentiment is not confined to the poorer classes, many of whom may wish to go there in order to share in the charity which their richer co-religionists all over Europe disperse for their support; but the desire to return to the land of their forefathers is extremely strong, even among the more wealthy members of the community, whose highest ambition is to become landed proprietors on the soil which is endeared to them by the most cherished traditions. They are deterred from doing so partly by the fear that they might be subject to exactions from the local officials, and partly by their ignorance of agricultural pursuits. Nevertheless, more than one wealthy Jew is carrying on farming operations successfully in Palestine, and a colony was formed about five years ago near Lydda."

"In regard to Russia," he says, "the correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle, in a letter dated Jerusalem, 27th January, writes: 'The movement for emigration to this country appears to extend more and more in Russia. From divers places envoys have arrived here charged to secure eligible sites for their brethren, who are to follow next spring. A Russian gentleman has assured me that many Jewish capitalists of his country were firmly resolved to settle at Jaffa, in order to erect factories there. I have seen letters from old rabbis of the strictest orthoxy, declaring that whoever puts his hand to the working of the soil of the Holy land acts more meritoriously than he who passed his time day and night with study of the Beth Hamedrash.'"

He thinks "the consequences of this movement, prematurely extruding without advice and protection from an influential quarter, cannot but be disastrous in the extreme to the unhappy emigrants who will pour into the country slenderly provided with funds, and for the most part ignorant of the rudiments of agriculture."

He, therefore, proposes that the London Committee of the Mansion House Relief Fund should appoint a permanent committee of influential names, both Jewish and Christian, to assist "Hebrews emigrating to all parts of the world," but specially to supervise and control their re-settlement in Palestine. He thinks the very existence of such a committee would be a protection to the peaceful settler from the tyranny and rapacity of local officials.

The Times supports his appeal to some extent in a leading article, from which we quote a sentence or two:

"The Jew is in many countries not a stranger; in Syria and Palestine his race is at home. Palestine is a land of rocks and wildernesses, which it would tax a wealthy empire to reclaim, but with intervals of most fruitful soil, waiting only the husbandmen to be converted from a waste into a garden. Religion forbids the Jew ever to forget Judea. He has always longed to see colonists of his race return to it. Now the men are available, through the savageness of a mob, to take up the Hebrew inheritance. Resources seem also to be fast flowing in, through the pity of civilized nations, sufficient to replant the Jew in the seat of his forefathers. Such is the scheme which Mr. Oliphant presents to us.

"There is room, he thinks, for a Jewish colony in Syria. The Jew has commonly found the Musulman yoke tolerable. Jews driven to Turkey from Russia would arrive with the best credentials. Considerable territories in Syria are unoccupied, and could without excessive difficulty be secured. The example of an agricultural Jewish colony within sight of Europe might encourage imitation elsewhere, and wean the race from its dominant attachment to invidious forms of commerce. Sentiment counts for much in human affairs; the spectacle of Jews once more in occupation, though partial, of the land of Israel would be dear to many hearts."

We have before expressed our opinion that some portion of the Jewish people would be ingathered in their ancient city and land without having been converted to belief in the claims of Jesus to be their Messiah, and would be in course of time subjected there to a final invasion and siege by their Gentile enemies, from which they would be delivered by the second appearance of Him whom they had pierced." Compare Zech. xii. 2–10 with Rev. i. 7. It is not our province to say by what means this partial resettlement is to be brought about. But we watch and record with ever-increasing interest those events of our time which seem bringing it nearer the range of actual fulfillment.—Messenger.

Anecdote of Baron Rothschild.

Baron James de Rothschild one day at dinner perceived that the artist Delacroix, who was his guest, was looking at him in a peculiarly searching manner. The baron asked the reason, and Delacroix responded that having for some time been vainly searching for a head such as he would like to copy for a prominent beggar in his new picture, he was suddenly struck with the idea that his host would make a splendid model. The baron, who was fond of art, gracefully consented to sit, and next morning appeared in the studio of the painter, who dressed him in rags, placed a tall staff in his hand, and put him into a modest posture. In this attitude he was discovered by a young friend and pupil of the painter who alone had the privilege of being admitted to the studio at all times. Surprised by the excellence of the model, he congratulated his master at having at last found exactly what he wanted. Not for a moment imagining that the model had just been begging at the porch of some church or at the corner of a bridge, and much struck by his features, the young man copying a moment when the artist's eyes were averted, slipped a twenty-franc piece into the model's hand. Rothschild kept the money, thanking the giver by a look, and the young man went his way. He was, as the banker soon found out from Delacroix, without fortune, and obliged to give lessons in order to eke out his living. Sometime later the youth received a letter mentioning that charity bears interest, and that the accumulated interest on twenty francs, which he, prompted by a generous impulse, had given to a man in appearance a beggar, was lying at his disposal in Rothschild's office, to the amount of ten thousand francs, having borne five hundred fold.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Editor Restitution:

You call for short articles on practical christianity and faithful godly admonitions to the Church and to the Gentile world; to present the motive power of the gospel viz., the kingdom and coming of the Son of God in power and glory, to execute the judgments written, and to destroy them that destroy or corrupt the earth; and the reign of Christ in millenial glory for an age.

These great and essential truths have been foremost and uppermost in our discourses our conversation and what we have written. Daily and hourly do we realize most vividly the importance of our true position—that at any moment may the Son of Man come for his people. Do we believe it? Yes, most assuredly. Do we preach it? Yes, most emphatically. Do we live it out? Yes we do to the best of our ability, by dealing justly, loving mercy and walking humbly with God.

Some will call this boasting; very well. God knows the heart. We have often said that we as a people have truth and theory sufficient to save the world, but lack in godly, holy living. In this we may deceive ourselves and the church, but God never. What a power should we exert, even in the antitype of Noah's day, did we emulate Christ, his apostles, and the early church.

In kindness allow me to say a few things about our paper. I am glad to have so good a paper, so well edited, and so well managed, and yet some things may be made a little better. There is such a thing as having too much of a good thing. Essential truth may become hackneyed and monotonous, and thus lose its force and effect. Let us instance the subject of life in Christ. This in the language of the Scriptures, is called bread. Deut. viii. 3. Matt. iv. 4. Yet the great Teacher says that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, Jesus and Moses. This has been for forty years with us a subject of the first magnitude, and hope it may ever remain so. Remember, our text is bread, yet we don't make a whole meal of bread. I do not think it the very best way to transcribe so many long portions of Scripture into our articles; they become tiresome, and are but seldom read through with interest. We are apt to become stereotyped in our thoughts, and writing, and can't get out of the old rut. Let us try it. First let us get the idea that it is not a very great thing to copy long texts of Scripture, and so make up a long article for the paper; but let us study and put together a few well-digested and well-arranged sentences, always based upon the unerring word, and backed by the same.

In the main the long articles are good and truthful, yet we do not think it is exactly level to give them to the exclusion of others whose articles are equally meritorious, but not as brilliant or as able. By this I do not wish to be understood that the editor must publish everything sent; but enough of this.

I am glad Br. Wilcox has found his blade again. I really hope there are no rusty spots on it. When he advertized his last sword—could not tell the pathway of glory. Honor and immortality. T. M. GATHERCOIT.

TO me, what would Washington, or Napoleon, or Wellington have said to one of their officers? Strange indeed, that you should have lost your sword in the heat of the battle, and cannot tell where you left it.

O, haste thee, brother! Store it by the hilt. Don the whole armor, cap-a-pie: wield it mightily, the battle rages. Many remain as true as steel; some have fallen on the battlefield, doing deeds of noble daring. Others, I am sorry to say, have gone to the rear or retired from the battle ground ignobly.

The present calm is most fearfully dreaded by the experienced marshal. Catholicism, Mormonism, Socialism, and Infidelity are making fearful inroads upon our free institutions. The churches are powerless to meet the issues of the day. Surely here we fallen upon evil times. There is not a shadow of hope from any source but the Bible, and the God of the Bible. Then give me that dear, blessed old Bible. I will press it to my heart and say skeptic go thy way, touch not a single leaf. It has been my light, my life, my all; and will guide me to the port of peace. NEWELL BOND.

New Edition of "Reply to Ingersoll."

Please allow me to state through THE RESTITUTION in reply to inquiries from brethren, that arrangements have been made for the publication of a second edition of "The Bible Defended and Atheism Refuted." The new edition will appear, it is hoped, in a few weeks. Price 5ft cents a copy, at retail.

Printed from the electrotype plates of the first edition, it will contain a new preface and an additional chapter in review of the Ingersoll-Black controversy in the North American Review, and on a fly-leaf the opinions and criticisms of the first edition by the press of the country, both religious and secular, of scholars and thinkers, and of honest and simple inquirers as well.

It is gratifying to acknowledge offers from brethren in various sections, of sympathy and help in bringing out another edition; one large-hearted brother from far-off Texas generously offered to advance in cash the whole amount required—$150.

The necessity of some strictures on this earnest contention between Mr. Ingersoll and Judge Black, which has elicited a large share of public attention and interest, arises from the fact that each disputant in the debate reasons from false premises, and consequently leaves his conclusion logically in abeyance. Mr. Ingersoll being uninformed of the contents of the Bible, and Judge Black reasoning from premises—the immortality of the soul—endless misery, etc.—which he assumes the Bible to teach, but which it positively discards. No one is competent, however skillful in logic, to defend the word of God who plants his arguments on the sandy foundation of Pagan philosophy or human tradition. The defense of the Bible is easy and invulnerable, when firmly planted on "the Rock," built on the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. Reposing on any other substratum, however specious in appearance, the argument soon becomes a mass of crumbling sand.

Orders for the work have been already received. Brethren or others who may desire copies for their own use, or to aid in its circulation, may send orders to the undersigned. Liberal discount to the trade, and to those who may buy to sell again.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At his residence in Hanover county, Virginia, March 2, 1883, of heart disease, Brother Jesse T. Bowles, in the 78th year of his age.

Possessed of a mild and amiable disposition he was much beloved, and predisposed by early training to accept whatever doctrine could be sustained by a "thus saith the Lord" he early embraced the tenets of the Reformation as advocated by A. Campbell; but unlike many others who are content with a simple profession of religion, he studied the Scriptures more diligently, and subsequently found the more perfect way. His belief of the gospel of the kingdom was unwavering; for nearly fifty years he had his mind and heart fixed on the Bible, and he died in the full assurance of a resurrection to life, affording in his life and death a beautiful illustration of the precious truth that "Godliness is profitable unto all things having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." To the afflicted son and grand children "The soft memory of his virtues, yet lingering like twilight hues when the bright sun is set," will be a course of joy luring them on in the pathway of glory. Honor and immortality T. M. GATHERCOIT.

MY REFUGE.

[These lines were written by Ellen L. Gooch, a Brahmin of the highest caste, adopted daughter of Rev. W. T. Stone, Bradford, England:]

In the secret of His presence, how my soul delights to hide!
Oh, how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials by me flee,
For, when Satan comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.

When my soul is faint and weary, in the shadow of His wing
There is rest and pleasant answer, and a fresh and crystal spring;
And my Savior seems to hide me from the world's contamination sweet;
If I could I would tell many what he says when thus we meet.

Would you like to know the exercise of the secret of the Lord?
Go as Bible beneath His shadow, dwell there by prayer and heed.
And whene'er you leave the silence of that hiding place by meeting there,
You must take it as the image of your Master in your face.

You will surely lose the bitterness and the fullness of your joy,
If not, your walk should be different; you need your Master by your dwelling.
You may always be abiding, if you will, at Jesus' side;
In the secret of His presence, you may every moment hide.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM—NEW JERUSALEM, } Nov. 7, 1881. }

Your letter dated Oct. 10th came safe to hand, bringing the bill of exchange; and in which you say that my darling Bertie was well.

I cannot realize that she died seven days after that was written. Oh, it does not seem possible that it can be true. [Bertie was taken down with the fever that very night, Oct. 10th.] It seems as though I can never realize that my darling is dead.

I feel sometimes so much confused that I am almost unfit for writing or doing business. The dreadful shock of my dear daughter's death; coming in contact with so many strange people; trying to learn the Arabic language, the value of money here in use, and how to get along pleasantly with all the different classes of inhabitants; having to buy food, furniture, and other articles to commence housekeeping; having my attention so much occupied with all the new and interesting scenes and scenery around me; and feeling anxious for the welfare of the cause I am engaged in, all this in a strange land, is a tax upon my brain, as well as my body, which is almost unendurable. But having an Almighty God to lean upon, and the kindest of friends to sympathize with and assist me, I hope to live through it all, and praise the Lord. And when my house is set in order, and I am settled down in business, I hope to be able to give you more interesting accounts of everything in this very interesting country.

I have no wish to return to America. If I die, let me die here. But I hope to live and not die; and if exemption from death can be obtained anywhere upon the face of the earth, it will most certainly be obtained here first, in this "glorious holy mountain." This is the place chosen of God for the commencement of all his glorious works. Here Abraham offered his son, which typified the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. Here the unconditional covenant of salvation was made to Abraham with an oath; God making the great and precious promises of this covenant, and "swearing by himself because he could swear by no greater," that they should be fulfilled; "that by two immutable things, (the promise and the oath,) in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Heb. vi. 17, 18. This is the place that God has chosen for his dwelling place forever. Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. Here the holy shekinah dwelt. Here the Savior died. From this place he ascended to heaven to be glorified; and to this place he will return.

In this "holy mountain" a feast is to be made to all nations. In "this mountain" will the vail over all nations be removed. Victory over death will also be obtained here first. Tears will be wiped from all faces; and from this place will the rebuke of God's people be taken off from all the earth. The true and perfect righteousness of God through Jesus Christ, will shine forth before all the nations from Jerusalem, when it cannot be found anywhere else upon the earth; and the Gentiles will consequently yet be glad to come to Israel's light, which will exceed anything that has ever yet shone forth to the world: and kings will yet do homage to the brightness of Jerusalem's glorious rising. Then let me remain and live in this sacred place. Like Simeon of old, and Anna the prophetess, let me tarry here; not "only waiting for the consolation of Israel" as they waited, but also for the gathering of Israel, and for the setting up of the kingdom of Israel, which will be the kingdom of Christ, and of God.

Why not wait here where deliverance from the bondage of sin is first to be realized? Under the present state of things, even, we can live cheap while waiting and laboring to assist Jerusalem to arise. But we must not expect the enjoyment of blessings now, which will be bestowed hereafter. We must accept the situation as it is, and labor for an improvement.

Much of the weather here in winter time, especially the nights, is as cold as mild winter weather in Boston; and therefore those who come, at this stage of the progressive work, should bring small stoves. I am obliged to have one made. I already have a little one for charcoal which cost me twenty cents.

It cooks all my food, but does not warm the house. Whoever comes be wise enough to bring small, but good, range stoves. I can buy one here for ten dollars, but it would not be as good as our American stoves.

I will give you a sample of what I pay for furniture and provisions. A table 4 feet square, with large drawer, painted and varnished, three dollars. Nice chairs, one dollar each. Good flour, from the German colony, 4 and 5 cents a pound. Fresh eggs, 12 cents a dozen. Beautiful mutton, 6 and 8 cents a pound. Potatoes, one dollar a bushel; and they are good. Sweet potatoes are cheaper and better than in Boston. Beans, like ours, 3 cents a quart. Tomatoes are cheap. Onions, one quarter, and tea and coffee about one-half, what you pay in Boston. Loaf sugar, 12 cents a pound. English butter in cans, 80 cents a pound. Condensed milk, 20 cents a pint.

Almost every kind of food is as cheap here as anywhere, and the most of it is cheaper; and what is more important still, it is all good. I have been around to all the shops and am sure that I never saw such vegetables before. The wheat of Palestine is the very best in the world: but good mills are needed to grind it.

Nov. 9th. To-day, Mrs. Floyd, Arshea, and myself, have been to spend the day with Mrs. Brinton. She is one of the finest women I ever saw, and the most sorrowful. She gave up a beautiful home in America, and came here to find her husband hopelessly insane. Her son came with her, but has now returned to America to sell his farm and come back to Palestine.

Mr. Brinton has been an honest, hard working man; has made a great deal of money and settled all his children well. He is not living here with his wife now, but has bought a farm at Introna, half way between Jaffa and Jerusalem. He, poor man, will never recover.

When I see her, my sorrow sinks into insignificance. I am glad to be of some comfort to this good woman. She has a good house which her husband built on the Jaffa road, in a most charming spot.

She also has a large lot of good land. There is another woman with her, and they two live alone, and are in no danger of marauders nor tramps. When I visit her again I shall take a sketch of her place and send it to you. We did not return till after dark. It was just a nice walk; and we felt as safe as though we were in Boston, and safer.

We have had the greatest rainfall ever known in this country. The oldest inhabitants never heard of such a rain at this season.

It fell in torents for three days. The brooks and wells are all full, and everybody is rejoicing. As we went to Mrs. Brinton's we saw the farmers plowing in the rich black soil, singing merrily, and praising Allah for this special blessing. They will now, in November, plant potatoes, beans, peas, onions, etc.; and vegetables will be plenty, judging from the favorable prospect at planting.

My appetite is good, and I relish the vegetables and fruit here as I never knew how to enjoy food before. I have found no one here without a good appetite; and if you take into consideration the healthy food and splendid climate, it accounts for the good appetite. Business is good; and I already find so much that I wish to do, it seems to me if there were ten of me I might begin to accomplish something.

Yesterday we called upon the Americans from Illinois: there are twenty of them in all. I find they are intelligent cultivated people. They are in sympathy with us in our views, and have come here to see the kingdom of God established. They invited us to come often and study the Arabic as with them and eat at their table, where I should be welcome. They have a beautiful house, fitted up with exquisite taste and homelike. They have three or four servants, plenty of money, and seem to live on the common interest principle. They are kind, polite, and generous; and the people here like them very much. They thought it was a singular coincidence that they should find me here with similar views. One hundred more are expected to come soon.

Any one having money to invest in building had better come here and use it. I assure you that houses are in good demand at high prices. I think rent is higher here than in Boston; and people are glad to pay one year in advance. The Americans paid two hundred and sixty dollars [$260] in advance for their house, and were very fortunate to get it at that.

They tell me that Mr. Durgin [a stone mason] can get all the work he wishes to do in building up this new city. There are a great many buildings going up outside of the walls of Jerusalem. The sound of the trowel, the hammer and saw, are heard, and a new city is springing into life. It is, indeed, the commencement of the "New Jerusalem," coming down from heaven; just as every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. James i. 17. "The Lord doth build up Jerusalem:" though men are his agents in doing the work: "He gathereth together the outcasts of Israel;" and yet means are used to bring them from the east, west, north and south. Psa. cxlvii. 2. It is true, there is no wall around this new city, and there need not be; for, "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein." Zech. ii. 4. This work will go on and improvements will continue to be made until "Jerusalem is made a praise in the earth." Isa. lxii. 7.

Land is rising in value, as people are leaving the old city within the walls and building beautiful houses outside, where there is room and a fine location for building up a city. I begin to see the glory of Israel. The interest in this heavenly country grows upon me daily, and my love for the Lord's land increases. The beauty of the country around Jerusalem is wonderful. I must dissent from those who see nothing delightful in and about Jerusalem. There is beauty and sublimity in every place; and, in fact, so far as I am able to judge, throughout the whole promised land. Nature has made it "beautiful for situation," and "the glory of all lands," in truth.

Nov. 10th. This morning I set out in company with my friends to visit the little village of Lifta, two miles away. We started at eight o'clock, walked to the pleasant home of Mrs. Brinton, where we stopped for half an hour and enjoyed the hospitality of our kind friends. We reached the home of our host about ten o'clock and received a cordial welcome. Mats and pillows to recline upon were spread on the green grass, and a jug of cool sweet water from a fountain near by was invigorating after our long walk.

After resting a short time coffee was served after the Turkish mode, which is enjoyed by nearly all Europeans. The time passed very agreeably, the ladies chatting merrily, while the gentlemen regaled themselves with their cigarettes. As we had a Bedouin in our company, we listened to many interesting narratives of Bedouin life for amusement.

At two o'clock dinner was brought and served on mats spread on the grass. I had some doubts about my appetite for a regular native dinner; but I must say that the sweet odor of the very relishable food overcame all my sensitive objections, and I ate very heartily. We had roasted lamb, stuffed with rice and herbs, and a variety of vegetables, stuffed with meat and rice. The flavor of these dishes exceeded anything I had ever tasted in any European style of cooking. For dessert we had olives and the finest of grapes. As this was the season of a Mohammedan feast, we were expected to feast literally. At four o'clock we took our leave of these kind friends, and climbing up the steep hills, returned to the city, stopping at Mrs. Brinton's to tea.

Mr. Floyd is so well acquainted with the people, and the manners and customs of the country, and is so much respected by all wherever we go, that it is a real pleasure to visit his friends and travel in this interesting land in his company.

Live for Something.

Live for something, be not idle,
Look about thee for employ,
Sit not down to empty dreaming;
Labor is the sweetest joy.
Folded hands are ever weary,
Selfish hearts are never gay;
Live for Him Bethlehem gathered—
Arise for Him, while you may.

Scatter blessings in thy pathway,
Gentle words and cheering smiles,
Better are than gold or silver,
With their gold-dispelling wiles.
And a pleasant sunshine fall to
Ever on the grateful ones,
For thy sympathy and kindness
Sin-filled world be darkened hearts.

Hearts there are oppressed and weary,
Bring to each a sympathy;
With the words of hope and comfort,
Give, and thy reward shall be
Joy into the soul returning,
From the perfect Fountain Head—
Freely as thou freely givest
Shall the grateful light be shed.

I am Coming Keep Looking Up!

A little girl who was playing near a precipice suddenly felt the ground give way beneath her feet and before she had time to spring back to a place of safety had slipped over the brow of the terrible abyss. With the instinct of despair and that of love of life implanted in us all, she snatched at the grass and tall weeds within her reach. Her little fingers dug deep into the ground and stayed her downward course. There she hung suspended in the air.

Moments seemed ages, till she heard a voice which sounded very far off, saying in a firm, encouraging tone, "I am coming; keep looking up!"

Instinctively she obeyed; she never glanced downward, but clung faster to her only chance of safety. Again the voice—this time nearer—spoke hopefully.

"I am coming; keep looking up!"

In another instant two strong hands had seized her own in a firm clasp, and she felt herself drawn gently and cautiously upward. Then she was lifted into two great loving arms, and she closed her eyes upon her father's breast.

It was now his turn to look up. He did so in thankfulness to the great God in heaven, who had preserved his child.

Dear reader, where are you standing? Is it upon the sandy foundation, that may give way at any time, or are your feet upon the Rock? If not yet safe, oh, let me urge you to look up to the great Deliverer, whose arms are outstretched in love, anxious to save, and able to save to the uttermost all who come to him.

John Pelleaux.

John was one of twelve children, the son of a small farmer in a village called Ugborough, Eng.

He was a Christian boy, persevering and industrious. When he was fourteen he assisted the parish clerk in singing and in other parts of the worship.

At last, when the old clerk died, John hoped to take his place, but this was not to be. The post was given to another, and the boy, at seventeen, set out from home to earn his living elsewhere.

All his clothing was carried in a small bundle, swung on a stick over his shoulder. A few pieces of money that his mother had given him with prayerful heart as she bade him good by, were all he possessed.

He went to the city of Exeter. No success attended him there, but he looked with delight upon the books that were temptingly displayed in the booksellers' windows, and at the beautiful cathedral.

A longing to become a scholar came over him. He trudged on to Oxford, two hundred miles, eating dry bread, and sleeping in barns or haystacks. At the college he was hired by the cook as a scullion. He must carry in the coal, and scour all the pans and kettles, but his books were opened before him as he worked. He must learn.

This, after a time, attracted attention, and he was admitted to the school as a poor scholar. He worked hard and soon took a high stand in his class. He did become a great scholar, and a preacher and writer of eminence.

The boys who love God, and work faithfully to please him, are sure to make their way upward, to places of honor and usefulness.

Prideaux died at the age of seventy-two.

Talks with Young People.—Self-Conceit.

No one likes a conceited person, and no persons are so unhappy or give so much trouble to their friends as those who are that way disposed.

When I was about twenty-one years old I had a fellow-clerk, who was a very competent business man, but who was always unpopular, and constantly getting into difficulty with those above and beneath him, because he was so conceited. He imagined that he knew all that was worth knowing, and that he could do anything that any one else (no matter how old or experienced they were) could do. He was constantly assuming, and presuming, to such an extent that he was often the laughing-stock of all the establishment.

He was an excellent salesman, but would soon disgust a customer by his conceited talk, assumption of airs, and self-assertions.

He left our house to take a position as buyer for a larger establishment than his success was very short-lived. He assumed too much, and would not counsel with his employers. So he was caught one season with a large stock of goods on hand, at a time when the prices were falling, and, as he was too conceited to take advice, he had all the responsibility resting on himself and was discharged in disgrace.

He has been in at least a dozen positions since I have known him, and is now far below the position he held ten years ago. He has failed in everything he ever undertook. And yet he is a man of unexceptionable moral character, as well as an industrious, well-meaning citizen, who has been an active church member ever since I knew him.

The trouble with him was that when a youth he imbibed notions that he was of considerable importance, and that whatever he said or done was worthy of the highest appreciation and commendation. He had no one to teach him humility, nor was he in his early life placed in a position to give him to understand that he was only of importance as his work proved him to be competent and justly worthy of commendation.

It is my opinion that the foundation of all good characteristics are laid before we are eighteen or twenty years old. And so I believe that we must realize that we are in need of advice, and that we are entitled only to the position among our fellows that they give us, not to the one we imagine ourselves entitled to.

A conceited young man does not receive that attention and interest that business men, or older people, bestow upon those who acknowledge their ignorance and show a willingness to learn. Indeed, I have often felt that self-asserting and conceited young clerks needed to learn very much more than their fellow-clerks who were always ready to acknowledge their ignorance and seek information from all sources at their command.

There is a great difference between self-conceit and self-respect. While, therefore, all dislike to see conceit in a young person, every one admires a youth who respects himself, and who will not be influenced to do or say anything that will cause him to lose his self-respect.

A CONTROVERTED SCRIPTURE EXPLAINED.

That the much controverted Scripture in Phil. i. 21, etc., does not show a dual man, as is supposed, neither will it prove that any part of man will exist in a conscious state between the death of the body, and the resurrection of the same, can easily be seen by the context. For, Paul is writing about the preaching of the gospel, which is admitted by many, to consist of the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus the Christ. But from a Bible standpoint the things concerning the kingdom of God should be added.

Paul says, "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife: and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel: but the other preach Christ of faction, not sincerely."

So it is the gospel Paul referred to, and where in the gospel of Christ can we find anything said about consciousness in the death state?

But the gospel of Christ is the good news of a coming forth from the death state, to an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God: and this is what Paul contended for, when he said, "of the hope of the resurrection of the dead am I called in question." Acts xxiii. 6.

"And now I stand here to be judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: . . . and for this hope I am accused by the Jews, O king? Why is it judged incredible with you, if God doth raise the dead? Acts xxvi. 6–8. Not a word said about consulting the dust man.

Thus we see that Paul's "earnest expectation and hope," was based upon the coming of the Lord when he shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. iv. 17, 17.

Paul also says, "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by life, or by death." So if Paul die, Christ would be magnified, or if he live until Jesus shall descend from the heavens, still Christ would be magnified. So he says, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Now was this gain exclusively in favor of Paul?

Certainly not. For Christ would be magnified, by Paul's life, or by his death.

Shall not the master receive a gain by the servant's labor?

And when we speak of Christ and the church, we speak of them as one, because Christ is the head and the church is the body, so there is a unit. This is in accordance with the prayer of Jesus. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us." John xvii. 21.

So Christ and the church united into one are the gainers by Paul's life, or his death; for Paul had resolved to live for Christ, or, to die in his service. So in either case Christ would be magnified, and he knew not which to choose, wherein he could magnify Christ to the best advantage.

Paul then says, "But I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ" (at his coming).

The word depart here, could not mean death or dissolution, for the Greek word is analusis, which means to be loosed again, or return, or returning; the same word (analusis) is used in Luke xii. 20, and is there rendered return, "Be you like men waiting for their master, when he will return." Jesus taught his disciples that he would come again, or return, the angels also announced this at the time of his ascension; Paul also believed this doctrine and taught it to others, and was looking for, and waiting for the Savior from heaven, when his mortal body would put on immortality, and so he would "ever be with the Lord."

Why the translators did not render the word (analusis) here as they did in Luke? I know not except it be to support the heathen dogma of consciousness while in the death state, for the translators of both the old and new versions were believers in this fable. But the Diaglott reads, "I am indeed, hard pressed by the two things: I have an earnest desire for the returning, and being with Christ, since it is very much to be preferred, but to remain in the flesh is more requisite on your account."

It was to the church at Philippi that Paul (accompanied by Timothy) was writing, and what was written to them, for their edification can be applied to the church in general, and the church was not perfected, for others were to believe on the Lord Jesus through their word, so we see it was better for the church, for Paul to remain in his mortal state, than for Jesus to return then; and so God is longsuffering to usward—not willing that any should perish but that all should have eternal life.

FIGHT THE GOOD FIGHT OF FAITH.

"Fight!" This is the Captain's orders to all you who have fallen into the ranks to follow him.

"You have professed a good profession, before many witnesses;" you have been called to eternal life; lay hold on that life. "Fight the good fight of faith." You are charged in the sight of God to do this, charged before Jesus, who witnessed the same good confession in the presence of Pilate, to keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, unto the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Are you doing it? Are you "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints?" Or are you, like many others in by-gone days, leaving your first love, falling away, deserting, fainting? Have you cast aside your weapons, and become silent and indifferent spectators of the battle? Do you think and say "that it does no good to fight? that it is of no use to contend for the faith?"

Then, you are not obeying orders. The Captain says, "contend." He commands you to "fight," to labor, to bear, to be patient, to instruct in meekness those that oppose themselves, that they may repent and acknowledge the truth.

You are to be ready to give a reason for the hope that is in you! Can you do all this and keep your mouths shut? never open them to proclaim the riches of God's grace?

What would an earthly commander, untried, think of such soldiers? What would be done with the men who in battle should say, "it won't do any good to shoot bullets at the enemy, it will do no good to strike right and left with my sword, when we meet the foe—I will just throw down my weapons and pretend I am fighting by marching along with my comrades?" You know they would be branded "cowards," court-martialed and slain.

It does do good to talk. God's weapons are mighty ones, and he has put them into our hands to use. We are to ask no questions as to how much we shall accomplish—the good soldier obeys orders without question as to what amount of good his individual efforts are to bring about.

An old brother in Jasper county dropped a few thoughts in a store; the seed thus sown has sprung up, and eight souls have become the fruit: and of these, one is publicly proclaiming the Word.

And how or what the end may be,
It's Heaven's heart may know;
What wide events my words may bear,
How cause Faith's holy flowers to blow.

Then fight on. Be not discouraged. Sow the seed. Reap the fields, and you shall come to your Master, bearing your sheaves.

A MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

At the residence of Brother John C. Woodruff, Elizabeth, N. J., Brother Joseph A. Colon was married to Martha S. Stedman, the step-daughter of Bro. W.

THE CEREMONY.

Young friends, the life union you are about to consummate, by marriage, has been pronounced "honorable in all."

Our Creator saw and said, "It is not good for man to be alone"—even in Eden; hence, "an helpmeet for him" was made; and this from a part of him, to identify the male and female, in man—the generic term for the race—"They two shall be one."

The Lord—with the residue of the Spirit—made one! Wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed. Mal. ii. 14–16; Matt. xix. 3–6.

The height of honor attends this marriage relation, by its having been made the crowning consummation of the bliss of Eden; and that, amid all the bloom and beauty and abounding blessedness of Paradise—the first human home; where "all was very good."

But, meek-eyed faith peering through the ages, in the light of promise, sees a yet greater glory at the marriage of the Lamb. Then the Heavenly Bridegroom and Bride will be joined amid the splendors of humanity's final home in Paradise regained—"the kingdom prepared (for those thus blessed) from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 34.

This outline of honor to marriage in Paradise lost, and Paradise restored, finds its plentitude in the intermediate and prophetic nation of Israel—Jehovah's choice. It was made the foreshadow of the kingdom, when "all things" will have become "new." Heb. viii. 6; ix. 24; x. 1.

"I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord." Jer. xxxi. 32. He sustained this relation to them in his tenderness, his affection and abounding provision. It was water from the rock; bread from heaven; and the protection of the overshadowing—shekinah—cloud by day; and a fire by night.

Then, after the example of all family and fatherhood "in heaven and earth" (Eph. iii. 15) you Joseph are to be an husband to Martha, and you Martha "an helpmeet" for Joseph. Thus may the Lord fill your basket and supply your store; and crown your marriage life with abundant blessing. Amen.

The prayer followed. This service was supplemented by a marriage supper of Earth's choicest viands, of which some score of "like precious faith" partook with good cheer in the joy of "the blessed hope," and in view of the good "things prepared for those who love him."

J. B. COX.

P. S.—The above brief outline of this subject seems imperfect, except as supplemented by its application.

1. The celibitate state, is pronounced "not good." Therefore such as choose this single condition, choose an inferior, or less favored, plane of life.

2. They may thus not only ignore "the wisdom and goodness of God;" but also enforce a like lesson the other sex; and so on society.

3. They should remember the history of the past, and see that a world of wealth, and "the honor that cometh from men," leaves them (so far) below their proper standard of manhood.

Or shall the precedents of the past, and "the wisdom from above," be all lost upon them?

Respectfully and affectionately submitted. J. B. C.

Poetry.

[The following beautiful poem we take from Harper's Magazine for April, 1862. We have altered a few lines in the first verse to make it agree more literally with our Savior's language. It is not as death, but when he comes again, that his people meet him in the many-mansioned home.]

THE PLACE.

"I go to prepare a place for you."

O Holy Place! whose name and where thou art!
The place that waits our well-beloved dead
When hence we sleep to the unseen land,
Who send us word back to the aching heart,
As if, perchance to angels by adrift
The shroud cracks—rolls away—we rise and, lo!
Thou stand!

The cold that comes up from earth apart,
Where did he set thee, O thou Holy Place!
Made he a new world in the heaven—high home,
So far from this poor earth that even yet
Its feet-glad rays have not reached and the space
That lies between us, not the slightest thing
On the old journey to make us tired?

But no! O, my soul, thou hast forgotten
Less than the dust—the mote in the sunbeam old,
Dark from far years, in making ripe what rolled.

Thou hast not left this planet on which it lies—
Swift-whirled Earth, that, like two thirds of cold,
Waste silver waste of misty moonbeam,
From zone to zone lights—dead as the forehead
And what it knows, by some unconscious sense
Some instinct, that puts reason silver far.
Some swift clairvoyance that unsubdueth space,
All men shall say, when suddenly by fate or grace,
"Behold! behold! the tent is upreared! where—Oh! be quick! for we would—the Place! the Place!"

Though 'tis the heaven of heavens which now encases
Our Christ, he shall have—made balance meet,
While earth—the lowest—the Kingdom—One to greet.
Then shall Heaven own at last his soul,
And from his belt unloose the blazing sword,
While pale proud Antichrist, with horrible dread,
His jewelled crown drops lonely at his feet,
And Lyre strikes her Lamb's most rapturous chord.

O Earth, hid all your lonely riches rejoice!
Be all into singing, all ye silent hills!
And ye, tumultuous—roar, make quick replies!
Let ice-remotest desert find a voice!
The whole creation to its center thrills,
For the new light of Heaven is in the sky!

THE PROBLEM OF HUMAN LIFE HERE AND HEREAFTER.

B. K. BOWLES.

A work of 500 pages under the above title has recently fallen into my hands; put forth by A. Wilford Hall & Co., 139 E. Eighth St., N. Y., by virtue of the purchase of which I also became a subscriber to a monthly sheet call the "Literary Microcosm," which in its teachings is an attendant on the same 500 page book. Both are gotten up in excellent typographical style, and written with a vigorous and lively pen, and were I to divide his book into three parts, I would say that one was against the wave theory of Sounds; one against the Darwin theory of Evolution; and one to the Doctrine of the "Immortality of the Soul." The first does not interest me much; the second is a vigorous and successful onslaught against Darwinism, written with so much logical force as to lay in the shade the theory that man was ever once any more of a monkey than he is at present: or that he has obtained his present status among the animal creation by having passed in regular gradations through the various tribes below that animal. These two teach us nothing about eternal life; but the third or last proposes to teach us the doctrine of the "immortality of the soul," and solve the problem of life hereafter. The last is the one we propose now to examine. And to undertake to measure swords with the logic which flows from so free a pen, might appear like presumption in me; something like a pigmy against a giant; yet under the panoply of the maxim which says, "Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just," I may with my sling and pebble from the brook advance to test the virtue of such rude weapons as has fallen to my lot.

His cogent arguments we say have upset the Darwin theory of evolution in a masterly style; and his logic on the wave theory of sounds, has plausibly taken us into a new theory in that science; on both of these the Bible is silent; and so far as we are concerned we leave them to the determination of his versatile pen. But we disclaim against his teachings on immortality; a subject on which the Bible is not silent, and when hammered out and rolled and dilated upon into the fanciful theories of the theology of our day and called immortal-soul-ism, nullifies the doctrine of the resurrection, is in direct departure from Scripture testimony and seriously darkens the counsels of the word of life. We cannot of course follow him in his copious logic and profuse assertions too, but for shortening will make such extracts as we think will not do him injustice. He tells us that man is possessed of a dual organism: the one is visible, animal, and corporeal; the other invisible, immaterial, incorporeal, yet a substantive entity: immortal in its nature, with eyes, feet, ears, tongue brain, &c., in fact the exact counterpart of the corporeal; that all animal nature is thus dually organized, but man alone is an exceptional or preferred case, who had, "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" and thus became a "living soul," by which [page 61] he says Adam had transferred to him a drop or atom of God's own living substance; how large that drop was he does not tell us, neither does he tell us (I speak with reverence) of the capacity of the source which could furnish an atom for each one of the millions of multitudes which have at various times been on this earth, but we suppose that he would say that all of Adam's posterity inherited this incorporeal essence of immortality which Adam got a drop of at creation. Then how about Eve's posterity? she was made of a slip from the corporeal part of Adam, which was not immortalized: and if there is an incorporeal organization which is the exact counterpart of the corporeal, how did that slip corporeal of Adam (the rib) or its incorporeal far single impart to Eve all his varied organs with a few omissions, and supply their places with organs which he did not have? He knew of no other organization but of the corporeal, for he said of her, "this is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh." The words in the Hebrew Bible [nephesh chayyâh] translated "living soul" in relation to man occur four times before that in the 1st chap. 20, 21, 24, 30 verses and are applied to the beasts, fishes and fowls, and called "living creatures;" so we see that the other part of animal creation had these "living soul" words applied to them also; who would suppose that an author would do more than give the creative process to the hand of creation? to have repeated it of the horse, the dog, the ape and all the various tribes of animality would have been endless. All were no doubt created by the same process, for we see with our own eyes that all go out of existence by the same process; that all turn alike to dust; and the Bible declares that "man hath no pre-eminence over them." Eccl. iii. 19.

But to turn to some of Mr. Hall's illusions. He says, the water which falls on the wheel turns the wheel; and asks what moves the water? He says it is an invisible power behind the water, immaterial and cannot be grasped; yet it is a substance (gravity) and through the water which is a medium of its power turns the wheel; and so of steam and its machinery, and so of the magnet; well let it be so: but when this wheel wears out, and its organism can no longer evoke that power out of the laboratory of nature it returns unspent and unimpaired to the general store house from which it came. Now repair the old wheel; and who would suppose that the exact, same individual cut off power which had once worked the old wheel would come back and turn the new? and then the power of the magnet; remove from us all metals, and what would we know of that power? and how many powers of nature may there now be of which we know nothing till the ingenuity of man construct some organism with which that power may coalesce and be evoked from the hidden resources of nature?

Let us take a cursory view of animal life. The new born animal creeps with lungs that never breathed, but fully formed to assimilate with and submit to the power of atmospheric agency when it meets with it, by virtue of the adage that "nature abhors a vacuum," a rude maxim, but which means in the present case, that in a vacancy where there is no air, air will rush in at an opening is made for it, as soon as the nostrils meet with this vital principle of life (the atmosphere) nature breathes into this vacuum through the nostrils the breath of life and the animal organism becomes a living soul or being; which could not be said of it if any organic mishap were to occur; this sudden rush of air into the lungs is momentarily an overcharge, which ensures a thorough injection into all the ramifications of the lungs, and they secrete a portion of vitality therefrom which is imparted to the neighboring organs, and the refuse expelled by muscular force; this muscular ejection creates a vacuum again, and its withdrawal a repetition, and on the principle of action and reaction; continues so long as the manifold organs of the corporeal system work harmoniously together. This we may call one view of "life here." But when such disorganization occurs as that this action and reaction cannot go on, then the breath is taken away, or withdrawn; and "returns to God who gave it;" by returning to his general repository from which the loan was made; they die and return to the dust. But on the principle of the new-made water wheel its rebuilding is promised through a resurrection of the dead, to all of the right faith who by patient continuance in well doing seek for immortality (not who had it breathed in storeation) and reconstructed on a similar or proper organization, like the new-made wheel, this new-made animal machine will catch its native power again in a bettered condition, not liable to the taking away of the breath process, or the return to the dust decree: for this corruptible (which is the corporeal) will put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality and demands of the grave be forever satisfied. On the immortal soul theory basis what advantage is there in having the demands of the grave silenced? with them immortality goes on irrespective of the grave's voracious claims. This we may call one view of "life hereafter." And who wants a better life than a perfect animal organization in a deathless constitution when the earth shall be renewed? A problem which Omnipotence only can solve as we shall see.

We have no acquaintance with Mr. Hall except through his book, and should he see this, hereby disclaim any wish to do otherwise in the freedom we take with it than to test that part of it which he has devoted to the immortality of the soul, in which we shall show he egregiously errs. We hold in reverence the word of God: and shall endeavor to continue to do so not searching for any thing more reliable: and to say we believe in it, and not believe its teachings, when delivered in words of fair import, or to attempt to distill our opinions from its plain teachings where we should have faith, we repudiate. There is this difference between opinion and faith: opinions are simply mental conclusions, or thoughts of the mind and may be correct or incorrect: they may be based on conjecture, or on reason induced by what we may suppose to be good logic; and in the absence of practical demonstration, or reliable testimony is often times the best we can do. Reliance on testimony is faith, and when that testimony is indisputable, in the scale of information it exceeds opinion and approaches almost to knowledge which is the highest grade of all intellectuality. Suppose I tell a believer in the magnetic power, that that substance has the power to attract and repel metals according to the arrangement of its polarity; I exhaust my powers of reason to convince him, but all to no purpose; a third person hearing my report believes it; and consequently comes as near knowing it as it is possible to come without an ocular demonstration: such I then give; and both being convinced have advanced to the knowledge of the fact themselves: the one from opinion, the other from faith.

Now Mr. Hall argues to convince his readers of the immortality of the soul; but he does not prove it in any way, neither can he prove it, for the proper source of proof is wanting; the proving process (ocular demonstration) reaches into the next life; it therefore can't be proven till the next life comes. The next trustworthy source of information is testimony: and there is no testimony which can take us into the next life but that of Omniscience; and he gives us no proof from that source, therefore his immortal soul doctrine is but an opinion, the lowest grade of intellectuality. We honestly think that Mr. Hall is in error and a man that "wandereth out of the way of understanding." Prov. xxi. 16. Yet we do not suppose him to be an open disbeliever, or rejector of Divine testimony; but in the day of retribution it will not require that stretch of infidelity alone to fail on the roll of acceptance: simple unbelief is fatal. The teachings of the Bible as to the origin of man, his nature, proclivities and destiny are given to us in the plainest terms on the sacred page; were it otherwise, scientific men only would learn the way of life. "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return" are plain words. So also "Him that believeth on me will I raise up at the last day;" their explanation requires no logic. These Bible teachings we say are for our guidance and are plain, and we do not meet with them in the attractive language of the literature of our day, but are often positive, literal, figurative, and parabolic, and given us in various striking lines of thought for our edification, any one of which we feel always justified in adopting and paraphrasing for illustration. In the 7th chapter of Matthew we have recorded a short dialogue which though short is pointed. It is the case when one or more are arraigned at the final tribunal and undertake to argue their own case; "Lord have we not taught in thy name, cast out devils in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" The judicial sentence which follows is familiar to all. Let us now suppose that the time of an immortal soul theorist has arrived, or that of any other unbeliever in plain words, and the time of his reckoning has come; and for the the sake of illustration let his name be "Wilford."

Well Wilford, how have you spent your time?

O, Judge! I have been striving to improve the talent which nature gave me, I have dived into the depths of logic and have proven the problem of "human life hereafter" by proving the doctrine of of the "immortality of the soul," all in accordance with our holy religion you know.

I am aware that nature gave you talent, and at the same time taught you that education was second nature and I also gave a Book for the instruction of mankind in which I said much about the immortality of the soul, has your education been according to that Book?

Yes Judge, all your ministers have read my writings on the Immortal soul question and have pronounced them a bulwark of defence against materialism.

My ministers did you say? I know that some 1800 years ago and more, I made some ministers. I inspired all those I made so that they could not err: have any been made since?

Well Judge, you know that you promised to be with your ministers to the end of the world, and those made so long ago have died out, and to verify your word I of course thought you would be with their successors.

I made no successors; human executions have tried to abolish the creed of those I did make, but I have been with them and brought their word safely through all opposing efforts, down to your day, and you and everybody else might have been lettered by more attentively considering it. We might amplify but stop.

But we cannot let Mr. Hall's book off yet. Let us turn again to the corporeal structure of man, the body has a multitude of organs: with the feet the body walks, with the hands it works, with the eyes it sees, etc., and with the brain it thinks. How could it do the manifold actions which it performs, if it was all body, without these appendages? Did you ever know any body to see who was deprived of the organ of the eyes? or to think where there was no brain?

The brain of a man is said to be considerably more than that of a woman, and to exceed more than twice that of any other animal; how could man do this extraordinary amount of thinking except on that hypothesis? and why could not God give to man this extraordinary thought with this extraordinary brain, as well as to give to beasts lesser thought with lesser brain? The thinking then belongs to the brain, and the brain to the flesh; and the apostle says Rom. viii. see margin, "the thinking of the flesh is enmity to God." So we see it is the flesh that thinks. How then can Mr. Hall say, as he does on page 72, that at death, "that which did the thinking, this physical organism of the real man has made its exit?" Then it should not have been said of Isaac and Jacob when they died, that they gave up the ghost, or breath, or spirit; but to agree with his theory it should have read that they gave up the body and went off.

Abraham said "I know that I am but dust and ashes," but Mr. Hall says "there is another organization besides the dust and ashes part." Shall we believe Abraham or Mr. Hall? When Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead, was not all of that which he called Lazarus beneath the sod? did he call him down or up?

Psa. cxlvi. 4. says of the operations of death, "his breath goeth forth," or leaveth him, "in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. xlix. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them, and their beauty shall consume in the grave." "Man though he is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." Can Mr. Hall's logic overbalance words of Holy Writ, logic which we have shown can take us no higher in the scale of intellectuality than mere opinion, and can his own ipse dixit with which his book abounds add to the value of his logic? Verily the words of inspiration are applicable which say, "if they speak not according to testimony, it is because there is no light in them."

"See what a task the work to assess
In proof of that that can't be proven."

Now if in the providence of God it was in his arrangement to turn man to dust whence he came, that he was nothing superior to the beasts, that in the day of his death his thoughts perished, what words should we want it expressed in? If these Scripture quotations will not answer the purpose, there are no plainer words, and he could not have informed us of it at all. So long as man can give us no practical exhibition of the events of the future, we shall take the testimony which errs not, though its revelation brings much sadness.

But again to some of the varied operations of animal life. There is the seven year theory of waste and replenishing to which Mr. Hall alludes, we know that waste does occur, and replenishing must take place; but at what periodic intervals it matters not. The process of replenishing is done mainly through the agency of the stomach, one of the corporeal organs, which has the power of vitalizing its food, and even though it may be altogether vegetable, and converting it into that which is altogether animal, and the entire animal organization being more powerful than the replenishing layers which come in piece by piece it would it after the same old model, having the same features, color, bodily scars and disorders, and if you please the same thoughts. All the animal organs have a function to perform, and a skilful anatomist can show for each its practical operation; all of which are visible except the function of thought, and who can show any other practical duty assigned to the brain except to think? Let a fracture be made in the skull whereby pressure is made on the brain, and consciousness and thought stops; let it be relieved and they return.

This is a practical demonstration to knowledge (the highest grade of intellectuality) that it is the brain that thinks and the brain belongs to the flesh, and that its thoughts are the thoughts of the flesh, as well as the works are the works of the flesh, as the Bible says of them.

Paul says "In me that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good thing;" all allusion to no other organization but that of the flesh, and putting that flesh in apposition with himself. Can any one tell us how it was that Paul, who taught from inspiration, was intellectually so far behind Mr. Hall's book as to teach nothing about life here but that which is in the flesh, nor any about the life hereafter, except through the resurrection, when the corruptible will be raised into incorruption, and this mortal into immortality? Verbum Sat.

We will give some more evidencies from Holy Writ of life hereafter coming only through the resurrection. Paul says in contending for the resurrection of the dead, in 1 Cor. xv. "If Christ be not raised then all they who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" to remain in the dust is to perish. "God so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Eternal life is here put as the opposite of perishing. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life," having eternal life on no other issue but that of the resurrection. But according to immortal soul theorists, eternal life was in man before the days of Jesus, though Paul says, "Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light by the gospel." It was not left therefore for Mr. Hall's book to bring it to light; that system is visionary, but the Bible proposes a practical reality; a something which is supported by the teachings of unerring wisdom.

Paul says to the Philippians that he strove in order that he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Why need he have striven so if he knew he was possessed of life already? Jesus says, Matt. xiv. 14, "Narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it," but according to Mr. Hall's book the way is very broad, and everybody is in it now."

We are informed that man was made in the image of the Creator; Jesus was in our image, and we are also told that he was in the express image of his Father's person. By this we are informed of the personality of God, and who is there of sufficient constructive ingenuity to organize a better form for all the purposes and enjoyments of life than that which we can suppose was given to Adam in the maturity of his youth? or who can add another organ which would be useful, or one which would not mar the beauty of the present group? and though this form is now cursed on account of sin, there are not many of us who desire to give up the life here even, with all its corporeal imperfections. How much more enticing, then, is the prospect of life hereafter, as taught us by Jesus Christ through the resurrection of the dead and fully proven as far as divine words can prove any thing, by the positive testimony of Jesus and his apostles to a new corporeal birth, not by the same natural process of birth and growth as we attain to present body or organism, but by being raised as Jesus was raised from the dead to die no more; a spiritual birth or a body given not by nature but by the spirit of God, into a new and perfect state, when the earth itself shall have its curse removed, and death—sin's wages—be abolished. Who wants a better life than a life like this which is promised to all those who are counted worthy of it on God's plan as revealed in the words of Holy Writ, which Mr. Hall has not read any too much of; and with such a prospect before the mind of what use are the visionary teachings of immortal-soulism for which there is no Bible proof, nor can logic afford any practical demonstration of? I do not call myself a materialist of any school, yet for aught I know the theology of the day may say I have reasoned enough to put me on such a list, but what do these Bible words teach us? Let them be materialism or immaterialism, are they to go for nothing? I have been endeavoring for forty years and more to reconcile my faith in Bible teachings and with these teachings before me have believed that we are thankful it has been vouchsafed. I prefer to stand on these, till "the unerring Wisdom informs us that he does not know all things at first, that the ways of men have exercised him that he may become more like and more conformed to the mind of that book which he has been so zealous as to circulate; and if Mr. Hall and others prefer to remain in outside till the day comes which alone can test the practical truth of these books it may be too late to plead an arrest of judgment. Let us see it becomes better to suffered to remain on the statute books, duplicated and intensified by many similar ones and endorsed by Jesus who said the "words I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life," the same shall judge you in the last day.

Such teachings as these cannot be set aside by the fertile imagination and profuse logic of man, so long as divine testimony assures us that "the word of the Lord abideth forever, and this is that word which by the gospel is preached." It might be wisdom on the part of many to recant such "philosophy and vain deceit," and oppositions to the truth which are science falsely so-called, and adopt those of infinite wisdom, who alone can deal with the future as with the past, and on the basis of the resurrection has given the only assurance of the life to come.

Brevities.

During some recent excavations in the neighborhood of Pompeii thirty human skeletons were found. One of these, which was lying at full length, appeared to be grasping a purse, in which were a gold coin, six silver and ten bronze coins, ear-drops, pearls and precious stones. Near the other skeletons were found coins of gold and silver belonging to the reign of Galba, Tiberius, Nero and Domitian. Gold bracelets, ear-drops, pearls, and precious stones were found with them.

The length of time that a human being can live without food, but with water at will, has been shown, in more than one case, to be about forty days at least, and how much longer the fasters could have held out is unknown. Now the case of Mary Ann Hermann, an inmate of an insane asylum at Charleston, Ind., who persistently refused to take food, shows that the human frame can stand fasting from four 6th days and 12 hours. She drank water freely, and her death after that long fast was painless.

The fatal results of a quarrel are described in a letter published by a contemporary. The writer says: "The faithful minister has frequent occasion to refer to the uncertainties of life, and to the retribution which is to follow persistence in sin—here, or certainly hereafter. His illustrations are sometimes regarded as purely imaginary or much exaggerated. But here is a well authenticated tragedy which is now current as having occurred only last week. At a barn raising on the plantation of Major Bess, in Rowan county, North Carolina, John Held and Peter Joseph, two of the workmen on the building, got into a quarrel. Held threw an axe at Joseph, the keen blade splitting his head in two and killing him instantly. As Held threw the axe he lost his foothold and fell from the building, breaking his neck. Three men were on the ground at the time (James Cephas, Richard Willey, and Ned Bloodgood), raising a heavy log. Cephas became so excited at the tragedy that he lost his hold on the log, and it fell, crushing Willey to death. Thus, of the five men at work on the building, only two remained alive."

SEAL AND SERIZIN.

An English traveler recently visited these mountains, and thought he would see if the story told about them in the twenty-seventh chapter of Deuteronomy was true. You will remember that Moses placed the twelve tribes, six on one of these mountains, and six on the other, and each set spoke certain blessings and curses which were distinctly understood by the people in the valley between. This traveler got a companion to climb Gerizim, while he staid up Ebal. When so far apart, that their hoarse looked like mere dots on the hill-side, each halted, and one began to read aloud from a book, feeling, as he expressed it, "as if I might as well address the House of Commons from Lambeth Pa'ace." He paused, and great was his surprise to distinctly hear the words of the twenty-third Psalm, from the little dot on the opposite hill side, and this in spite of conversation carried on by some Turkish soldiers near. On meeting again, it was found that each had heard the other perfectly, though they spoke in ordinary tones.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 12, 1882. NO. 14.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and some other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The olive tree was a type of the congregation or church of God under the old covenant. It represented the Hebrew nation. "The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit." Jer. xi. 16.

The priestly and regal orders were the visible embodiment of the Hebrew nation, as are the houses of parliament (composed of lords and commons), and of congress (composed of the senate and house), the visible embodiments of Great Britain and the United States, the symbol could be given to those orders as in Zech. iv. 1-4.

As the olive tree continued to be a symbol of the Jewish nation from the time it was given by the Lord, B. C. 607, to the days of the apostles, will appear from the use that Paul makes of it in Rom. xi 17-24.

Speaking to the Gentiles, as their apostles, he says:—"And if some of the branches be broken off, and (Gentiles), being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the of the root (Abraham) and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root (Abraham), but the root (Abraham) thee. Thou wilt say then, The branches (natural) were broken off, that I might be grafted in. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear: for if God spared not the natural branches, (take heed) lest he also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God; on them who fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in (his) goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off. And they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graff them in again. For if thou were cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural (branches) be grafted into their own olive tree?"

The olive was either good, or wild: the good was a symbol of the believing Jew (as to its branches) and the branches of the wild denoted the Gentile. Abraham was the root of the good olive tree; believing Jews were the natural branches; believing Gentiles were the wild branches. The olive tree is the church, or congregation of God, under both covenants. Paul's analogy is very clear, and leaves no doubt as to the proper use and understanding relative to the olive tree. The two [illegible] in Solomon's temple. "And within the oracle (holy of holies) he made two cherubims (oil) olive tree (each) ten cubits high .... And he overlaid the cherubims with gold." 1 Kings vi. 23, 28. They were on the mercy seat; witness of the Divine Presence.

When, therefore, Christ explains to John, the two witnesses, by saying, these are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks (lamp-stands) standing before the God of the earth, he uses two classes of church symbols (olive trees, and lampstands) and those quite familiar to the prophet. And if these are the symbols of churches, it is quite certain that they are not the symbols of two individual persons. The only passage adduced, for proof, (Zech. iv. 14) must be understood of the two anointed orders (priests and governors) whose officiating heads at that time were Joshua and Zerubbabel. Those orders of the officiary continued over five hundred years and were filled by two lines of succession, like our presidency, or our congress. Such is true of the four great monarchies of Daniel, it is the order, composed of all its officiaries, that is seen and noted.

My Two Witnesses.—Why two, rather than any more? This expression has originated the two persons theory, this and Mal iv. 5, "Behold, I will send Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Elijah is only one witness. Who is the other witness? Some say, Moses; others say, John the Revelator; while a third ransacks the regions of the dead to find some other person to bring up before his time. To find a second witness is no easy task.

1. In deciding this question, we are given what Christ himself considered sufficient data for John to understand: and as the prophet added no further explanation he deemed it sufficient.

2. The duality of thought follows the explanation—two olive trees, two lamp-stands: and that we may know what two stands, and where to find them, he adds, That stand before the God of the earth: —in the temple: for there was his presence under the old covenant, and as truly his location under the new covenant.

In the temple and its worship, as restored under Joshua and Zerubbabel, the duality is confined to the two olive branches, explained to be the two anointed ones, or sons of oil. There is only one lamp-stand. The Jews had but one lamp-stand, standing before the God of the whole earth. Under the new covenant God is not confined to any temple made with hands; but in his living temple, he meets with the two or three gathered together in his name.

Is there a duality in the officiary of the new covenant church, that may be called a continuation of the same or similar official orders, so that it may be said that the theocracy, or church of God, under the covenants, has the duality of official orders, the same essentially, under each:—two covenants—one church—one faith—one government, with two official orders, so modified in names and powers as to suit the change of administration. The daily ministrations of the first converts will show the same duality of orders in the Christian officiary.

"And in those days, when the number of disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in their daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples (unto them), and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch. Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed they laid (their) hands on them. And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." Acts vi. 1-8.

Such was the origin of the second order of officers in the Christian church. God's family has always had its spiritual, and its temporal wants. To supply those wants has required two orders of ministers: those of the word, and those of tables; ministers of spiritual things, and ministers of temporal things. The altar and the throne represent the two official orders under the old covenant. Under the new covenant, during the officiating priesthood of Christ, and while a people for his name are being gathered from the nations, ministers of the word, and ministers of the tables are required: but the duties and powers, and, consequently, the names of the official orders, are changed. The living temple of the living God, whose materials are now being gathered and prepared, has been downtrodden, having no civil control over the nations. While, therefore, the two official orders continue, their powers and duties are much circumscribed and changed. They are limited to the spiritual and temporal wants of disciples gathered. These disciples are strangers and pilgrims; and, as the Jews, passing through a waste howling wilderness, to the land of promise, dwell in a tabernacle of witness: teaching all nations the science of faith, and holy life: and gathering out, and preparing a people for Christ's name.

Such was the organization and official order of the primitive Christian church of the new covenant, as made by the apostles. Its simplicity was an objection to the worshippers in the costly heathen temples throughout the "Great Empire." There was a tendency among some of the heathen converts to imitate as far as practicable, the proud and costly forms of idolatry.

The injunction of the apostles to the young evangelists, was, See that ye form every congregation, gathered out from the heathen, after the pattern we have shown you, set every church in order, by appointing overseers, bishops, from the aged and devoted members as ministers of the word; and deacons as ministers of tables—these under Christ and his word, shall be your spiritual and temporal servants. These shall be your two official orders—Christ's witnesses, for, and against you, at our Lord's return. Your citizenship is from heaven; your Great High Priest is also in heaven: set your affections on those things which are above where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. Love not the world—its pomp and show. Imitate, in all things, the simplicity of your Lord and Master.

The officiary, consisting of those two orders, bishops, elders or pastors, and deacons, were the public representatives of the churches: chosen by the churches to attend to their spiritual and temporals. Such were the first Christian congregations. Pride of rank and power, soon crept into the officiary. Equalization of power gave way. The officiary began to increase in numbers and in authority till the congregations in large cities and in populous districts surrendered all their authority into the hands of their officiary. In the fourth century that hierarchy became masters of the empire. In the sixth century the apostasy seated its universal bishop at Rome. The mock royal high priest erects his seat in Rome as God's vicar.

For 1260 years the true and apostate priesthoods, that of Christ and his apostate vicar disputed each other's authority. The apostasy, controlling the Roman empire with its family of nations, persecuted the officiary of the true priesthood, trod them down, and drove them into deserts; into caves and mountains; into the terrible "wilderness." Still, in all positions they raised their voices, as faithful witnesses for Christ and his persecuted bride, and against the apostate "harlot."

During these protracted persecutions this primitive simplicity of the Christian officiary was kept up, especially in the south of France, among the Waldenses, and Albigenses, who extended for many centuries against the bloody persecutions of the papacy. The officers, as the representatives of the church, suffered most severely, since they were the public teachers and sustainers of the Christian organizations. In revelations the officers seem conspicuous.

Another reason for the No. two.—Witnesses must be competent not only in knowledge, but in number. The spirit gave them ability to testify, but the law required two at least. By saying "my two," would be stating that there would be a competent number—two at least, and as many more as might be giving testimony. All those martyrs of those 1260 years, were witnesses; for it was their testimony that caused their martyrdom. Every martyr is a witness.

Why select two only, to the exclusion of millions equally worthy?

The expression, "My two witnesses," looks in one direction: does it in the other? "two," and "only two," do not mean the same. History proves that Christ had a multitude of witnesses; for they were as numerous as his martyrs.

SUNDAY MEDITATIONS IN ARKANSAS.

This morning I had this feeling—"now let me enter into a covenant with God." Not with any form of words, but with the life union of the heart. I thought at the time like this: Not every act of the mind can be easily described. The action of the moral man may not, can not, be appreciated by those who have no like experience. Such a covenant is a participation of God's power and goodness by the creature, a participation of his nature almost. (the apostle says we are made partakers of the Divine nature) and I submit if we can ever step short of that power in prayer by which we really obtain what we ask for. This implies agonizing earnestness of petition, not to say anything of the disciplines of life.

Some will hint pride or proselytism, or theological envy, magic is not dead, but there are those who are daily dealing with God, pleading with him, thanking him, trusting him, walking with him, and living their life in intelligent speech unions of this being and glory, and to whose heart is that rest of conviction which is even strengthened by the very denials, and unspiritual opposition of modern learning.

I have seen here, lately, a book entitled "Modern Thinkers." I looked into it, and read the darkness, misimagined light—and closed it, only to know the light from darkness better than ever, and to love it more.

In going through a suite of beautiful rooms, in some grand old palace, let the tourist open a door, revealing only the midnight of a dungeon, with cold, poisonous, horrible, gloomy, damp and dark, and how quickly he will shut it again! Grim, gloomy, black nights make the starlight and the starlit heavens only tenfold more beautiful and welcome.

Ingersoll looks cheery. He is round and fair and robust, and ungastic and fearless. But nevertheless I think and think there is a wisdom above his wisdom, and above him. He is knowing and confident, but tall and towering as he seems to be, there is a "wisdom far above and out of sight" of some men accounted wise—men who seem to some that see and hear them, imposing. [illegible]

To these infidel orators and book-makers, it is nothing that millions of noble souls have lived, fearing God; nothing that millions of martyrs have died; nothing that giant intellects have confirmed the gospel with their testimony; nothing that men of daring and power, of self-denial and love, have labored wonderfully to bless their race and generation; nothing that sacrifices for ages in God's order and providence typified Jesus in his death; nothing that an almost countless multitude of men and women have had deep and strong convictions that God was good and just and great, and that accountability was not to be brushed away like a cobweb, with a wisp of light assertion.

God inherits and inhabits the ages. These non-God-fearing men inhabit a fitting present. Who and what are they, to measure immensity in their palms? Suppose they can live without either prayer or praise, there is a whole historic heaven full of the constellations of saints who could not, would not, dare not, live thus perilously and emptily. Their testimony is in God's book, and when they rise from the dead, they will shine like the sun. Their tombstones have fallen to places and their graves are utterly unknown, but God "has written up his people," and knows how and when and where to find and revive them.

When I was a boy I read a book entitled the "Poor rich man and the Rich poor man." God's beloved are the rich poor people, I am sure; sometimes sick, troubled, afflicted, crying, and all that, but coming to God in prayer, as bees buzz up to their hive, drawn by the mighty magnetism of the queen, and saved from destruction and wreck by her empire.

These scientists have their day. I don't hate them, neither do I fear them. I have enough to do to cry constantly and mightily to God. If they have their mission to assail revealed religion, I have mine to come with never-ceasing calls and cries to the God of all the hosts of heaven and earth. Mine is a personal God. But there are those who suppose a power, a law (or whatever it ought to be called), without personality, or intelligence, or volition, and what have they got? Nothing and nobody, either to love or fear. They have got chaos and emptiness. I would rather be David with all his faults, than one of them. I would rather come like David, to God's spiritual pool of Siloam, and have my sins washed away, and sing and pray, [illegible] above any man in history. He framed i[illegible] and call God King and Friend, and love him and live by him, than to have all the glory of their "unknown," and all the "unseen possibilities of a future they can no more penetrate or measure, than a mouse can swim an ocean, or a darting lizard read the stars.

The personality of God is the very soul and life-core of hope, the essential object and foundation of faith. Is a mother personal, and are fathers and brothers and friends, and is a man himself personal? Am I personal? Then so is God a glorious personal being, and in his personality is the paternity of all personalities. It is the intensity of such a conviction that makes life worth much, that makes life worth living, that saves us from darkness and dismess and sinking. Rob us of this, and you have left only a hull, a pod, a husk, that has no seed or soul of life and hope. It is the personality of God that makes men glad and makes them strong, that gives them comfort in trouble. It is this that developed such personalities as Paul and Luther and Wesley. It is this that makes men genial in action, and even yet grander in patient waiting. A godly believer has great transactions of striving and conference, living and walking with God, and God's personality is the very rock of his reliance, the light and life of his life.

The personality of Jesus, and the conviction of it, has done wonders in the world. Ingersoll may do some good in helping people out of the nightmares of false ideas, but going through the world, and smiting down good and bad together, tramping in the very garden of God, stamping in flower-beds of his making and planting, and giving us nothing in exchange for all the ruin—well, like those who give and who pray to be seen and heard of men, he has his reward.

Just think of the Bible ideas and declarations of God's personality! Take this—"O God, thou art my God!" I love the Psalms. They are full of ideas and language of Divine personality. "God is my king of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth."

Personality? Personality is every where in revelation, and so it is in nature. I do not fully understand any personality but my own, and I do not fully understand that; but I beseech God to bless other personalities, bless all whom he has loved and chosen, and given to me to pray for. And may I be ruled by him, and helped and led and saved by him. One thing is clear, that prayer intensifies the conviction of the being and person of God, the prayer of necessity, the prayer of persistence, of longing; prayer that lasts as long as life itself. Those who never pray, hardly have much right moral sense—how can they?

It is night on this Arkansas upland. The air is clear and so is the sky. I am far from home, and wishing that God would make life a greater usefulness than it is. But it is a thing worth remembering that God can easily do whatever he will with us, if we are entirely passive in his hands. Impatience is a weakness and a wrong. It seems as if the best men have been called to their work, whatever it was. It is useless and foolish for men to rush uncalled into any place of responsibility. Look at the patriarchs and prophets and apostles. They were chosen and called. It is useless to deny it. They never chose themselves. Are not some too much inclined to do this? The medicine for such a tendency and the security against such a mistake is waiting on God. What a lesson it is to learn, to know how and to be willing to wait! All the saints have had to learn it. Before blessing comes waiting.

The Lord of all consolation and almighty power, help us; for we are moody. God bless all who look to him and wait for him. Grace and peace to all saints. Amen.

Editor Restitution:

The enclosed scrap may be worth putting into THE RESTITUTION. I clipped it from the New York Times. In this, we see to what desperation these leaders of the public mind are led. This "Having it (immortality) in him" is no new thought! I have heard it similarly expressed by many sins washed away, and sing and pray [illegible] fallacious form of (shall I call it reasoning?) statement! Those who pride themselves on their logical attainments; who boast of their superior knowledge; who though the evidence preponderated, would not but believe in his own fabric of immortality. Can such persons be true? God has said, and his word abideth ever true: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

There is a current phrase in use just now in New York—"How do you know?" and this was on my lips the other day. I did not use it, but thought it. I met a friend, long known, but who I had not seen for several months. I observed the sign of widowhood as shown by the black band on the hat, but there regulation height! My first word was—"Dear me, Mrs. Jones dead?" and the reply was—"My wife is alive in glory!" I could have said—"How do you know? Alas! alas!! how sad when men are wise above that which is written! And while the fool hath said, "No God," the deceived of the devil have also said—I cannot die, I am immortal. Again it may be asked, "How do you know?" Mr. Beecher allows Moses did not—none of the great men, as the ages go marching down, give a word as to immortality." And to whom shall we go? Jesus knew all about it surely! If, I say "if," he was God, whether first, second or third person in the adorable Trinity," he certainly knew!—but where, and echo answers where! in all he said, can the finger be placed on the direct and unequivocal statement that man, as he derives his being from Adam, is at all immortal. We are not boasting, but speak the words of truth and soberness, when we say, in no case, or circumstance did he ever so express himself. "I am the way"—"I am the life"—"I am the truth!" This he said, and this grand galaxy of declarations, will go marching down through the ages to come, as it has all the past ages! And as I am hoping for that I see not now, so will I patiently wait—seeking for glory, honor and incorruptibility at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; to whom be glory through all ages.

Our life is a hidden life, but not always to be hidden! And because men do not see, how future, and eternal life is secured, they stumble, doubt, and deny! It is the part of mortal man to hope, to wait, to believe! My prayer is "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

GEO. W. YOUNG.

IN HIS BONES—THE CHURCH'S SOURCE OF MR. BEECHER'S BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in Plymouth Church yesterday morning, took for his text 1 Cor. xv. 19: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable." He said that the cardinal moralities of life ought to stand for profitableness and pleasure even if there be no life hereafter; and if all the motives of the gospels should be taken away it should still be the interest of man to be moral. Christian people are obliged to dwell in the sphere of imagination. After all the libraries of sermons about faith it is nothing but imagination. People live by their imagination here, and they shall not be disappointed. The different shapings may fall them, but it will be because they were too low. Though they may find things different from what they expected, it will be because they are grander and more glorious than they imagined. It is said that the idea of immortality is a modern one. That the world existed long before there is any record, no man who is abreast of current events can doubt. No word is given down to the time of the patriarchs that a belief in immortality existed. There is no evidence that Abraham was anything excepting a grand old gentleman, who never said anything worth remembering. He threw no light upon the subject of immortality. Isaac was a figure of great neatness and beauty. Nothing was ever said by him concerning a life hereafter. Jacob was a merchant politician who never lost a good bargain. Yet in his references to higher spiritual development he never mentioned a future life. Neither did that magnificent figure of the law-giver Moses, who stood head and shoulders above the political and social economies of the Israelites, yet in all the Mosaic institutions there is no hint as to an after life. As the ages go marching down there is not one of the great men who gives a word of testimony as to immortality. There is nothing of the kind in the whole moral code of the Old Testament, and there is nothing more remarkable than that fact. David mourned the death of his son, and could not at first be comforted. At length he said: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." This was full of sentiment, if he meant heaven, but he did not. He meant that he should lie down in the sepulchre of his fathers with him. When Christ came the Jews had brought [illegible] from Babylon the belief in immortality. Many persons say that this theory of immortality is bred of superstition. It is even said that the idea of a future life had its origin in dreams. Mr. Beecher said that he did not care whether or not this was so. If Mr. Rothschild should send him a check for $1,000,000 he would not care whether it came in a bag that was soiled with the filth of all the ships between Liverpool and New York, so long as the check came—which, he added, with a smile, is not likely to happen. The clergyman said that he had no word of reproach for the agnostics—those who say they do not know. There may be a God, and a continued existence, they say, but who can prove it? Not to know, however, is as bad as not to believe. He had infinite compassion for such people. What man, he said in conclusion, is worthy of the name of man who has not in him the springs of immortality? If 10,000 scientific men should prove to him that there is no evidence of immortality he would yet have that in him which would prove to him that it is true, that it must be true, and he believed in his very bones that he would find it true.

Sententious.

One fact is worth two arguments.

"Tis easy to be human; godlike, hard;
Easy to blaster, harm, revile, execrate,
But hard to keep the testy passion bound,
Sheathe the hot sword and wait the will of God.

Do not shorten the beautiful veil of mist covering childhood's futurity, by too hastily drawing it away; but permit that joy to be of early commencement and of long duration, which lights up life so beautifully. The longer the morning dew remains hanging in blossoms of flowers, the more beautiful the day.—Richter.

A gentle word is never lost:
Oh, never then refuse one!
It cheers the heart when tempest-tossed,
And lulls the cares that bralse cause;
It scatters sunshine o'er our way,
And turns our thorns to roses;
It changes weary night to day
And hope and love discloses.
A gentle word is never lost—
Thy fallen brother needs it.
How easy said! how small the cost!
With peace and comfort speeds it!
Then drive the shadow from thy cheek—
A smile can well replace it!
One voice is made when no speak
With gentle words to grace it.

Beauty is akin to joy, and the beauty of heavenly things has the same effect of making us unworldly. Much of unworldliness consists in mental and moral atmosphere; and the beauty of divine things, bringing with them their own especial joy, surrounds us with a supernatural atmosphere, which assimilates our inward life to itself after a time.—Faber.

Of life in every way, we must say we cannot tell how it is. And yet there are persons that shrink from the future life, and some that do not believe it, because they do not see in what way it will be; while yet, what the way is of the very life they are in, they cannot tell.—William Mountford.

May you never
Regret those hours which make the mind, if they Unmake the body; for the sooner we
Are fit to be all mind, the better. Blest
Is he whose heart is the home of the great dead,
And their great thoughts.

KEY-WORDS. A neat little volume of 174 pages with the above title has come to hand. It is a small Hebrew and Greek Concordance to numerous important words that occur in the Holy Scriptures. The original words are given by means of English letters, underneath which are placed the quotations from the English version containing all the occurrences and varied renderings of these original words. It is a manual in which a large amount of information is condensed within comparatively narrow limits. On the following topics the work is as full and complete as the large and expensive Hebrew and Greek Concordances: "Preaching, exhortation, faith, hope, repentance, baptism, conversion, adoption, covenant or testament, righteousness, justification, the church, soul, spirit, dying, the dead, the grave, the pit, hades, finite and infinite duration, the second advent, the resurrection, regeneration, immortality, incorruptibility, Paradise, and the kingdom of God." It is published and sold by the author, Wiley Jones, Norfolk, Va.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 9.

Bashan and Its Ghost Cities.

J. L. PORTER, A. M.

KENATH.

A few minutes' ride brought us to the brow of a hill commanding a view of Kenawat. On the left was a deep dark ravine, and on the sloping ground along its western bank lies the ruins of the ancient city. The wall, still in many places almost perfect, follows the top of the cliff for nearly a mile, and then sweeps round in a zigzag course, enclosing a space about half a mile wide. The general aspect of the city is very striking—temples, palaces, churches, theatres, and massive buildings whose original use we cannot tell, are grouped together in picturesque confusion; while beyond the walls, in the glen, on the summits and sides of wooded peaks, away in the midst of oak forests, are clusters of columns and massive towers, and lofty tombs. The leading streets are wide and regular, and the roads radiating from the city gates are unusually numerous and spacious.

While the Israelites were engaged in the conquest of the country east of the Jordan, Moses tells us that "Nobah went and took Kenath, and the villages thereof, and called it Nobah, after his own name" (Num. xxii. 42). Kenath was now before us. The name was changed into Canatha by the Greeks; and the Arabs have made it Kunawat. During the Roman rule it was one of the principal cities east of the Jordan; and at a very early period it had a large Christian population, and became the seat of a bishopric. It appears to have been almost wholly rebuilt about the commencement of our era, and is mentioned by most of those Greek and Roman writers who treat of the geography or history of Syria. At the Saracenic conquest Kenath fell into the hands of the Mohammedans, and its doom was sealed. There are no traces of any lengthened Mohammedan occupation, for there is not a single mosque in the whole town. The heathen temples were all converted into churches, and two or three new churches were built; but none of these buildings were ever used as mosques, as such buildings were in most of the other great cities of Syria.

We spent the afternoon and some hours of the next day exploring Kenath. Many of the ruins are beautiful and interesting. The highest part of the site was the aristocratic quarter. Here is a noble palace, no less than three temples, and a hippodrome once profusely adorned with statues. In no other city of Palestine did I see so many statues as there are here. Unfortunately they are all mutilated; but fragments of them—heads, legs, arms, torsos, with equestrian figures, lions, leopards, and dogs—meet one on every side. A colossal head of Ashtoreth, sadly broken, lies before a little temple, of which probably it was once the chief idol. The crescent moon which gave the goddess the name Carnaim ("two-horned"), is on her brow. I was much interested in this fragment, because it is a visible illustration of an incidental allusion to this ancient goddess in the very earliest historic reference to Bashan. We read in Gen. xiv. 5, that the kings of the east, on their way to Sodom, "smote the Rephaims in Ashteroth-Karnaim." May not this be the very city? We found on examination that the whole area in front of the palace has long ranges of lofty arched cisterns beneath it, something like the temple court at Jerusalem. These seemed large enough to supply the wants of the city during the summer. They were filled by the means of an aqueduct excavated in the bank of the ravine, and connected probably with some spring in the mountains. The tombs of Kenath are similar to those of Pahaya—high square towers divided into stories, each story containing a single chamber, with recesses along the sides for bodies. About a quarter of a mile west of the city is a beautiful peripteral temple of the Corinthian order, built on an artificial platform. Many of the columns have fallen, and the walls are much shattered; but enough remains to make this one of the most picturesque ruins in the whole country.

Early in the morning we set out to examine the ruins in the glen, and to scale a high cliff on its opposite bank where we had noticed a singular round tower and some heavy fragments of walls. The glen appears to have been anciently laid out as a park or pleasure ground. We found terraced walks, and little fountains now dry, and pedestals for statues, a miniature temple, and a rustic opera, whose benches are hewn in the side of the cliff; a Greek inscription in large characters round the front of the stage, tell us that it was erected by a certain Marcus Lusius, at his own expense, and given to his fellow-citizens. From the opera a winding staircase, hewn in the rock, leads up to the round tower on the summit of the cliff. We ascended, and were well repaid alike for our early start and toil. The tower itself has little interest; it is thirty yards in circuit, and now about twenty feet high the masonry is colossal and of great antiquity. Beside it are the remains of a castle or palace, built of beveled stones of an enormous size. The doors are all of stone, and some of them are ornamented with panels and fretted mouldings, and wreaths of fruit and flowers sculptured in high relief. In one door I observed a place for a massive lock or bar; perhaps one of those "brazen bars" to which allusion is made by the sacred writers (I Kings iv. 13). But it was the glorious view which these ruins command that mainly charmed us. As I sat down on a great stone on the brow of the ravine, my eye wandered over one of the most beautiful panoramas I ever beheld. From many a spot amid the lofty peaks of Lebanon I had looked on wilder and grander scenery. Standing on the towering summit of the castle at Palmyra, ruins more extensive and buildings far more magnificent lay at my feet. From the Cyclopean walls of the Temple of the Sun at Baalbec I saw prouder monuments of man's genius, and more exquisite memorials of his taste and skill. But never before had I looked on a scene which nature, and art, and destruction had so combined to adorn. It was not the wild grandeur of Lebanon, with beetling cliff and snow-capped peak; it was not the flat and featureless Baalbec, with its Cyclopean walls and unrivalled columns; it was not the blasted desolation of Palmyra, where white ruins are thickly strewn over a white plain. Here were hill and dale, wooded slopes and wild secluded glens, frowning cliffs and battlemented heights, moss-grown ruins and groups of tapering columns springing up from the dense foliage of the oaks of Bashan. Hitherto I had been struck with the nakedness of Syrian ruins. They are half buried in dust, or they are strewn over mounds of rubbish, or they lie prostrate on the bare gravelly soil; and, though the shafts are graceful, the capitals chaste, the fretwork of friese and cornice rich, yet, as pictures, they contrast poorly with the ivy-mantled abbeys of England, and the nature-clothed castles of the Rhine. Amid the hills of Bashan, however, the scene is changed. The fresh foliage hides defects, and enhances the beauty of stately portico and massive wall, while luxuriant creepers twine round the pillars, and wreathe the volutes of the capitals with garlands.

SHEPHERDS LEADING THEIR FLOCKS.

As we sat and looked almost spell-bound, the silent hill-sides around us were in a moment filled with life and sound. The shepherds led their flocks forth from the gates of the city. They were in full view, and we watched them and listened to them with no little interest. Thousands of sheep and goats were there, grouped in dense, confused masses. The shepherds stood together until all came out. Then they separated, each shepherd taking a different path, and uttering as he advanced a shrill peculiar call. The sheep heard them. At first the masses swayed and moved, as if shaken by some internal convulsion; then points struck out in the direction taken by the shepherds: these became longer and longer until the confused masses were resolved into long, living streams, flowing after their leaders. Such a sight was not new to me, still it had lost none of its interest. It was perhaps one of the most vivid illustrations which human eyes could witness of that beautiful discourse of our Lord recorded by John—"And the sheep hear the shepherd's voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow: for they know not the voice of strangers." x. 3–5.

The shepherds themselves had none of that peaceful and placid aspect which is generally associated with pastoral life and habits. They looked more like warriors marching to the battle-field—a long gun slung from the shoulder, a dagger and heavy pistols in the belt, a light battle-axe or iron-headed club in the hand. Such were their equipments; and their fierce flashing eyes and scowling countenances showed but too plainly that they were prepared to use their weapons at any moment. They were all Arabs—not the true sons of the desert, but a mongrel race living in the mountains, and acting as shepherds to the Druses while feeling their own flocks. Their costume is different from that of the Druses, and almost the same as that of the desert Arabs—a coarse shirt of blue calico bound round the waist by a leathern girdle, a loose robe of goats' hair, and a handkerchief thrown over the head and fastened by a fillet of camel's hair—such is their whole costume, and it is filthy besides, and generally in rags.

OMISSION.

Editor Restitution:

It occurs to me that I may have omitted a sentence—to give propriety to the marriage—next before "the prayer followed." Thus (if you see the propriety of it):

The parties—the bridegroom and bride—with joined right hands, plighted their mutual troth, were pronounced husband and wife. What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder. Amen.

A Child's Prayer.

Father, I am weak and small,
Thou the mighty Lord of all;
Yet, with tender love and care,
Thou will listen to my prayer;
Let me not a stranger be,
But a loving child to thee.

Let my feeble infant feet,
With an angel's strength, be fleet;
Make my heart be pure from sin,
Then can't always shine within:
Let my heavenward spirit be
And soon at home with thee.

Heaven is high and earth is wide,
And my path of life is long;
Let me love and trust thee still,
Hold thy hand, and fear no ill:
Life and death and all shall be
Only as it pleaseth thee.

A Glasgow Factory Boy.

Just above the wharves of Glasgow on the banks of the Clyde, there once lived a factory boy whom we will call Davie. At the age of ten, he entered a cotton factory as "piecer." He was employed from six o'clock in the morning till eight at night. His parents were very poor, and he well knew that his must be a boyhood of very hard labor. But then and there, in that buzzing factory, he resolved that he would obtain an education, and would become an intelligent and useful man. With his very first week's wages he purchased Ruddiman's Rudiments of Latin. He then entered an evening-school, which met between the hours of eight and ten. He paid the expenses of instruction out of his own hard earnings. At the age of sixteen he could read Virgil and Horace as readily as the pupils of English grammar-schools.

He next began a course of self-instruction. In the factory, he had been advanced from a "piecer" to a spinning-jenny. He brought his books to the factory, and placing one of them on the "jenny," with the lesson open before him, he divided his attention between the running of the spindles and the rudiments of knowledge. He now began to aspire to become a preacher and a missionary, and to devote his life in some self-sacrificing way to the good of mankind. He entered Glasgow University. He knew he must work his way; but he also knew the power of resolution, and he was willing to make almost any sacrifice to gain the end. He worked at the cotton-spinning in the summer, lived frugally, and applied his savings to his college studies in the winter. He completed the allotted course, and at the close was able to say, with praiseworthy pride: "I never had a farthing that I did not earn."

That boy was Dr. David Livingstone.—Baptist Courier.

The Jewel Casket.

While in Lisbon, a small and a very pretty house of gray stone, surrounded by a garden, was pointed out to me, and my cicerone, a young priest, gave to me the story connected with it, as follows:

During the reign of John VI., of Portugal, somewhere in the early part of the present century, a poor widow had been allowed to make a home for herself and three children, in the porch of a building which had been shattered by the terrible earthquake of 1755. It was in a district of the ruined portion of the city which had not been yet rebuilt. When the widow had been a year, or thereabouts, in her poor porch, and had succeeded in making it quite comfortable, she one day made her appearance at court, desiring to see the king. But she did not see him. Day after day she applied, always with something neatly secured in a covering of cotton cloth under her arm. She refused to give her errand, save to the king alone and in person; and day after day was she turned away hopeless.

At last fortune favored her. She had entered within the palace gates, and saw the king crossing the court, coming in her direction. She waited until he was near, and then sprang forward, and threw herself upon her knees at his feet. As she did so she cast off the covering from the parcel which she bore, exposing a quaint old casket of ebony and gold, richly embossed and elegantly ornamented.

"Sire," she said, "behold what I have discovered among the rubbish of the ruined edifice, a portion of which I have been permitted to inhabit. I am a poor widow, with three young children depending upon me for support, yet I have not dared to pry into this sacred treasure, nor have I been willing to give it into other hands than your own. I have been well assured that the contents of this casket would relieve me forever from want, but I can not give away my honor even for so great a prize. Take it, sire, and if you think me worthy of remuneration I shall thankfully accept it."

The king called an expert, and had the casket opened. It was found to be with God's letter. She replied. It is have belonged to one of the noblest and most wealthy families of a former generation, the representatives of which were still living in Lisbon. Its contents were jewels of wonderous value, and entirely uninjured. One set of diamonds alone were estimated to be worth fifty thousand crowns.

The true owners of the casket were found, and the poor widow, in addition to the royal blessing, which she held above all price, was presented with the sum of twenty thousand piastres. A portion of this sum came to her in the shape of the [illegible] of which I have spoken, where she lived in peace and plenty to the [illegible] Life and where her descendants were living when I saw it.

A Victim of Brandy.

But three years have passed since Mr. Paul Felix Labarriere was looking back in a comfortable easy-chair in the inner room of a law office. The quiet of a tranquil city made a pillow for his existence, which was each day rendered more delightful by the liberality of his numerous clients. His office was a remunerative one, and he possessed a handsome fortune.

To-day Paul Felix Labarriere is sitting upon a dirty bench in the electrench chamber of the tribunal of the Seine. His cheeks are sunken, his brow is wrinkled; he recounts his past, babbling in his speech, now pleading for mercy, now weeping for his lost honor.

What then, has made so vast a difference in only three years?

A very small matter truly, only a few bottles of brandy!

Brandy has transformed the successful lawyer the employee of Government into a malefactor.

The lawyer drank; his business forsook him. Having sold out the office where his credit had failed, he went to Paris. He persevered in his worship of the genius of the brandy bottle. He sought for work.

A merchant who employed him observed the depth of his potations and dismissed him.

Another acquaintance took pity on him and delayed in some degree his ruin. But anon Labarriere became a thief. He discovered in the desk of his patron certain sums of money, and he appropriated them. When his deadly thirst increased on him he must have brandy. His own funds were expended; he stole money for drink. Grown desperate, he took his employer's silverware and pledged it at the brandy-seller's. And now behold him leaving the police court in charge of two constables!

Consider to what depths he has descended. Felix Labarriere is thirty-six. Hitherto his family name was unstained.

In his abasement he has not lost consciousness of the shamefulness of the deeds he has committed.

He turns as he leaves the bar and begs pardon. "My appetite," he says, "was too strong for my will!"

But the law cannot condone his offences, and with a long groan he hears his sentence and turns away to meet the penalty he has dared.—Voice of the Preach.

The Letter.

"A letter! A letter from father!" cried Will, Nett, and Daisy, as the post-man handed a full-sized envelope in at the door. The mother took the missive, and said indifferently, "How do you know? A great many letters are post-marked C.—" "But" said the children, "it is father's hand writing—nobody else writes that way. Just open it and see; you'll find out then that we are right!"

So the letter was opened and read. It was full of affection. It named the wants of each member of the little family, and made promise of gifts for them all, to be sent on the morrow. It addressed the mother and children by name, and the father's name was signed at the close.

The children were sure then, "that there could be no mistake." "Nobody but father could know all about them."

But the mother still affected to disbelieve. "There was no proof that the letter was from their father. Some one else might have imitated his hand, and, to play a practical joke upon them, have promised to send the things. The package might not come after all."

The little ones thought it very strange; their mother had never acted so before, but they concluded to wait; if the gifts were received, they knew she would be convinced, and sure enough, at the appointed time, the bundle was thrown down at the door. It was opened, the promised articles were all within.

"Now mother, what make you doubt, said they"—"To show you how it is as the letter was opened and read. "Yes, I Come Quickly. Amen, Come Lord Jesus."—Rev. xxii. 20.

[TUNE—Ho, Reapers of Life's Harvest.]

Come Jesus, our dear Savior,
Come quickly for we mourn;
Come rather up thy children,
And take them to thy home;
Thy weary ones cry for thee,
We're waiting for thy day;
How long dost thou tarry here
Thy coming was delay?

Come Jesus, sacrifice Master,
Come with thy power to raise,
Come with the keys of hades,
And open thou the grave;
The sleeping ones have waited
Three lonely night years,
Oh—ll them out to praise thee!
And fill our earth with cheers.

Come then in all thy splendor,
Come with the angel band;
With all the crowns of glory
That thou may'st give that hand,
And come with all thy power,
And all thy holy rays,
And do away with evil,
That earth may clear thy grace.

Come gather up thy people,
Thy chosen ones of old,
Come show thy seal on each one,
That he may know his name,
Come breathe on them thy spirit,
And open then their eyes,
That they may know the Master
Appearing from the skies.

Come to thine ancient city,
That's sanctified in the blood,
Restore the throne of David
Redeem it for thy God,
And come and build up Zion,
The place which thou love once,
To live and reign forever
Upon thy glorious throne.

Come Gentiles! Jew, the nations,
Come folks of ev'ry race and region,
Come that the saints immortal
May have that power the cross.
Then shall the nations fear thee,
And serve thee and obey;
One thousand years of safety
Shall know the days of ev.

THE CLERICAL PROFESSION IN SCOTLAND.

Not merely is there a doctrinal revolution going on in Scotland, but the clerical profession itself is being denuded of the axe and peculiar sanctity that surrounded it in darker times. In fact, the black gowns and white bands are suffering a revolution to the level of ordinary Christian mortals. Does any one call this in question? Well then, let him have the proof.

An Edinburgh paper for Nov. 8, '31, lies at my hand, and in it there is a report of the Rev. Prof. Flint's first lecture in the divinity course. The aspirants to sacred office in the Established Church, enrolled for the session, heard him deliver what could not but make them prick up their ears; and they would be more impressed if they had the sense to understand that their instructor was not uttering chimeras and eccentricities, but was in sober earnest actually interpreting to them the very spirit and movements of the age. Speaking of ministers he said:—

"The time was past when a statement was listened to with special respect merely because it was uttered in a pulpit or by a person with certain peculiarities of costume. There were large and influential sections of society in which an opinion had not more but less weight than was its due, because it happened to be maintained by a man who had 'Rev.' prefixed to his name."

His idea concerning the future usefulness of the official class may be gathered from such a passage as this:—

"The influence which a clergyman could exert in virtue merely of his professional character, was less to-day, perhaps, than it ever was, and there were few signs that it would become greater again hereafter. The professional influence of the clergy must, he believed, rest henceforth on no sacerdotal idea, or corporate authority or class distinction, but be inseparable from, yea, identical with, personal influence. The success of the minister must be dependant on the worth of the man."

Professor Flint has no faith in the church having made the last attainment in theological and spiritual insight and wisdom, and with great candor he continues:—

"The church which had no wish to grow in knowledge, which had no desire to increase and improve theological science, which made no effort to add to the store of religious truths it had inherited, was a church guilty before God of indifference to his revelations of himself, and could not be expected satisfactorily to accomplish his work among men."

Holding these convictions, no wonder that he gathered up the loins of his mind, and concluded with the following free, manly and independent assertion of a pious thinker's right:—

"He knew there were some who did not hesitate to avow that the theologian ought to teach nothing but what was contained in the doctrinal creeds of the church, ought to propound no truths or ideas except those which the church had already adopted. This servile subordination of theology to the church he thoroughly repudiated..... The theologian's business was less to follow than to lead the thought of the church."

In announcing these sentiments (see Gal. ii. 16, and read, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made He saith not, 'and to seeds,' as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ," therefore he says in the 29th verse, "And if ye be Christ's, then are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Surely you will be able to see that there is but one saving faith and that is the Abrahamic faith, for to him and to his seed are the promises made in which are embodied all that God has in store for this world there we find Paul standing before Agrippa and saying, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made unto our fathers." That the "one faith" and "one hope" still looks forward to the promises awaiting their glorious fulfillment is clear from the 11th chapter of Hebrews in which Paul says "that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise, all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them and confessed they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth;" then in the 39th and 40th verses he adds, "these all having obtained a good report through faith received not the promises, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."

But again, if you turn to Gal. iii. 8, you will read "that the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen or nations through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." From this passage you will see the promises made to Abraham are called the gospel, therefore the Abrahamic, or one faith, is a belief of the gospel. Hence we find when Jesus commenced to announce to the Jews what must be believed in order to be saved, he announced the gospel, saying, "The time has been accomplished, and God's Royal Majesty has approached, reform and believe the good message," or gospel. Jesus Christ the seed of Abraham to whom the promises were made, the Divine Son of David who was to set on his throne (Acts ii 30) and reign over the house of Jacob forever, (Luke i. 30–33), the Royal Majesty of the heavens—the Son of God had come, and commenced to announce to the Jews his approach to Jerusalem, the seat of the throne and capital of the kingdom, unto which city shortly after he rode, that it might be fulfilled which had been spoken by the prophets, saying "Tell the daughter of Zion, Behold thy King cometh unto thee," etc. But though he came to his own domain his own people received him not but rejected him and crucified him; as the apostle says "killed the Prince of Life," but according to promise he was raised from the dead and has ascended into the heavens until the time of restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets. And during the time he is in the heavens, God is taking a people out of the Gentiles for his name, (see Acts v.) after which he will return and build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and restore again the kingdom of Israel and fulfill the message of the angel to Mary, viz., reign over the house of Jacob forever; at which time the promise made to Abraham that in him all nations of the earth should be blessed, will be fulfilled.

The gospel then which Jesus commenced to announce was the glad tidings of the kingdom or reign of God; and he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and the twelve were with him. See Luke viii. 1. And when his mission was ended he sent forth the apostles with the commission, "to preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is immersed shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned; and true to their commission they announced the same gospel. Philip at Samaria preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, and Paul dwelt two years in his own hired house preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. Again Paul says he is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Again he says if any man or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed.

It is clear then that there is but one faith that leadeth unto the way of life, and that is a hearty belief of the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ. These things comprehended and believed will lead you to God's way of remission of sins by immersion in water by which you are introduced into the all-saving name and become a member of the family of God.

Ever your friend,

DR. J. H. THOMAS.

Age to Come Herald.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 20th, 1851.

The Age to Come Herald, and letters from Boston, came last night; and although I was expecting and desiring them, I nevertheless decided to look at them. I had but a faint hope to which I clung, that the cable dispatch might have been misunderstood, or some of the words were incorrect.

When the full knowledge came that my darling child was really dead, and laid away in the cold and silent grave, I cannot make any one but a mother understand the anguish of my heart; and in my situation, and under all the circumstances, it was an exceeding bitter cup of sorrow and extreme agony. I was alone in my own hired house, and all was silent around me save the throbbing of my own bleeding heart, and the moaning of my bitter lamentations. I was alone with my God. No sympathizing mortal to whisper a word of consolation. No place to flee to and weep where I had spent so many pleasant hours with her I so dearly loved. I could not reach her grave to bath it with my tears. The billows of two mighty oceans rolled between us. More than five thousand miles separated us; and could I have had the wings of the dove to fly to her narrow house, I should only have found her dead, or alas! a speechless, deaf to my call, and insensible to all my great grief. I could do nothing but weep in deep anguish; and like David, "pour out my complaint before God." Ps. cxl 2.

Such a night I never passed through before. All the bitterness of my sorrowful life appeared to be concentrated and hurled upon my poor head in a few short hours. It seemed as though my heart would be literally broken. I cannot describe my terrible agony at the thought of no more seeing that dear, sweet face again, this side of the resurrection from the grave; that I should no more, till then, hear that charming voice say, "Mother, dear." Oh! my "Darling Bertie!" How gladly would I have given my poor life for her; she who never caused me a tear nor a painful reflection. It seems as though her life must have been of more value than mine, and why was she taken and I left? It is at present all in vain for me to attempt to solve this mystery.

My plans in many respects are now changed, as they have all been made with reference to her coming to assist me. Everything I did, I said, "how will dear Bertie like this or that?" My arrangements must be somewhat different now. Had she been here, I think she would have lived and been happy. But it was predestinated otherwise, and I must bear my cross without her till from the cross I am set free. I know that God has not, and cannot do wrong; and I must and will submit to his righteous will. How many more sacrifices will be required of me? He alone can tell. But whatever may be in store for me in the future is in his great plan, and will work for good to somebody. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." The cup is most bitter to me, but it could not pass by. Not my will, O God, but thine be done.

I have many kind friends here who try much to help me bear my burdens. The English vice-consul and his sister are as kind to me as my own brother and sister could be. I sit at their table, and they look daily after my comfort. She, dear lady, has passed through the furnace of affliction, and is daily looking for the promise to her people, Israel, to be fulfilled. God has very strangely, and fortunately, brought me to this house. I will tell you more about it in time.

I was told yesterday that a gentleman had been traveling here for a few weeks, and had become so much interested in the country that he had gone home to Chicago to bring a colony back to this land. The Lord's hand is in the work. The Jews are coming from Europe in large numbers and all the land is waking up. One thing after another will be done; one company after another will find their way to this land; some will come weeping, and some rejoicing; until at length, in this simple, natural way, Israel will be found here; some of every tribe; not Jews only, but of each of the ten lost tribes, so called, as well. Well, let them come. "And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in couches, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord." Isaiah lxvi. 20. The Lord will fulfill his word and the "ships of Tarshish" will hurry them along. Israel will be restored; and the twelve apostles, in fulfillment of the promise made to them by Christ, will ere long be sitting upon twelve thrones, judging, (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel, in their own land.

The grass is green all around us, and the fields of wheat are beautiful to behold. It is a great novelty to us Americans to see vegetation growing rapidly, especially at this season of the year. If you plant a seed of any kind it springs up at once, as by magic, and just as soon as rain. There seems to be something here giving life. The longer I remain the better I like everything around me. I shall never return to America. I had rather live here in the greatest poverty, than in Boston in affluence and luxury.

What a wonderful promise to Jerusalem is found in Isaiah. iv. 5–6. "And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for above (margin) all the glory shall be a covering. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert, from storm and from rain." Truly may it be said, "There shall be no night there, and they need no candle." Truly may it be said, "The sun shall not light on them, nor any heat." And this shall be the condition of Jerusalem, as the preceding verse informs us. "When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning." Here, as in all the prophets, it is clearly proved that the filth of the daughters of Zion, the tribes of Israel to whom Mount Zion belongs, will be washed away; and the blood be purged from Jerusalem, the very same city where so much blood has been shed, and where so many crimes have been committed, and which has suffered double for all her sins; and that Jerusalem is yet to be the place where the Saints of God are to dwell in happiness, light and glory. How appropriate it is to sing:—

> "Jerusalem, my happy home,
> O, how I long for thee!
> When will my sorrows have an end?
> Thy joys when shall I see?"

I begin to understand, faintly, something of what this city will be in the most glorious condition; and my heart cries out. "Lord, hasten the time."

I must tell you how cheap I live. About four piasters a day, (which is not over sixteen cents) will buy all I need. A little fire is necessary in the rainstorms, which are quite cold, although the ground is covered with flowers, which seems odd enough to me at this season of the year. Oranges are now ripe; and they are delicious. The crop is large. New comers feel the chilly weather here the first winter; after that they do not mind it. I hope all the dear ones who love Mount Zion, will come to the Holy Land before they all die in America. I am glad that God brought me here. If dear Bertie could have come, it does seem we should have been happy. But it is all right. I will cling to the faith.

> "That will not separate our hopes in heaven,
> Because the clouds hang sad;
> But in the hour of grief or pain,
> Can lean upon the God."

But I never can forget, nor cease to love my child. Nothing can ever take the place of my darling Bertie.

Nov. 30th.—The winter is mild and lovely: the grass and wheat fields are as green and beautiful as in June in Massachusetts. This is a novel sight for the last day of November. It begins to look like Paradise indeed. I am now sitting in my room writing without a fire, with the doors all open towards the beautiful garden of flowers. It is almost too warm to be out in the sun: but the nights are cool.

The English Jews have a deputation now in Constantinople, offering twenty-five million dollars (£25,000,000) for Palestine. The Jews here are very anxious about the result. They say the nations will never allow them to buy Jerusalem, but they can buy all the land in Palestine, outside. I am told that hundreds of Jews are now on their way to this country, and also many people from America.

The consuls of the several nations all met the Pasha of Jerusalem, at the English consul's house last week. They requested the Pasha to establish a strict quarantine, and clean the streets and houses, both inside the walls of the city and outside; and put disinfectants in the houses and yards. He has already commenced the work which gives great satisfaction. I suppose this will have a tendency to keep away some travellers, but in the end it will do much good. Jerusalem needs cleaning, and I am happy to see the work commenced.

This is a lovely morning, and I feel sweet peace; like the great ocean after a storm, all is calm and heavenly. I have been in such deep agony, that for a time I could not pray, even for myself. But God has heard the many prayers offered up for me, as he always does and will hear the prayers of faith; and he has brought me thus far through the most dreadful conflict imaginable. It is a miracle that my life has been spared. The details of the death of my child have been a much greater shock to me than the fact of her death. I know by experience what the Psalmist meant when he said, "my heart is smitten and withered like grass," "I forget to eat my bread," "I mingle my drink with weeping." "I am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am bowed down greatly: I go mourning all the day long," "I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top." My days are like a shadow that declineth and I am withered like grass." But then, O Lord, shalt endure for ever, and thy remembrance to all generations. Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come. See Ps. cii.

Yes sleep has departed from my eyes: I have eaten my bread in deep sorrow; my drink has been mingled with weeping; and my flesh wasted away under my great grief for the loss of my darling child at the very time when I was expecting so much help from her, in my weak efforts to do something for the restoration of the Lord's Holy Land and chosen people. In our weakness and ignorance the Lord's ways appear to be severe and mysterious. His hand has been very heavy upon me: nevertheless, his mercy endureth forever. "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." In my great affliction, "my flesh and my heart faileth:" still, "God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever." Ps. lxxiii. 25–26. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men." In this great trial he has brought me through the furnace, heated at least seven times hotter than ever before. It is no doubt among the "all things that work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I feel a deep sense of gratitude to those who have offered prayers and sympathized with me in my affliction. May a blessing be returned upon your heads. May each of you be strengthened to endure all the conflicts through which you may be called to pass. Our afflictions, though severe, are always sent in mercy. May our kind Father grant us all grace to endure them.

The last week has been the most dreadful week of my whole life. Sorrow and weeping has been mingled with all that I have seen, or said, or done; and although I am now calm and have found peace, I cannot even think of my great loss without a shudder, and the perspiration will start from every pore, and I tremble like a leaf in a breeze. There is a strange loneliness about me when I think of my dear child who has been such a light to my path for more than twenty years, and who has never caused me any sorrow at all. I thank God, however, that I am here; Boston would be a most desolate place indeed; I cannot even bear to think of it.

This has been a most lovely day. As I walked over the hill, I found it was as hot as June weather in Massachusetts. The green hills and wheatfields are exceedingly beautiful. It rains during the night, and the days are fine. The people tell me that this is a new feature in the climate, at which they are wondering. The Arabs are constantly saying that the Americans and Europeans are bringing rain and good crops. They salute us very cordially whenever we meet them in our walks.

I believe the scenery here to be the most magnificent of any spot upon the face of the earth. Talk about New Hampshire and Vermont scenery! It certainly is very beautiful: but nothing equal in beauty of outline, color, and grandeur, to the scenery round about Jerusalem. I have never seen anything so fine as the view of the mountains of Moab;—sometimes a rich purple, then in a few hours the color changes to a delicate violet. It is my delight to watch the various changes of atmospheric tint, so unusual in other countries. As I was delightfully gazing at those mountains, I asked a friend if I could walk to them in half a day? "No," he replied, "it is forty miles to the nearest point!" I was surprised at this, and could hardly believe it possible, as the outline of the rocks, and also the shrubbery, can be seen distinctly with the naked eye. This to me is wonderful.

AN ORTHODOX CLERGYMAN ON IMMORTALITY.

Editor N. Y. Sun:

The doctrine of immortality, or future eternal life, comes not to us through the channels of nature or science, but through those of "revelation."

The knowledge we gain by science is based on demonstrative facts, so that we may not say we believe in the existence of those facts, but rather that we know of their existence by demonstrative processes. But the doctrine of immortality, or future eternal life, appeals to our faith on evidence furnished by revelation. So if revelation be only a human device, then there is no reasonable grounds for the truth of the doctrine. The reasonable acceptability of the doctrine depends entirely on the truthfulness of revelation. Aside from revelation all nature teaches mortality and dissolution. And as to our inward experiences, we cannot be conscious of any power or element within us which does not actually exist there to give rise to said consciousness.

We are conscious of the existence of an inward desire or longing, or even a hope, for immortality, but not of immortality itself, nor shall we be until it be bestowed and becomes an actual experience. Indeed, the very fact that I desire and long and hope for immortality rather proves the present non-possession of it, for I cannot desire and long and hope for what I am conscious of possessing. It is a gospel announcement, that immortality is the gift of God. It comes not by nature, but through the grace of God. "The gift of God is eternal life." This is the record. "God has given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." I am conscious, through my nature, of the inward existence of the elements of my mortality, but not of immortality. Still we can have an inward consciousness of the certainty of a future immortality and eternal life. It comes from a sincere practice of the teachings of Christ—a personal application and experimentation of the moral truths of revelation. This system of truth uniformly produces such a result, and no other system can. If men will not submit to this experimental test, and "experiment is the test of truth," it is their perilous privilege to discard it.

Our inward desires, and longings, and hopes, and our apparent capability or fitness for eternal life, may be confirmative of the appropriateness of the doctrine, but they do not prove its truth. We have no instincts or natural ability that can reveal to man the doctrine of immortality. The Word of God alone is its foundation, and "if the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do?" But "the Word of the Lord endureth forever."

The COVENANTS.

A TREATISE ON,

I. The Abrahamic covenant, its terms, its extent, its duration, its conditions, and when perfected.

II. The Sinaitic covenant, its terms, its relations to the Abrahamic covenant, where given, to whom given, the unity of the Law, its duration and its terminus, the Sabbath and its purposes.

III. The New covenant, the covenanters—not the church but Israel; conditional prophecy considered, restoration from Babylon considered, future restoration of Israel as covenantees, our relation to the New covenant—as the Seed of the Abrahamic covenant, as the Mediation body, as a Royal and an Eternal Priesthood—now upon the plane of the flesh and and then through the veil upon the plane of spirit; restoration of the Aaronical order of priesthood in the house of Zadoc under the Prince and subordinate to the royal priesthood; its necessity and the nature of sacrifices in the ages to come.

IV. The Davidian covenant, its terms, the kingdom divided, the kingdom removed, the seed chastised, the kingdom to be restored under Messiah, the reign eternal.

V. Twelve objections to the position, that the kingdom of Christ is organization is yet future, answered, and the law of induction into the kingdom of the birth of the water and of the spirit.

This work is now in press and will be ready for distribution in June or early in July. It will make from 300 to 350 pages, and will sell for $1 per copy. # The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXXI. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 19, 1882. NO. 15.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also, a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and thorough baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

LETTERS ON THE RESURRECTION. No. 8.

WM. C. TAYLOR.

In the two preceeding letters of this series something has been done to bring out the real relationship between the body of Christ and our Lord its head. The result of our enquiries showed, that, this body is not made up of all who at any time have been in the service of Christ, but of those who remained faithful servants to the end. The latter class we also found spoken of as no longer under condemnation, but instead as having become heirs of the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, and which, in the event of death, would be realized through a glorious resurrection. Briefly stated, these were our conclusions as to the hope of the body without considering particularly what further support might be gained from any positive statements regarding the resurrection considered by itself. This will be the immediate object of the following letters, for having already considered the promises to the faithful believer, and argued that they admitted, in the event of death, of no fulfillment short of an incorruptible resurrection, we propose now to show how well this conclusion can be maintained, and the promises of God vindicated by a calm dispassionate review of the positive proofs in favor of what is known as the immortal resurrection.

In looking over the Princeton Review for May, 1879, at page 603 my eye caught the following words:—"The greatest admirer of apologetics will admit that negative evidence has nothing like the weight of more positive proof or even of vehement assertion." The truth of these words is self-evident, and they express in particular the very point that I have long felt has lain at the root of all our differences about the resurrection. The point is, whether in our study of the Scriptures we have always discriminated clearly between the value of negative and positive evidence. Whether we have always been guided in our doctrine by the latter, while mistrusting the former, for its value entirely depends upon right use, and that upon sound reasoning two things we cannot always find as striking characteristics of fallible man. With positive evidence, which, in relation to Bible themes, is but the positive assertion of the Word of God to some fact—past or future, the case is different. Here we can rest upon the word, though how it may be we cannot understand, feeling sure however that the Scripture cannot be broken. Positive statements, then in Scripture, when rightly applied, we hold are positive truths, and either have been or will be verified. No matter whether we understand or misunderstand them, whether we believe or misbelieve them, whether we are able or unable to explain them in harmony with other Scriptures, we know the Word of God can never fail. Such statements are like the rocks which cannot be moved, upon which it is better to rest and trust even though blindly than mangle them for the sake of a seeming harmony. The very wisest of us comprehends the purposes of God so imperfectly that the future has almost everything to reveal. Has he not said, that, 'as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.' It has been well said, that, 'In what concerns the vitals of religion, rectitude of disposition goes further even to enlighten the mind than acuteness of intellect, however important that may be in other respects.' I believe we cannot display this quality better than by simply trusting the Word of God—even though the end may not always be as clear as we might wish—time will justify every word.

In our searchings after truth then let us take the assertions of the Bible as our starting points for all our progress depends upon the first outward step being a true one. Let us as much as possible mistrust our own reasonings and inferences, and instead build upon the, "Thus saith the Lords,"—the foundation stones God has laid for us. Then indeed we shall be like the wise man who built his house upon the rock, which neither wind or rain or flood could overthrow. This is the method upon which I intend to conduct this enquiry, feeling sure that if I am as successful as I wish to be in following it and developing the disposition spoken of above the end will declare the truth.

The xv. chap. of I Cor. contains the greater part of the positive evidence relating to the nature of the resurrection body which is found in the Bible, and although it is a portion of Scripture with which, in a sense, we are all but too familiar, yet it is here where we must first look for a reply when the question is now as it was then, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" The chapter is divided into two parts. With the first, in which Paul showed how inconsistent the Corinthians were in denying the resurrection while still professing faith in a Christ alive from the dead, in view of the special object of these letters we have no immediate concern. With the second part however, in which the Apostle deliberately proposed the question "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" we feel the deepest interest, for here our differences begin to assume a magnitude of some doctrinal importance.

Paul remember, was answering his own question, and inasmuch as he would be likely to know his own mind best we may naturally look for a closer agreement between the query and the answer than if different parties had been connected with the discussion. This leads us to lay the utmost stress as to the positive character of his reply. The question of itself was a very simple one, and admitted of but two different replies, for we only know of natural and spiritual bodies. But besides this, the duty rested with Paul as a successful teacher of the doctrine of Christ, to express himself in reply in the simplest and clearest manner possible, for we are under no obligation to account the Corinthians in question as being greatly favored by education, seeing their want of reason led them into the error recounted in the first part of the chapter.

Paul's question, or rather questions, are, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body are they to come?" Leaving the consideration of the first in the meantime, we ask earnestly what reply he gave to the second? Here are his words:

"It (the body) is sown in corruption: it is raised in incorruption."

"It (the body) is sown in dishonor: it is raised in glory."

"It (the body) is sown in weakness: it is raised in power."

"It (the body) is sown a natural body: it is raised a spiritual body."

So far this is Paul's reply to his own question. What do we learn from it? If words have any value at all in conveying ideas to my mind, I find here four distinct assertions that the body sown is a natural body, contrasted with four equally positive statements that the body raised is a spiritual body. Hardly anyone I think will doubt that the sowing is into the grave, and the raising out of the grave. Mark then the difference between the apostle's words in describing the body sown and the body raised. As each word describing the body sown is in perfect contrast to those used in describing the body raised, it surely must follow that the apostle used them to indicate just such a change of nature as the words implied. If the body that came out of the grave was of exactly the nature as when buried, why call the one natural and the other spiritual? It seems to me impossible to understand so great a change in terms without understanding at the same time a corresponding change in the subject as the cause.

Had Paul really intended to convey the idea that the dead would rise with the same kind of bodies they lay down with, I think he would have been more successful had he kept to the terms by which he described the natural body. As it is, assuming this idea to be true, it leaves me without any rule to read the apostle's mind, and as for the simple-minded Corinthians, how they could be enlightened in anything by such a method I am at a loss to say. For myself, suppose the question had been one of color, to use a simple illustration, and had Paul said, it is sown a black body it is raised a white body, I could not have understood him to say the body raised was the same color as that sown, and yet the contrast between black and white is no greater than between a natural body and a spiritual body. Why then should any one be asked to believe that the resurrection body is natural, when Paul has said it is raised a spiritual body?

Again, had the apostle's idea been to teach that the body put into the grave, and the body raised out of it were of the same nature it is clear he could have been at no loss for language seeing he described the mortal body by the terms, corruption, weakness, dishonor and natural body. These terms all apply with special fitness to everything this side of the grave, and our wonder is, if this idea is true, Paul did not use the same words to indicate the nature of the body in the resurrection. But the apostle, whatever his idea, has used terms respecting the body raised from the dead of exactly opposite meaning to those he used to indicate the nature of the natural body. My judgment of the matter is that if the great change in words did not imply a corresponding change in the object they referred to it will be exceedingly difficult to learn anything from the chapter whatever. But the truth is exactly the reverse of such a supposition. Paul was teaching the Corinthians the nature of the resurrection body, and as the subject was entirely new to them we may naturally assume the apostle's success depended upon his saying just what he meant in the simplest and most precise language possible. On this account we accept Paul's statement of this doctrine as being absolutely true in itself, and better entitled to be received as such than any other reference to the subject in the New Testament for the sufficient reason that here alone do we find it taken up and answered with the simple end in view of telling believers what kind of bodies they would have in the resurrection. It is impossible to doubt that in answering the question the apostle spoke the truth, and spoke it clearly, the only doubt is, have we his words as the Corinthians did? Have we understood them as they did? has the reading of them produced the same impressions on our minds, and as a results, is our faith in this matter the same as theirs? This we hope to answer in subsequent letters.

OUR PLATFORM.—No. 5.

One Lord, one faith, one baptism. Eph. iv. 5.

This is an essential plank in the platform or creed of every believer in divine revelation. Much has been written upon this subject, and many sermons preached from this text, and it may seem to some a hackneyed subject, we tell you in advance we shall not try to give you even a short article of original ideas or of new thoughts, but such as we have, give we unto you.

One Lord, or one Lord Jesus Christ, or the Christ, the Anointed One. We say at the outset that we have long since discarded the dogma of the "Adorable Trinity," as having no foundation in the word of God. One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. Let the text and this verse be read without Orthodox spectacles, and no one in their sober senses would ever dream of a trinity in unity. A distinction is made throughout the Bible between the Father and the Son. They are both often spoken of as different personalities; yet a very close relationship exists between them that is not easy for us to explain. Secret things belong to God, but what is revealed belongs to us and our children. We do not underestimate the attributes of the Son of God, or detract from the great work of redemption and salvation by and through him in holding him in his true character as the Son of God. Peter's answer to the Savior is to the point and conclusive—"Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." Blessed art thou Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

The wisdom of the Savior's answer—first the blessing, second that God was his Father, and third the office of the spirit to take the things of God and show them unto us, what flesh and blood cannot do.

Volumes might be written upon the one Lord, his character, who or where is the one in the universe of God, so far as we have any knowledge who will bear a comparison with him even in his humiliation and degradation? Take his whole history from the time that Gabriel visited his mother—not a mistake, not a meaningless word or sentence. Take him as legislator—the laws, his parables, his words of wisdom, all stamped with the broad seal of divinity. His questions and answers as he encounters the Scribes and Pharisees, the great and learned of his time, but always victorious.

Mark his life, yes his manner of life; what perfect harmony between his teaching and his practice! We make a point here, would it not be well for Mr. Ingersoll and his school to notice the point and stick a pin there, yea would it not be well for the Gentile churches to make a careful comparison of modern Gentilism and New Testament christianity? Once more, would it not pay well for the believers of the Abrahamic faith, as we near the momentous scenes of the judgment to enter into a careful and impartial comparison of our lives, our words, our faith, and our practice, with that of the Son of God?

Let us be careful that we do not substitute Gentile law and custom for the pure and just and equal laws put forth by the one Lord to rule and govern the kingdom of God. Do we realize the magnitude of the work before us? and do we realize that the next moment may fix our doom unalterably? Our Lord has forewarned us in the most solemn and emphatic manner. He could not have done more for his vineyard than he has done, and has commanded us to watch.

God help the remnant to heed his command.

NEWELL BOND.

IRONTON, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

I will send you a report of my labors for the last two months. Left home Feb. 11, stopped at the Island in Laporte Co., over Sunday. From there I started for Eagle Creek in Stark Co. When I got to Walkerton I received a card stating that a Mormon had an appointment at the same time as mine, so I stopped at Hamlet and gave five lectures.

Started again on Feb. 23, for Eagle Creek, and reached there on Thursday, only to find that the Dunkers had an appointment on Friday and over Sunday. I preached on Thursday evening. The Dunkers failed to get a preacher, but nevertheless they held the house; so I turned back to Bro. Coffin's school house where held four very interesting meetings, the house being crowded every night.

On Monday we returned to Eagle Creek, having left an appointment for that time, but the Dunkers had succeeded in getting the teacher to close the house against us, and we held two meetings at private houses.

I then got a very pressing request to go four miles east to the Pierson school house, where I gave nine discourses. This was among the best meetings I have ever held. On Sunday morning a Mormon put in his appearance, claiming the time. We of course gave way, and he gave us a little Mormonism. After an intermission of ten minutes I followed to a crowded and attentive congregation. I invited him to stay to evening service which he declined.

In the evening all the people could not get into the house. I think some fruit will be gathered there soon. One came out.

The brethren having hired a very commodious hall at Eagle Creek I returned there Mar. 9, and held four interesting meetings with them at their new place of worship.

On Monday started for home, where I arrived Tuesday, and found my family well but myself very much worn down.

My prayer is that the Lord will comfort those brethren in this their time of trial, and impart to them grace sufficient for their day that they may be able to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

Your Brother in Christ, waiting for the coming kingdom.

MRS. DAVIS AND HER MISSION.

Leaves from My Journal.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 7, 1881.

A cold wave is now passing over Jerusalem. Ice formed in our fountain last night nearly half an inch thick; but I do not feel the cold at all. My health is now improving. The people come to my rooms a great deal,—they seem to like to come, and are very kind to me. Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, with his wife arrived here yesterday. Mr. Floyd accompanies them on their tour through Palestine. Your letter containing sixty dollars, also came yesterday which was gladly received.

Dec. 13th.—To-day I have been with Mr. Floyd to see the ruins of a Synagogue, discovered within the last three weeks. The ground, which is north of the Damascus gate, and in full view of my window, was purchased for a family building lot; but the wife objecting to the location, it was sold to a poor shoemaker for a trifle. Upon making investigation by excavating, the walls of a beautiful building were discovered. At once the news went abroad, and the obscure poor man soon found himself famous and possessed of considerable wealth. His newly discovered treasure was eagerly sought; and many offered a high price for what he had just paid a paltry sum. The walls of this building are in a perfect state of preservation; the plaster still adhering to them as firmly as when first placed there. The paintings, which are Phœnician, are still beautiful. Everything shows superior artistic skill in design and finish. This discovery furnishes additional evidence that ancient Jerusalem extended far beyond the present wall of the city. Three wells containing water, have already been found. These new discoveries are records of the condition of the country in that age of the world.

I can sit for hours beside these excavations and see plainly that three cities have been built here, one upon the walls of the other. And as I look down upon the ancient city of Jerusalem, with its fine paved streets and beautiful arches, I think of the feet that once pressed those pavements, and the throngs that crowded these thoroughfares, and all the busy crowds throughout the city, and I ask, will these same people ever return here again? Will the same enterprise and activity be witnessed as of old? and the answer comes from the inspired Word—"The Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. The people that shall be born will not be the only ones who will inhabit Jerusalem under the reign of Christ, but the "ancients" will be there likewise; for it is written, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise," Isa. xxvi. 19; and again, "Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down. Isa. xxii. 20.

Jerusalem will also be made glorious and joyful. "For the Lord shall comfort Zion he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert, like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voices of melody." Isa. li. 3. "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city. . . . Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem." Isa. lii. 1, 2. "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations, with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established;" and "thou shalt be far from oppression." Isa. liv. 11-14. "The Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem." Zech. i. 17. See also chapters ii. and viii.

I can adopt the language of the prophet—"For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name." Isa. lxii. 1, 2.

Dec. 14th.—This is a lovely day. We are sitting without fire in our pleasant room, chatting, writing and sewing, with our doors and windows all open. The atmosphere is wonderfully pure. If the dead carcass of a dog or other animal lies in the open air for days or weeks, no offensive odor arises from it.

Mr. Muller of England is now here, and is much pleased with the country. My love for it increases daily. Nothing could induce me to return to America. My health is now improving. There really is no need of sickness here with proper care. I believe truly that I never could have borne the great sorrow which God has been pleased to send upon me, in any other land. This may appear strange to you, but I am sure it is true.

Dec. 17th, Sunday. This is a cold rainy evening. All are glad, however, to see the rain, because the water is getting scarce: but our well has plenty of water in it. As I sit writing this evening, I am thinking what the friends are doing in Boston. About this time you are probably in your afternoon meeting. I should like much to be there, just to attend the meeting; but Boston would be a desolate place to me now. This place would be a paradise if the people were only righteous. When will the kingdom come? If it were not for the hope of it, life would be a burden.

Dec. 26th. To-day I have received letters and a package of papers. It seems odd to read news a month old, but we are glad to receive foreign papers at any time.

[We will just remind the friends here in America, that they can send newspapers, circulars, pamphlets, magazines and books, to Mrs. Davis in Jerusalem, just as cheap as they can be sent from one town to another here at home—one cent for each two ounces, or fraction thereof. Sealed letters are more than at home—five cents for each half ounce, or fraction thereof. Address—"Mrs. A. E. Davis, Jerusalem, Palestine; care of American Consul."]

We are so quiet here that it seems strange to read of what is going on in the great world so far away. As I look from my house over the city, where all is so quiet, especially at night, I say to myself, "Well, Jerusalem is awaiting the summons to arise and shake herself from her dust and filth, put on her beautiful garments, and sit down the Queen of the World." The longer I remain in it, the less inclined I am to leave it; and I never expect to leave it; no, never.

We have had a great rainstorm; and to-night the wind is blowing most furiously. I can hear it moaning and sighing; and then it shrieks and wails. It sounds as though it was lamenting the desolations of Zion: "How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger." Lam. ii. 1. It almost makes me shudder to think of the great sins which Israel committed here, and the frightful wailings of the daughter of Zion when the Lord "poured out his fury like fire" upon her.

Mr. Kayat, the English vice-consul, and his amiable sister, who occupy the other tenement of this house, are as kind to me as my own children could be. If my son was here, he could do no more. Their father was consul here for thirty years, and was highly respected by Jews and Europeans.

I am glad you approve of my plans for the establishment of schools in Palestine. I must keep quiet at present; but there is an opportunity for a great work in this direction. It will require the wisdom of several heads to perfect the plan, and the expenditure of several thousand dollars to put it in execution. But it will accomplish much for the restoration of this country. There are no schools established here upon the plan proposed. Let us devote all our energies to this one object—the restoration of the kingdom of God. This kingdom, after it is set up, will, by its righteous laws and pure religion, convert all the nations of the earth and make them all one in Christ, without any middle wall or partition between any of them, though they will be of different nationalities, occupying different localities. Thus will the kingdom, and the dominion of the kingdom over all other nations, fill the whole earth, under the whole heaven.

The schools must be opened upon the broad principles of free thought—free from majesterial or dogmatical opinions of theology, with headquarters at Jerusalem. I think one cause of the failure of missions in Palestine as well as in other places, is partisan sectarianism; and where that is the case the missionaries themselves receive the greatest benefit, instead of the people for whom the missionary labors are intended. If we labor simply to give the people a scientific knowledge of all the various branches of education, teaching them by precept and example, as far as possible, how to enjoy health, make happy homes, communities and governments, which will embrace a knowledge of all the valuable arts and true sciences, there need be no fears but that they will embrace the highest type of pure religion known to them. If you press dogmatical theological inconsistent errors, in a selfish sectarian spirit, upon people who are ignorant of what genuine Christianity is, the tendency will be to drive them to opposite extremes and cause them to adhere more closely to their preconceived erroneous opinions and sectarian views, or become confirmed infidels. Let us labor to do the greatest possible good to others, and not for self aggrandizement.

Truth and love are two of the most powerful things in the world; and when they both go together they cannot easily be withstood.

The ills we see,
The mysteries of sorrow, deep and long,
The dark enigmas of permitted wrong
Have all one key.
This struggle, and would to God our Father's school;
All absence and change His love shall grandly overcome.
What though to-day
Thou can'st not trace at all the bridle-a reason
For his strange dealings through the trial season.
Trust and obey;
In after life and light all shall be plain and clear.

The grandest motive power for the death of sin, is the death of Christ; and nothing makes us so eager to die unto sin, as Christ's death for sin. Off goes the filthy raiment at the sight of the glorious, spotless righteousness, which is freely presented to every needy sinner in Christ Jesus.

Make channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run:
And love hath overflowing streams
To fill them every one.
But if at any time we cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love for us
Will soon be parched and dried.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, Apr. 19, 1882.

HOPE to give our readers some deferred articles soon. Have been crowded with communications.

IT was just as our paper was going out full last week, that the account of Br. E. Miller's death reached us. It makes us feel lonely to see how death is thinning the ranks of the truly faithful.

A SERIOUS accident befel Eld. G. R. Krotzer, of Wilmington, Del., a few days ago. On Friday, April 4, he was attending a funeral, the horses became frightened, and the hack in which he rode came in collision with a stone wall, precipitating him violently through the front window, by which he was severely cut about his head, face and neck. His services have been highly appreciated by a church of brethren in New York City. Men of deep religious convictions and earnest consecration are the want of our times, and he is regarded as one of the small number in these closing times of the gospel age.

ON Sunday evening last there was one of the grandest displays of the Aurora Borealis ever witnessed in our latitude. It is thus described by a reporter to the Chicago Tribune who has been in stations far to the north, and who has witnessed between three and four hundred marked displays of the Northern Lights, but he says he never viewed anything so brilliant, or where there was so deep a blood-red color. His statement to the Tribune is:—

"At 9 p. m. the aurora presented the appearance of a bright whitish light about 20 degrees in width, extending from northeast by east to northwest. At 9:30 p. m. the light had assumed the appearance of an arch resting on a bank of dark haze, 10 to 15 degrees in width, maintaining this general appearance until 10 o'clock, when a bright reddish streak or band, four or five degrees in width, started in the east and worked its way gradually to the western extremity, where it was divided into two bright beams or streams, extending to the zenith. At the same time a well-defined lateral vibration or waving motion set in, which added great brilliancy to its appearance. At 10:27 a vertical vibration commenced, which added the lateral motion and rendered the effect indescribable."

AS BEAUTIFUL AT KANSAS CITY AS ANYWHERE ELSE.

KANSAS CITY, April 16.—The most beautiful display of the aurora borealis witnessed in this section of country for years was visible to-night, the entire northern and eastern sky being ablaze with exquisitely shaded colors ranging from bluish green to purple red. The phenomenon lasted several hours, and at times the flames of light shooting up from the horizon reached the zenith, then faded from sight, wave following wave in quick succession.

CINCINNATI'S VIEW OF THE DISPLAY.

CINCINNATI, O., April 16.—A very brilliant display of aurora borealis has been visible here all this evening in the northeast, its rays extending beyond the zenith.

The following items show some of the peculiar effects of this wonderful display:

CLEVELAND, O., April 17.—The electrical condition which was produced by the extraordinary auroral display last night more or less seriously affected a great many persons here, particularly those troubled with nervous disorders. Rev. S. L. Binkley, pastor of the Prospect Street Methodist Episcopal Church, was prostrated in his pulpit while praying, by what was at first supposed to be paralysis. Ladies fainted in churches during service, and people who were out of doors, as well as in, complain generally of strangely oppressive sensations, similar to those attendant upon earthquakes.

DETROIT, Mich., April 17.—The aurora borealis at this point at an early hour this morning was very fine. The effect was almost to entirely suspend telegraphic communication.

Bashan and Its Giant Cities.

J. L. PORTER, A. M.

THE DRUSES.

From Kunawat we saw two large deserted villages higher up the mountains, and a large deserted town below on the borders of the plain. These we had not time to visit. The hospitable Druses repeatedly urged us to spend another day with them; and we felt a strong inclination to linger in this old city, for there was much to interest us, not in the ruins merely, but likewise in the modern inhabitants. When squatting in the evening in the large reception room of the sheikh's house we observed with some surprise that though it was often crowded with Druses, old and young, not a man of them tasted coffee or tobacco except Mahmood. They all belong to the order of Okals, or "initiated;" and they are Nusairites in the widest sense. Kunawat, in fact, is almost a holy city for the Druses; their great religious chief resides here, and this place is consequently the centre of power and intrigue. They are a remarkable people. Their religion is a mystery; their manners are simple and patriarchal; their union and courage are proverbial; and though small in number they form the most powerful party in Syria. Whenever danger threatens, or when they find it expedient to resist the demands or exactions of the Porte, they congregate in the Hauran and there have ever been found ready to defend or subdue them. Here they defied Ibrahim Pasha, and destroyed the drawer of the Egyptian army; here they have once and again defeated the Turkish troops, and driven them back with disgrace to the very walls of Damascus. Physically they are the finest race in Western Asia—tall, stalwart, hardy mountaineers. Accustomed from childhood to vigorous exercise, and trained in athletic sports and the use of arms, they form a body of horse and foot against irregulars such as the world could scarcely match. But the grand secret of their power is their union. They act together as one man. Brotherly union in peace and war, in prosperity and adversity, is the chief article of their religious creed.

As regards religion they are divided into two classes, the "Initiated" and the "Ignorant." With the former the rites, ceremonies, and doctrines remain a profound secret. The holy books are preserved and read by them alone. They assemble in chapels every Thursday evening, refusing admission to all others. What they do then and there is unknown; but there is reason to believe that these meetings are quite as much of a political as a religious character.

The Druse sheikhs form a hereditary nobility, and preserve with great tenacity all the pride and state of their order. They receive and entertain travelers with profuse hospitality, and no compensation in money can be offered to them. To strangers, under ordinary circumstances, they are obliging, communicative, and faithful. In time of peace they are industrious and courteous; but in war they are noted alike for daring courage and unsparing ferocity.

When among this strange and primitive people in Bashan, I felt at once that I was out of the beaten track of tourists, where one can pitch his tent, picket his horses, cook his provisions, and march again, caring for nobody, and nobody caring for him. Here all is different. We are among a people of patriarchal manners and genuine patriarchal hospitality. We were looked on and treated as welcome guests. We could not pass town or village without being entreated to accept hospitality. "Will not my lord descend while his servants prepare a little food?" is the urgent language of every village sheikh. The coffee is always on the hearth; a kid or lamb—representative of the old "fatted calf"—is at hand, and can be "got ready" with all the despatch of ancient days. Food for servants, "provender" for horses, accommodation for all, are given as matters of course. In traveling through Bashan one fancies himself carried back to the days when the patriarchs sat in their tent doors, ready to welcome every visitor and hail every passer-by.

CHRIST'S MIGHTY POWERS.

I think, then, it is impossible to resist the conclusion that he must have had all these powers from his childhood, that they must have been growing stronger from day to day, and he, at the same time, more and more conscious of possessing them, not to use on any impulse of curiosity or self-will, but only as the voice within prompted. And it seems the most convincing testimony to his perfect Sonship, manifested in perfect obedience, that he should never have tested his powers during those thirty years as he did at once and with perfect confidence as soon as the call came. Had he done so his ministry must have commenced sooner; that is to say, before the method was matured by which he was to reconstruct and lift into a new atmosphere and on to a higher plane the faith and life of his own nation and of the whole world. But it is impossible to suppose that the works which he did, and the words he spoke, at thirty—which at once threw all Galilee and Judea into a ferment of hope and joy and doubt and anger—should have passed unnoticed had they been wrought and spoken when he was twenty. Here, as in all else, he waited for God's mind: and so, when the time for action came, worked with the power of God. And this waiting and preparation must have been the supreme trial of his faith. The holding this position must have been in those early years the holding of the very centre of the citadel of Man's soul (as Bunyan so quaintly terms) against which the assaults of the tempter must have been delivered again and again while the garrison was in training for the victorious march out into the open field of the great world, carrying forth the standard which shall never go back.—Thomas Hughes's "Gentleman and Christian" Selected by W. G. Moorcroft.

The Jewish Race and Their Scriptures.

In order to understand how strange a phenomenon is this indomitable vitality of the race, a race without a home or a country, compare their history for one moment with that of the many other tribes of other races who have been either migratory or scattered. Excepting the Arabs, also Abraham's descendants, all the other settled contemporary races around Palestine have either died out completely as the ancient people of Tyre, Edom, Assyria, Babylon, Egypt; or if migratory they have been lost and absorbed after a few centuries. "Though I make a full end of the nations whither I have driven thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee," says their prophet Jeremiah four times, speaking professedly in the name of God to the Jewish people.

What, then, has held them apart from other nations, yet held them together? It cannot be accounted for merely by their blood. Universal hatred might have kept them separate from other nations, but some internal bond between themselves must have held them together in a national unity—a unity which not 2,000 years of general exile has broken down.

There can be no doubt what this internal bond of union has been. It has not been merely a common countenance stamped by nature's hand with the indelible marks of brotherhood. It cannot have been a common language. It has been their common religion, their common historical glory. Wherever this race has gone, through how many centuries soever it has travelled, it has carried aloft and in triumph, with the blast of the silver trumpet, even amidst the direst sorrows, that wonderful scroll of their ancient history which we call the Old Testament Scripture, which claims to be, and which they affirm to be, the record of a revelation to their fathers by the Creator of the universe. How pale appear the dreary morals of Confucius beside this Hebrew Bible! How inane the Vedas, how heart-sickening the melodious fables of Homer! Here shines forth from the first in remotest ages the Shekinah, the glorious idea of one Everlasting Cause, Creator and Ruler of earth and heaven. Abraham was as clear a monotheist as Moses, and Moses as clear as Mendelssohn. Yes, it is the idea of the Infinite as one living eternal Personality which has bound the Jewish race together by the sublimest of spiritual ties from first to last. They were monotheists when Egypt, in the times Amenophis and Aahmes, were bowing down before a Pantheon of gods and goddesses—symbolised by oxen, by beetles and by hooded cobras—in a superstition redeemed from contempt by the single sublime legend of Osiris. They were then monotheists, believing and declaring the unity of God, as Lord of universal nature, the God of the heavenly forces and of man's conscience—the eternal God, in whose sight evil is but a transitory incident, the outcome of the creature's free will,—one God, the everlasting antagonist of moral evil, destined speedily to be vanquished as the serpent beneath the heel of humanity. They were monotheists when Syria and Assyria were grovelling in the vilest worship of a sexual dualism—offering obscene homage to the symbols of lust in the temples of Baal and Astarte. They were monotheists while Farther Asia, India, Persia, China, were entangled in the meshes of the more intellectual moral dualism of the East—in the belief of two eternal principles, one good, one evil, engaged in everlasting war. Yea, when all Eastern Asia held evil to be incurable, and eternal and divine, the race of Abraham held that evil was "but for a moment," and that God's goodness and justice alone were eternal; and they stuck unto this testimony age after age, without varying, the witnesses alone and unconquerable in antiquity to the sole sovereignty and eternity of the Holy God. And it is they who have taught this lesson to the nations of the modern world. If we, the gloomy dwellers in these half-lighted lands of the North, are not still agonizing in the terrible folds of an Evil Power who is a match for all goodness, and the destined tormentor of the universe for ever, we owe it to Abraham and his sons, and to those precious books which have held their own race together through all their wanderings.

What other books are like them? Try the experiment of translating Homer or the Egyptian Book of the Dead, or the classics of China, or India, or Rome, and read them weekly in the congregations of Europe and America. They would never enter on a second year of such a lectionary. But these books! The nations have hung in them for ages—though in translated tongues—and they are the Bible still, the delight of the scholar, the ailment of the saint, the comfort of the weary and the illuminating ray of the dying, from pole to pole. You may attempt a natural account of these phenomena. But only a supernatural one can satisfy all the facts. The God of Israel is the King of Glory. The lights that shine down on us from this starry firmament of Abraham's seed were kindled by the common parent of mankind "to guide our feet into the way of peace."—From Edward White's Merchants' Lecture, 24 January, 1882.

I am really surprised that you should find it necessary to appeal so earnestly to the readers of THE RESTITUTION to renew their subscriptions. I wonder if they remember who said "He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly?"

My failing sight has not permitted me to read a word of it for years, and I don't have opportunity to hear as much of it as I would like to, still I don't feel as though I can get along without it. For only four cents a week we have all the useful information and instruction it contains, besides hearing from brethren and sisters all over the country. I can do without a good many other things better than I can without the paper, and will never use tea, coffee, or any other needless or injurious things, and neglect THE RESTITUTION.

We have a great amount of work to do in a short space of time, and need just the help THE RESTITUTION offers. Let us be careful to use the means which God has given us in a manner that he will approve.

We have very good evidence that some have departed from the faith when we find that the large and noble body of Baptists in the States holding and teach that the Lord comes at the death of each of his saints.

In the minutes of the forty-sixth annual meeting of the Baptist State Convention of the State of Michigan we find on page 14, in the obituary notice of Sister Jane Goodman the statement, "After the death of her husband, which occurred about eight years ago, she passed her time with her daughter in Troy, waiting patiently the coming of the Lord. He came in the 53rd year of her age." The date of her death is Jan. 27, 1881. How far from the faith once delivered to the saints, is this declaration.

It is according to the word to wait patiently for the return or coming of the Lord. But to say that he has already come is a mistake. When the Lord comes the world at large will not be expecting him. He will come with all the holy angels. He will raise his sleeping ones, and the living who believe will be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump, and in one grand company of redeemed ones will go out to meet the Lord in the air.

This is what we are to wait for. It is a mistake to say that the coming of the Lord is at the death of any individual, for then the believing dead shall be made alive and the living who believe shall not die.

"He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 16.

O, sinner, knowing this, how can you procrastinate, or refuse to believe what the Author of eternal salvation has penned for your good and still turn your back against the Scriptures—at the same time not knowing the hour that he may return to the earth to gather his jewels?

Inspired by the above language of inspiration, I was immersed into the name of Christ last Sunday, by Brother Plummer. The great criterion with the sinful world is that they "are good as some who are in the church, and that they will be accepted." O, is it not what Jesus told his disciples over 1800 years ago, that "ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved?" Mark xiii. 13.

O, sinner, come and follow us, and be saluted by Eden's deathless songsters, the victor's palm bearers; and recline yourself among the verdant hills of the Paradise of God; and join in singing the grand anthems of salvation! "He that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." O will you come to Christ and as a reward be clad with immortality at his appearing and kingdom?

It is with a great degree of pleasure that I take up the pen to write these lines to let those of like precious faith who are scattered abroad, know what we are doing here in western Kansas.

A few of us met together on Sunday, April 2, as per announcement. Brother C. G. Bryant and his faithful wife came in their wagon from the western part of the county, a distance of fifteen miles. They were immersed by the writer, one year ago. Also Brother Reuben Walk and his estimable wife, who live five miles south-west. They were immersed into Christ about a year ago by Brother Daniel, who with his wife was also present at our humble home. My wife and I, with the families of the brethren, making twenty-three in all. We had a good enjoyable time in the name of the Master, reasoning together out of his word, and in singing the beautiful songs of Zion, encouraging one another in prayer, and exhortation until night, when at eight o'clock we did eat of the loaf and drink of the "fruit of the vine," showing the death of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We all felt renewed and much encouraged to press onward toward the prize of the high calling in Jesus Christ.

Times have been pretty severe and close with us here; scarcity of food for man and beast: but for the mild and open winter we should have suffered some, and my brother Daniel and I give thanks to God and a few of his servants for remembering us the past winter.

We have had no rain since last fall until this present week; it has been raining considerable for three days now: of course we had some snows through the winter, and winter wheat and rye are looking very well now, and we hope we may raise a bountiful crop. And above all let us hold fast to the faith unto the end, not minding the trials with which we are beset, nor the scoffs and jeerings of the world; or the cavilings and persecutions by false brethren. Let us keep the prize in view, hoping to gain the reward; even eternal life in the kingdom of God. Let us watch, and with patience wait for the Master's return from heaven; and walk so that we may not be ashamed before him at his coming.

Yours in the hope,

JOSIAH M. FIKE.

Robins Have Come Again.

There's a call upon the housetop, as one were from the plain:
There's a warble in the sunshine, a stir in the rain;
And through my heart, at the sound of these
There comes a nameless thrill.
As sweet as odor to the rose,
Or verdure to the hill.
And all these joyous mornings
My heart pours forth this strain:
"God bless the dear old robins,
That have come back again."

For they bring a thought of summer, of dreamy, lazy days,
Of hay-cups in the meadow, making a golden haze;
A longing for the clover blooms,
For roses all aglow,
For fragrant orchards where the bees,
With droning murmurs go;
I dream of all the beauties
Of summer's golden reign,
And sing, "God keep the robins,
Who have come back again."

A Good Recommendation.

"Sir," said a lad coming down to one of the wharves in Boston, and addressing a well-known merchant, "Sir, have you any berth for me on your ship? I want to earn something."

"What can you do?" asked the gentleman.

"I can try my best to do whatever I am put to," answered the boy.

"What have you done?"

"I have sawed and split all mother's wood for nigh two years."

"What have you not done?" asked the gentleman, who was a queer sort of a questioner.

"Well, sir," answered the boy, after a moment's pause, "I have not whispered once in school for a whole year."

"That's enough," said the gentleman; "you may ship aboard this vessel, and I hope to see you the master of her, some day. A boy who can master a wood-pile, and bridle his tongue, must be made of good stuff."

A Touching Incident.

An English actress passing a street one day heard singing. She looked in at an open door upon a little prayer meeting and caught the words—

"Depth of mercy can there be Mercy still reserved for me?"

She entered, listened sublime, and then went away, but the hymn went with her. She became a Christian, and determined to have the stage—but the manager would not release her from fulfilling her engagement. The last night she played with unusual brilliancy, and at the close was called before the curtain. Her contract was discharged; she had no master now but her Christ. Standing there with clasped hands and streaming eyes she sang:

"Depth of mercy! can there be
Mercy still reserved for me?
Can my God his wrath forbear—
Me the chief of sinners spare?"

The audience was melted by the pathetic confession and plea, and many sought the same mercy.—Dawn of the Morning.

How Monkeys are Captured.

The ape family resemble men. Their vices are human. They love liquor, and fall. In Darfour and Sanar the natives make a fermented beer of which the monkeys are passionately fond. Aware of this the natives go to the parts of the forest frequented by the monkeys, and set on the ground calabashes full of the enticing liquor. As soon as the monkey sees and tastes it he utters loud cries of joy that soon attract his comrades. Then an orgy—like the less to do—not half the time, but all the time; not grudgingly, but gladly; and not merely for the sake of a salary, but because he loves to be at it, and makes the work in good measure its own reward. It shall come to pass, if you take hold like this, that men will say you have a genius for what you take in hand. But you will know that one of the fine qualities of a genius for anything is an absorbing love for it, and the power of intense application, by which every other power is set to its finest edge and directed to the one great purpose the man holds in his heart and brain. You may set this truth in whatever light you will, of business, or work on the common levels, or work on the loftiest heights, to give your heart to it is one of the greatest secrets of success. It might seem to you that a great many men go from the bottom to the top of the ladder at one jump. It is not true. And all the men I know who have made a real success of their life are hard climbers.—Robert College.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I will be at King's Corner Saturday before third Sunday in May, to continue over Sunday, as Brother Thurman may arrange.

J. F. WAGONER.

The Annual Conference of the State of Michigan will be held at Watson Corner, Allegan county, Mich., commencing June 1, and lasting over the following Sunday. Those coming by rail from the north or south on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad will stop at Monteith, and take the Allegan division to Fisk's Crossing, three miles from Monteith, where ample provision will be made for all that shall come. A general attendance is desired at this meeting as we expect this to be the best Conference ever held in Michigan. Let all come praying the Lord's blessing to be with this meeting. Able ministers will be in attendance to preach the word.

K. K. WOODWARD, Sec.

We never keep so true a watch over our ways as when we walk as in God's presence. The realization of God's presence is the one sovereign remedy against temptation. It is that which sustains us, consoles us. It is not by constraint or by painful effort that we make real progress. On the contrary, it is simply a question of yielding up our will, of going from day to day whithersoever God may lead us, discouraged by nothing, satisfied with the present moment, thankful to let Him do all who has made all, and to leave our own will immovable within his will. How happy it is to abide in this condition! How satisfied is the heart, even though it may look all else!—Pendus.

GRAND FORKS, Dak., April 12.—The river is rising, and although twenty feet below the level of the town, is higher than it has been for ten years. The river rises about three feet every twenty-four hours. Two mills are afloat down, and a brewery on the river bank is flooded. The town outside the are corner for three hundred families, whose houses on the flats were inundated. The loss up to date will foot up $10,000. The town has been cut off from the outside world by wash-outs.

The worst storm of the season of snow and wind is reported in the Black Hills region of Dakota and Wyoming Territories, having been in progress for several days, and doing great damage. The snow is two feet deep on the level.

American Newspapers in 1882.

The American Newspaper Directory, which will be issued next month by Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, will contain the names of 10,611 periodicals in the United States and Territories, which is a gain of 344 in the year just passed. The number of daily papers has increased in a somewhat larger proportion, and is now represented by a total of 900 against 821 in 1881. The largest increase has been in New York—10 dailies, 29 of all sorts. Illinois and Missouri show a percentage of gain which is even greater, while Colorado leads all others in the percentage of increase, both of daily and weekly issues. California, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, and West Virginia have fallen behind 1881 in the total number of periodicals issued. In Georgia, Maine and Massachusetts the suspensions have exactly counterbalanced the new ventures. In every state not mentioned above, and in the Territories, there has been an increase.

God has not chosen to exempt the Bible by a miracle from the fate of other books, but has wisely left room for the diligence and research of man, who is responsible for the use of all the faculties within his reach for the study of the Bible. He has not provided for inspired transcribers any more than for inspired printers, nor for infallible translators any more than for infallible commentators and readers. He wants no miracles. He desires free and intelligent worshippers.—Philip Schaff.

Inspiration has no explanation; it touches the soul and moves the hand like unsuspected presences, and we cannot tell how we did it. ## A PRAYER.

A. B. OPIE.

Come, thou Eternal Spirit, who on the face
Of the abysmal waters, when the earth
Was without form and void, brooding didst move,
Silent Omnipotence, whereon but felt,
The white beneath thy penetrating power
Light at thy voice broke forth, a fated
Ray intense to the soulless, starless gloom.
Ev'n now, as then, no chaos can resist thy work
Till heeling forth upon the vast expanse,
Thy mountains, rivers, lakes and placid seas,
Electrified on that first Sabbath eve,
Felicitate goodness and that all was good.
Come then, and brood over the deep and cover
With thy hands the Bible in me, and enlighten
Eternal intelligible and clear,
That the world to come—the native eternal home—
May be the object of my hope and fear.
And that abiding rest upon the cuspid out points of all
Its fires as of cloven tongues of fire,
A cap and crest of heat and luminous flame.
Have thou not taken from Him, me, these from Me,
Inspire Him to fortify my souls
Preach as Jonah Peter, as say empe...
Through my feeble hands.
Be unknown as not pleased to rest from man.
Now shine thy lamp shine all thy resources for Advent near, and in onward and for Ever [illegible] where thou hast had the way.

COMING AGE—ITS PROXIMITY.

Their Power over the Elements, Fire, Heaven, Water, Earth, Beast, His rise. His Identity, Examined and Explained.

No. 107.

J. V. WHITBEE.

We have traced the two witnesses from the tabernacle in two orders of officers: first filled by Aaron and Moses, then by their successors during a period of 440 years, to the building of Solomon's temple; then to the captivity in Babylon, 400 years. And from the rebuilding of the temple to the death of Christ, the end of the old covenant, 553 years; and, during all that period, from Moses to the Cross, have found the same two orders of witnesses standing before God. These were the two representative orders of witnesses under the old covenant.

Under the new covenant church, we have again traced two orders. Ministers of the word, and ministers of tables; these, attending to the spiritual and temporal wants of the congregations of believers, down to the nationalization of the ecclesia; thence through the "Wilderness" delivering their testimonies: contending for the true royal high priesthood of Christ against the royal high-priesthood of his apostate vicar.

We have examined another view which accounts for, and explains the reason of Christ's calling his witnesses, two; that he names the least legal number, but does not intend to exclude any who bear testimony for him and against the harlot, and her great national friend.

The apostolic use of the term witness, does not conflict with either of these views. Having given these, let us continue: Rev. xi. 5-6.—"And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it rained not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will."

Their power over the elements,—Fire, air, earth, and waters, is expressed in the verse above quoted. This power comes from God to protect them while giving their testimony, in the outer court, before those who were deadly enemies. Our earthly courts protect their witnesses under similar circumstances; and will the God of the earth do less for those who stand before his judicial bar? and will he protect two, only, and abandon all the others, equally faithful? Their prophecies, let it be understood, are not new revelations. They are bearing testimony to the truth of the gospel that Paul uttered: they are denouncing the new gospel that is being triumphantly proclaimed by the apostacy and shall they be interrupted in the midst of their testimony. Will Christ desert his bride while she occupies the witness stand? Did Moses wield the arm of Jehovah in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness for the deliverance of his ancient people from bondage, in the land of Ham? And will he not protect his beloved bride while testifying against the corruptions of the harlot, drunken with the blood of her own tender offspring?

How long was their testimony in sackcloth to continue? "A thousand two hundred and three score days—1260 days.

History teaches, that the faithful witnesses of Christ bore testimony (through the spirit) seeking them competent) to the principles of the ancient gospel; and against the corruptions of the apostacy, during the long night of Papal supremacy. This night covered the wilderness state of the sun-clad woman, (Rev. 6.) "who fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there, a thousand two hundred and three score days" (1260 days). It will be readily seen that this is a sack cloth state, and, that it is of the same duration as the sack cloth state of the two wildernesses. We are, therefore, forced to conclude that they are, either identical, or, that history is at fault as to the one in the wilderness. We are inclined to credit the historic record, even at the expense of a theory. Of the past, we can gather ample proof, our interpretation of the future is liable to many serious objections.

The Christians who lived in the 1260 years of Papal supremacy, were called by various names according to the character of the attribute to be described:

1. When their holiness is noted, they are called saints.

2. When they are viewed as a community, they have the name of City.

3. When they are spoken of as a body of worshipers, they are called, ecclesia, church, or congregation.

4. When their relationship to their Divine Lord and Master is represented, a woman.

5. When delivering testimony, they are called witnesses.

6. If they seal their testimony with their blood, they have the name of martyr.

7. As God's dwelling (by his spirit) they are a temple.

8. When sustainers of God's system of revealed truth they are pillars,—lamp stands.

9. When viewed as God's official channels of Divine grace, they are olive trees. These, with others are in the Apocalypse.

These witnesses are brought to view in Dan. vii. 18, 21, 22, 25. Rev. xi. 1-12., xii. 1-17. xiii. 7. xvii. 6-14. xviii. 4. xix. 7-8. xx. 4, 20., also in Rev. xvi, 6.

The period of their persecutions, or sackcloth state, covers 1260 days. And, as history proves, they are symbolic days, 1260 years. In presenting the subject distinctly, three passages will be adduced in connection with their fulfillment, as noted in history.

First passage.—"I beheld, and the same horn (little horn) made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints (rendered in favor of the saints) of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the Kingdom.

In the explanation of the interpreting angel the little horn's character and acts were stated to Daniel. "He shall be diverse from the first, (ten) and he shall subdue three (of the ten) Kings (kingdoms). Dan. vii 24. The special charges against the little horn, before the court of the Ancient of days, are given in verse 25. 1 He shall speak (great) words against the Most High: 2 Shall wear out the saints of the Most High: 3 Shall change times and laws; 4 and they (saints with times and laws) shall be given into his hand until a time and times (two times) and the dividing of time. 3½ times—1260 years. But the judgment (on the little horn) shall sit, they (the other kingdoms) shall take away his dominion, (he being condemned in 1798—civil power taken to consume, and to waste away to the end." Verse 26.

The little horn came up last, after A. D. 476. It was peculiar, it had eyes and a mouth—an ecclesiastical as well as civil, horn. A horn is a symbol of a civil dynasty; its eyes and mouth being an ecclesiastical power. Who has not read of the See of Rome? The papal hierarchy is the Roman See. They are the eyes and the mouth of the papal world. This peculiarity of look and impudence of speech, made him one among eleven. Deducing 1260 years from A. D. 1798, we have A. D. 538, about the time of the rise of the Papal Hierarchy which is usually placed between A. D. 532, and A. D. 540. Between this date and A. D. 1798, (when the Pope was stripped of his civil power, and led into captivity; since that time it languished till 1863. When it became extinct) are located all the bloody persecutions of the Papacy. Our deductions are as follows:

1. The judgment of the Ancient of days on the little horn has taken place; since the sentence against that power has been executed. The order in criminal trials is—(a) Arraignment; (b) Indictment read: (c) Testimony adduced: (d) Sentence rendered: (e) Sentence executed. When we read of an execution, we presuppose these five acts. The sentence on the little horn was, "His dominion they shall take away." But it is known over the world, that his dominion is taken away, and we are in the judgment age—"the hour of God's judgment," on the little horn. That judgment, then can not be in the future; nor can their terrible crimes be in the future; neither can the date (1260 years) which marks the period of the commission of those crimes be future; nor can the testimony which caused that criminal to commit those bloody acts, be future; nor can those witnesses, that delivered the testimony which caused that criminal to commit those bloody acts, which arraigned him before the bar of the Ancient of days, to be tried, condemned, executed, be any future agents. Let this deduction be carefully examined.

Deduction second.—God's executive judgment on the little horn, denounced and fixes our locality in prophetic history. Let us examine its surroundings in the night vision of Dan. vii. That vision covers the prophetic chart from B. C. 553 to the reign of Christ.

The four great monarchies of the metallic image appear under a new set of symbols—the lion, the bear, the leopard, and a sea monster. Glancing over the acts of the first three, Daniel's attention is particularly drawn to the appearance and acts of the sea monster. Daniel has but little to say about the beast himself; only that it was dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and, that it had great iron teeth: that it had devoured and broke in pieces and stamped the others under its feet. His family more especially interests the prophet, particularly the youngest—the pet—the offspring of his old age,—his "little horn." His eyes and mouth distinguish him from his ten older brothers. He was a very little runty infant;—all eyes and mouth. He was born talking, and looking about his brothers' kitchens. He wanted to see every where: talk down every body, and have his way in every thing. No doubt but the prophet thought, "Poor little impudent runt! You will come to some bad end." And he has, and will. One of his first acts was to rob three of his brothers, and put their crowns upon his own head. He was very pious; so exceedingly devoted to worship in his own way, that he would not allow a person, a custom, nor a law to resist his will. It was his delight to plant his little foot upon the neck of the mightiest of his brotherhood. He made crowns his pavement. He acknowledged no equal on earth; and, in heaven, if he had any, there was no superior. Such was his domination for more than twelve centuries, till the cries of a world of martyrdom demanded a reckoning.

Daniel looks forward to the day of reckoning; sees the presiding judge, the Ancient of days erect the thrones of judgment over the throne of the usurper; take his seal; summons the criminal to his bar; open the books, (histories of marvered witnesses); hears him pronounce his sentence; and sees the criminal delivered into the hands of his executioners, his own down trodden brotherhood, amid lightnings, thunderings, tempestuous seas, darkening of the sun and moon, and falling of stars.

The events of Daniel's visions up to the execution of this noted judgment we read in profane history. What were the next events seen by Daniel; and we may add, the only events? "One like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him; and there was given him dominion, glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him: his dominion (is) an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom (that) which will not be destroyed." Verse 13-14. As the nobleman he then returns. Luke. xix. 12. "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever." Verse 18. (see vs. 27). This includes the reign of subjugation.

Third deduction.—In this era, or "hour" of judgment, before Christ, as a Royal High Priest, can erect his throne of empire over all the earth, he must overthrow three politico—ecclesiastical dynasties; (1) that of the dragon, including the idolatrous world: (2) The Mahometan dynasty embracing the Mahomedan world; (3) and the dynasty of the beast, with its allied apostate Christianity. These distinct systems of false religions have allied themselves with three great political dynasties, which must be superseded by the all-conquering power of the Son of man, as King of kings, and Lord of lords. That we have passed through the first act in this terrible drama, is a matter of historical record.

"PUNISHMENT OF SIN."—No. 4.

And then at length "the wicked shall be severed from among the just." Matt. xiii. 49. Dan. xii. 2. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

In such a sleep I should suppose Lazarus to have been lying, if it were asked whither his soul betook itself during those four days of death. For I cannot believe that it would have been called back from heaven to suffer again the inconveniences of the body, but, rather that it was summoned from the grave, and passed on the sleep of death. The words of Christ them selves lead to this conclusion.

John xi. 11. 13. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep; howbeit Jesus spake of his death:" which Jesus, if the miracle were true must have believed. This is confirmed by the circumstance of Christ's raising him: verse 43: "He cried with a loud voice Lazarus come forth."

If the soul of Lazarus, that is, if Lazarus himself was not within the grave, why did Christ call to the lifeless body which could not hear? If it were the soul which he addressed, why did he call it from a place where it was not? Had he intended to intimate that the soul was separated from the body, he would have directed his eyes to the quarter where the soul of Lazarus might be expected to return, namely, from heaven: for to call from the grave what is not there, is like seeking the living among the dead, which the angel remembered as ignorance in the disciples. Luke xxiv. 5. The same is apparent in the raising of the widow's son. Luke vii. 14. On the other hand, those who assert that the soul is exempt from death, and that when divested of the body, it wings its way, or is conducted by angels, directly to its appointed place of reward or punishment, where it remains in a separate state of existence to the end of the world, found their belief principally on the following passages of Scripture:

Psa. xlix. 15. "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

But this proves rather that the soul enters the grave with the body, as was shown above, from whence it needs to to be redeemed, namely, at the resurrection, when "God shall receive it," as follow in the same verse. As for the remainder, "their redemption cometh for ever." Verse 3. And they are "like the beasts that perish." Verses 12, 14.

The second text is Eccl. vii. 7. "The spirit shall return unto God that gave it."

But neither does this prove what is required; for the phrase, "the spirit returning to God," must be understood with considerable latitude; since the wicked do not return to God at death, but depart from him. The preacher had moreover said before (iii. 20). "All go unto one place;" and God is said both to have given, and to gather unto himself the spirit of every living thing whilst the body returns to dust."

Job xxxiv. 14. 15. "If he gather unto himself his spirit and breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." See also Psa. civ. 29, 30; also Ezek. xxxvii. 9, "Come from the four winds, O breath;" it is certain therefore that the spirit of man must have previously departed thither from whence it is now summoned to return.

Hence perhaps originates the expression in Matt. xxiv. 31. "They shall gather together the elect from the four winds." For why should not the spirits of the elect be as easily gathered together as the smallest particles of their bodies, sometimes most widely dispersed throughout different countries"

In the same manner is to be understood 1 Kings xvii. 21, "Let this child's soul come unto him again." See Judges xv. 19, "His spirit came again, and he revived." See also 1 Sam. xxx. 12.

There are many passages of Scripture, some of which have been already quoted, which undoubtedly represent the dead as devoid of all vital existence; but what was advanced above respecting the death of the spirit affords a sufficient answer to the objection.

The third passage is Matt. x. 23, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."

It may be answered that, properly speaking, the body cannot be killed, as being in itself a thing inanimate; the body therefore, as is common in Scripture, must be taken for the whole human compound, or for animal and temporal life; the soul for that spiritual life with which we shall be clothed after the end of the world, as appears from the remainder of the verse, and being a desire to depart (cupiens dissolvi, having a desire for dissolution) and to be with Christ."

But, to say nothing of the uncertain and disputed sense of the word ἀναλύσαι, which signifies anything rather than dissolution, it may be answered, that although Paul desired to obtain immediate possession of heavenly perfection and glory, in like manner as every one is desirous of attaining as soon as possible to that, whatever it may be, which he regards as the ultimate object of his being, it by no means follows that, when the soul of each individual leaves the body, it is received immediately in heaven or hell. For he had a desire to be with Christ;" that is, at his appearing, which all the Scriptures hold out as expected near the end of time at hand. In the same manner one who is going on a voyage desires to set sail and to arrive at the destined port, (such is the order in which his wishes arrange themselves) omitting all notice of the intermediate passage. If, however, it be true that there is no time without motion, which Aristotle illustrates by the example of those who were fabled to have slept in the temple of the heroes, and who, on awaking, imagined that the moment in which they awoke had succeeded without an interval to that in which they fell asleep; how much more must intervening time be annihilated to the deceased, so that to them to die and to be with Christ will seem to take place at the same moment; Christ himself, however, expressly indicates the time at which we shall be with him; John xiv. 3, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—*Selected from the writings of Milton, by H. ## LETTERS FROM PALESTINE.—No. 2.

EGLA FLOYD.

We are now at the American Colony, about one mile north of the city of Joppa; and from here we will make an excursion to the Holy City (Jerusalem). We pass the Mohammedan graveyard just on our right, where there are several tents pitched between the tombs. Among the tombs of their relations and friends the Mohammedans spend their days of mourning, also their days of rejoicing. Many hire the blind to sing by the side of the tombs of their relatives. That horrid noise we hear so often in their graveyard is not, as the stranger supposes, wild animals howling,—but people singing. Here we notice they bury as in ancient time. They have just opened an old grave and taken out the bones, which are all that remain of the last one buried in this tomb. It was the father of the young man whom they are preparing to bury. The young man is first washed and then wrapped in new white linen; his feet are tied together, and also his hands, with the same stuff as his body is wrapped in, and then a napkin is wound around his face, John xi. 44. The bones of the father are put back in the grave with him, and thus he "sleeps with his father." 2 Chron. xxviii. 27.

We pass through the market, which is well furnished with fruit and vegetables the most of the year. Just outside of the market place the muleteer (owner of horses and mules) has to pay toll and take a ticket for each horse or mule that travels over the road between Jaffa and Jerusalem. He has to pay for each horse, mule, camel or donkey six cents government currency,—equal to nine market currency; for a carriage one has to pay fifty or sixty cents each way. The road was made mostly by pressed labor, and yet the government charges toll. What a government! It will no doubt sound strange to hear us speak of government currency and market currency; but there is a great difference. There is also different currency in every town and city: for instance, In Beyrout (120 miles north of Jaffa) a Napoleon—a four-dollar gold piece—goes for 102 piasters: in Jaffa for 122, in Jerusalem for 107; in Nablous (10 miles north of Jerusalem) 118; in Nazareth (about 40 miles north of Nablous) 128; and in Tiberias (20 miles northeast of Nazareth) the Napoleon is 100 piasters. The above mentioned are market prices; in government currency the Napoleon in Jaffa is 85 piasters.

It will take us about half an hour to get through those orange, lemon and pomegranate gardens. The trees are now loaded with oranges. About half way from the city to the Plain we pass a fountain among sycamore trees, which, according to tradition, is on the site where Peter raised Dorcas. Acts ix. 36-42. As we pass along, on each side of the road are numerous tamarisk trees, which look very much like our pine. We soon enter the Plain of Sharon, which reaches south 40 miles to Gaza, and north 60 miles to Carmel. Its average width is about 15 miles. Where the carriage road crosses, it is about twenty miles wide. We soon pass on our right the Jewish Agricultural School; Mr. Charles Netter, of Paris, is the president of the society. The Plain of Sharon is bounded on the west by the Mediterranean Sea, on the east by the hills of Samaria, Benjamin and Judea—all of which are in full view from where we emerge from the gardens on the plain. In about half an hour's travel from the Jewish farm we pass a modern village called Tanra, which to the stranger looks like a ruin. This village is said to mark the site of Hosa Shual, of Joshua xix. 4. It is the traditional site where Samson caught the three hundred foxes, put firebrands to their tails and let them go into the Philistine's grain, Judges xv. 4, 5. At this village the road to Lydda branches off to the left. On the left is a mosque, and just opposite is a square stone building, called wely,—the tomb of a prophet, pilgrim from Mecca, or one related to Mohammed. Every year or two it is whitewashed, and reminds one of what our Lord said to the Scribes and Pharisees, Matt. xxiii: 27. From this place we can see many flocks of sheep, goats, cows, camels and asses feeding on the Plain of Sharon, 1 Chron. xxvii: 29. At almost any time that we cross this plain from the middle of November until the end of March, we can see the fellahin (farmers) ploughing. A common man can carry on his shoulder a whole set of their farming utensils—including plough, yoke, hoes and ox goad. The most of their plows are wood; the part that is iron looks like the fluke of a small anchor. The yoke is a small, straight, round pole, with straight sticks in each end, which go down on each side of the neck of the ox and are tied with a small string under the ox's throat. The plough only has one handle, as in ancient times, Luke ix: 62. The ox-goad is from eight to ten feet long, with a sharp piece of iron like a chisel on one end, which is used for cleaning the plough; and a spear in the other to prick the cattle with. In time of riots they use the ox-goad as a weapon of war, the same as in the time of Shamgar; but I do not know of any one who has slain so many at once with an ox-goad as he did. Judges iii: 31. In March, April and May the whole Plain of Sharon (where not cultivated) is covered with flowers of almost every kind, except its own peculiar rose, Solomon's Songs ii: 1. During the spring the Plain of Sharon is like a flower garden. It makes one rejoice while travelling across it, Isa. xxxv: 1, 2.

We pass on through grain fields and over low hills, for about two miles, to a large olive grove, said to have been planted by Napoleon eighty-three years ago. On our way we pass to our left a small village called Beit Dejan—the name reminds one of the deity of the Philistines; and this village is often pointed out by ignorant guides and dragomen as the site where the house of Dagon was. But the house of Dagon was about 18 miles south of this place, in Ashdod, 1 Sam. v: 1, 2, 3. From this large olive grove we ascend for about half an hour to the top of a low ridge, where the town and tower of Ramleh is in full view, about three miles direct ahead. And just opposite, about two miles north of Ramleh, we can see the top of a Greek convent, which is said to mark the birthplace of St. George. The town of Lydda is about as large as Ramleh, but it is so completely surrounded by olive groves that we can only see the top of the church of St. George. The ancient name of Lydda was Lod, 1 Chron. viii: 12; Ezra ii: 33; Neh. vii: 37. It was to Lydda that Peter went to visit the saints which dwelt there; and at the same time cured Eneas who had been sick eight years with the palsy, Acts ix: 33, 34. On our way from this ridge to Ramleh we pass on our right a modern village called Surafend, surrounded by cactus hedges. Their houses are built mostly of mud and sticks, one story high, and only one room in each, and without windows. They cook, eat, drink and sleep all together in one room (that is each family). In the coldest weather they put their cattle in the room with their family. They all enter by the same door; but the floor of the family is about two feet higher than where the cattle stand. The manger for the cattle to eat out of is made out of the floor on which the family live; and it is not an uncommon thing to see children a few days old lying in the manger,—that is when the cattle are out of the house.

At Ramleh one feels quite delighted with the fragrance and loveliness of the numerous gardens and orchards around the town; but, oh how changed is one's feelings on entering the narrow, dirty, filthy streets of the town! It is quite a common thing to see in the streets on entering the town, dead dogs, cats, and even dead donkeys,—which lie until eaten up by the jackals. Ramleh is the traditional Arimathea of the Bible, Matt. xxvii. 57. Here are three convents,—the Russian, Greek and Latin (Roman Catholic). The latter is said to be built on the sight where the house of Nicodemus stood! There are a few soap factories in Ramleh. Here is a small German hotel, which is kept very clean and neat, which is a great comfort to travelers in their way from Jaffa to the City of the Great King. Before this hotel was in running order travellers, who could not make the journey from Jaffa to Jerusalem in one day, had to put up in the Latin convent. The most interesting thing around Ramleh at the present is an old Saracenic tower about a quarter of a mile from the town. From its top is a grand view of Askelon, Ashdod, Ekron, Gath, Gezer, Gimzo, Valley of Ajalon, Lydda, Mount Carmel, Mount Tabor, the upper Bethhoron and the whole Plain of Sharon—from Gaza on the south to Carmel on the north.

Slaughter of the Canaanites.

The severity of the measures adopted by the divine leader (first Joshua and then the nation which surrounds them) is rendered by exciting a kind of resentment which can only be explained by assuming entire ignorance of the situation. The most superficial knowledge of the moral condition of the Canaanites and their worship, for instance, is sufficient to explain why such stringent measures were taken. To a certain point, had reached a depth which can hardly be conceived of, and their idolatry was perhaps scarcely reflective that absolute extermination was necessary for the preservation of the Jewish people. If the Canaanites had been reduced to slavery and held in subjection, in dread of being exterminated, they would have debauched their conquerors. Every student knows that the vices of these races would have wrecked civilization in the East, and is ready to declare, with Dr. Arnold, "that the Israelites' sword, in its bloodiest executions, showed a work of mercy for all the countries of Canaan to the very end of the world."—Prof. Fisk on Introd. to Herodotus.

FOREVER THERE.

E. V. 2259.

Where the crystal waters flow,
There the fountain of life,
There no death-frost, there no snow,
There no mad'ning strife.

Roses bloom and loves return,
In that world of peace.
Hlers never chill and suns never burn,
There all pain shall cease.

There the glow of endless day,
There the crown shall shine,
There the Truth, the Life, the Way,
There—forever thine.

ISRAEL IN EXILE: ARE THE ANGLO-SAXONS THEIR DESCENDANTS?—No. 2.

J. CARPENTER

Some time ago my attention was directed to the prophecy of Amos, in connection with this subject. This prophet was contemporary with Isaiah, and uttered his predictions shortly before the carrying away of the ten tribes of Israel. The impending captivity formed one of the themes of his prophecy.

An expression in chapter vi., verse 1, was sought to be applied to the ten tribes in their exiled and scattered condition, namely, "chief of the nations." The passage reads,—

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria, which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came."

Now there is no reason why "chief of the nations" should be applied to the nation of Israel at any period, either during their exile or previously. But it has an appropriate application in the passage and context to the rulers of the two nations of Judah and Israel, and that at the time the prophecy was uttered. "Zion" and "Samaria," both here named, were the seats of their respective governments; and throughout the chapter the parties addressed are spoken of as occupying a high social position. Thus at verse 3, the prophet describes their conduct.

"Ye that put far away the evil day, and cause the seat of violence to come near; that lie upon the beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; that chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David; that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph."

This must have been antecedent to their exile; for in the next verse (7) this conduct is given as the cause of their captivity,—

"Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed."

The verses that follow are even more expressive as to the rulers of the people, being the special subject of this part of the prophecy. Thus verses 8 and 11:

"The Lord God hath sworn by himself, saith the Lord the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces: therefore will I deliver up the city, with all that is therein."

"For, behold, the Lord commandeth, and he will smite the great house with breaches, and the little house with clefts."

The reference here to "palaces" and "houses" clearly to the parties addressed as being the heads of the nations; and the "great house" and "little house" as plainly point to the royal houses of the respective kingdom of Israel and Judah.

I find on looking into the Douay Bible that this sense of the passage is sustained by that version. The verse is thus rendered: "Woe to you that are wealthy in Sion, and to you that have confidence in the mountain of Samaria; ye great men, heads of the people, that go in with state into the house of Israel." Without vouching for the entire accuracy of this rendering, it seems sufficiently in harmony with the context to corroborate the view I have given.

But we must not overlook the circumstance that the marginal reading of "chief of the nations," is "first-fruits" of the nations. This is susceptible of two applications. It may apply to the ruling sovereigns and priests of two kingdoms, as a complimentary term given to them by their admirers among the people. Their language is, "named chief (or first-fruits) of the nations." The quality of sacredness was no doubt intended to be expressed by the term "first-fruits," and possibly some kind of superiority beyond that of mere rank. It might also have been applied to the nations as a whole, in relation to the other nations by whom they were surrounded at the time of the prophecy. The mention of Calneh, Hamath, and Gath in the second verse lends some countenance to this view. In either case the time referred to is that when the prophet spoke.

But suppose we must apply the phrase "chief of nations" to the nation of Israel as the greatest nation in the world at some time subsequent to the deliverance of the prophecy, what reason is there for finding the fulfilment of it during the year of their exile and scattering? It is true they were chosen to be a peculiar treasure to Jehovah above all peoples: but only on condition of their obeying the voice of Jehovah. For disobedience on the part of both rulers and people they were scattered, and there is no evidence that they have yet in their scattered state complied with the condition.

At the same time it is to be noted, that in the future, when they shall be restored to their own land and to the Divine favor, they shall again become His peculiar nation, and occupy a position of supremacy among all the nations. Then the term "chief of the nations" shall be applicable to the united nation of Israel in an eminent degree.

This prophecy of Amos brings before us another point in relation to this subject. As I mentioned in my former article, one of the marks by which the British people are alleged to be identified with Israel is their numerical increase. A friend of mine, a believer in this identity, argues that because the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin have increased during their dispersion, the ten tribes must also have increased. He says,—

"If Judah and Benjamin, or rather the remnant of them, multiplied in their adversity from seven to ten millions, is it reasonable to cramp the increase of the other ten tribes into an unknown corner of the earth, that is, the realms of the mythic Prester John? If, say, 50,000 returned from Babylon increased to ten million in 2,500 years under the adverse circumstances of God's curse, how many should be the increase of, say, eight million in 2,700 years under more favorable auspices? These average numbers are, I think, fair in each case. I can find no estimate of the number of the ten tribes at the time of their total deportation; but as in the time of David's census they had increased to about four million in 470 years, eight millions in 700 years is a fair estimate. My object in this is to show that the very laws of ethnology precludes such a feeble conclusion [the ten tribes cramped into a corner of the earth], and demand, when backed by the prophetic testimonies of their being found the chief of the nations, that we look elsewhere than in fabled Nesspur, etc., for the ten tribes."

But my friend here begs the entire question. He assumes the very point in dispute, in asserting that the ten tribes have existed in more favorable circumstances during their exile than Judah! That is, I presume, they have lived in Britain, the United States, and in Australia as a prosperous and powerful people; while Judah has been persecuted and despised as an outcast race among the despotic powers of Europe. But this is just what needs to be proved.

And what propriety is there in speaking of Central Asia as "an unknown corner of the earth?" The fact that it is comparatively unknown is in favor of its turning out to be the principal locality of the remains of the ten tribes. But Central Asia has room enough for the ten tribes, although their increase were tenfold the estimate quoted. China, a comparatively small portion of Asia, contains some 400 millions of people. Chinese Tartary and Russian Tartary, leaving out Siberia, extend to more than four times the area of China.

The descendants of Judah and Benjamin, usually termed Jews, are estimated at something over seven millions at the present time. Estimating the number which returned from Babylon, as quoted, at 50,000, the increase for 2,400 years is only at the rate of doubling the population every three centuries. It seems to me that this is considerably below what "the laws of ethnology" under ordinary circumstances would indicate. And let it be kept in mind that even this small increase has taken place under comparatively favorable circumstances. The Jews have, for the most part, been located in the midst of large masses of population, well advanced in civilization, principally in Europe, India, and China. Upon the whole, especially in more recent times, their circumstances have not been altogether unfavorable to increase.

Let us now examine the evidence we have as to the localities where the ten tribes were carried to, and the circumstances in which they have been placed, with a view to ascertain whether they are likely to have increased or diminished in point of numbers.

The ten tribes were, in the first instance, carried into Assyria and Media, in a north-eastern direction. There is no positive evidence that they ever afterwards moved westwards. But there is some evidence that they went still farther eastwards.

In the Apocryphal book of 2 Esdras xiii. 40–47, we find the following description of these outcast wanderers:—

"These are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land, in the time of Osea the king, whom Salmanezer, the King of Assyria, led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land. And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river. For the Most High then showed signs for them, and held still the flood, till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go: namely, of a year and a half: and the same region is called Arsareth."

Referring to this passage viewed simply as common history, Balagh, in "Great Events coming upon the Earth," says: "If we take an easterly direction from the upper branches of the Euphrates, and go at the rate which we might suppose an entire nation could travel, we would probably be brought, at the end of a year and a half, about three thousand miles into the interior of that vast region known as Central Asia, and lying between independent Tartary, Thibet, the Chinese empire, and Siberia, a region of country but little known to civilization, and whose inhabitants have been, from their peculiar habits and laws, shut out from intercourse with European races."

It is probable that only a portion of the ten tribes joined in this eastward movement, or that if the whole of them did so, a considerable part of them must have afterwards spread themselves over other portions of Central Asia. Considerable traces of Israelites are found in various parts of the east; some of which I shall notice immediately. It is also highly probable that a portion of the eastward migration just mentioned ceased by Behring's Straits to the continent of America, and became the progenitors of what are supposed to be the aborigines of both North and South America. Asia is acknowledged to be the original seat of the human race, and America must have been peopled by emigrants from Asia at some time or other.

It is interesting to notice here a corroboration of this historical fact of the Israelites' eastward migration, which is contained in the prophecy of Amos now before us:—

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it." Amos viii. 11–12.

The "wandering" is not to be confounded with their first carrying away from their own land; but indicates a subsequent migration, and that in a north and east direction. The "famine of hearing the words of the Lord," and their "running to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and not finding it," has no parallel in the British people, who possess the word of God in greater abundance than any other people, and have been the means of furnishing it in many languages to nearly all the nations of the earth.

I now cite a few testimonies regarding the existence of the ten tribes in Asia during the last 2,400 years.

Josephus, the Jewish historian, writing in the first century, regarding the letter of Xerxes to Ezra, authorizing the return of the Jews from Babylon, says: "The Jews of that country were upon this occasion summoned to a general meeting at Babylon, where the letter was read, and the copy of it transcribed and sent away to be communicated to all the Jews in Media. But Esdras kept the original to himself. This account of the king's wonderful piety towards God, and of the respect and kindness he had for Esdras, was a surprise of wonderful satisfaction to the people;" for great numbers of them packed up their goods and effects, and hastened away to Babylon with a purpose to return to Jerusalem. But there were then another sort of Israelites, that being wonted to the place, and settled in their habitations, chose rather to continue where they were. And this is the reason that there are only two tribes to be found in Asia and Europe under the Roman emperor. As for the other ten tribes, they are all planted beyond the Euphrates, and so prodigiously increased in number that they are hardly to be computed." Book xi. chap. v.

Josephus also records a speech of King Agrippa to the Jews, exhorting them to submit to the Romans, in which the following passage occurs: "Do you stretch your hopes beyond the river Euphrates? Do any of you think your fellow-tribes will come out of Adiabene? Besides, if they would come, the Parthian would not permit."

Jerome, writing in the fifth century, says, "Unto this day the ten tribes are subject to the kings of the Persians, nor has their captivity been loosed."

A learned Jew, Benjamin of Tudela, who lived in the twelfth century, travelled through Europe and Asia, visiting his brethren. He records that the cities of Nesapur are peopled by the tribes of Dan, Zebulun, and Naphtali, being a portion of the first exiles taken into captivity under Shalmanezer. He goes so far into detail as to mention a very strong city, named Thamarjin, fifteen miles square; and that the province owning it as the capital contained forty cities, one hundred small towns, and two hundred villages, inhabited by three hundred thousand Jews. Another large city, named Talavar, contained one hundred thousand Israelites, reported to be descended from the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh. Access to them was difficult, owing to their situation, which could only be reached by an eighteen days' journey through uninhabited deserts. He also mentions a great number of places in the same region, whose inhabitants, from their ceremonies and traditions he believed to be his brethren of the house of Israel.

Twelve years ago, the Jewish Chronicle contained a most interesting account, by a Jewish officer of the British navy, of a large and strongly fortified city in Oriental China, never before heard of, containing a population of one million souls, all Israelites; speaking the Hebrew language; keeping their own laws, and possessing documents which record their history thousands of years ago.

The Rev. Dr. Claudius Buchanan, in his work, "Christian Researches," in speaking of the Lost Tribes, says: "I inquired of the Black Jews on the coast of Malabar concerning their brethren, the Ten Tribes. They said it was commonly believed among them that the great body of the Israelites are to be found in Chaldea and in the countries contiguous to it, being the very place whither they were first carried into captivity; that some few families had migrated into regions more remote, as to Cochin and to Rajepore in India, and to other places yet farther to the east; but that the bulk of the nation, though now much reduced in number, had not to this day removed 2000 miles from Samaria."

"Calculating then the number of Jews, who now inhabit the provinces of ancient Chaldea, or the contiguous countries, and who still profess Judaism; and the number of those who embraced Mohammedanism, or some form of it, in the same regions, we may be satisfied that the greater part of the Ten Tribes which now exist, are to be found in the countries of their first captivity. The fact seems to be, that if, from Babylon as a centre, you describe a segment of a circle from the northern shore of the Caspian Sea to the heads of the Indus, you will include the territories containing the chief body of the dispersed Ten Tribes of Israel."—Buchanan's "Christian Researches," pp. 322-324, 333-335.

Sir George Rose, in a treatise entitled "The Afghans, the Ten Tribes," adduces evidence in substantiation of the view that the Afghans are descendants from the ten tribes of Israel that were originally carried away into captivity in Assyria. Among other things, he gives the opinion of an officer on the staff of the Commander-in-Chief, in India, written at Munikiola in January, 1832, to the following effect:

"Having just been through a part of Afghanistan Proper, although now a part of our dominions, I cannot help writing to tell you how I was struck with the Jewishness of the people, the moment we crossed the Indus; and not only their appearance, but every possible circumstance tends to convince one that they are the descendants of the Ten Tribes. They call themselves Bunnie Israel (Bunnie being exactly synonymous with Mack in Scotland and Fitz in England), and are proud of it; whereas to all other Mohammedans a more severe term of abuse cannot be applied than Yahoodee, or Jew. One of the tribes, that at present is giving us a good deal of trouble, is called the Eusof-zye, or tribe of Joseph (the meaning Tribe), and next to them are the Isak-zie, or tribe of Isaac. Ishmael is a very common name amongst them."

The missionaries Carey and Marshman also state "that in the Pushtoo, or Afghanistan language, there are more Hebrew words than in that of any other nation."

So also, that Rev. G. S. Faber, the author of the "Sacred Calendar of Prophecy," considers that the locality of the Nestorians, spoken of by Dr. Grant, who inhabits the mountainous regions of Kurdistan, and together with the unconverted Jews surrounding them, declare themselves to be Beni-Israel, are the nucleus of the ten tribes. The ten tribes the remarked) were originally planted, partly in the then unpeopled province of Assyria, and partly in certain cities of the western part of Media. From this locality, the germ of the Afghan colony would pass eastward through the whole breadth of Media into Khorassan; and thence, as Sir G. Rose very well traces them, through Cabul and Cashmere, into their present settlement on the borders of Hindostan. I see indeed much reason to adopt the opinion that the Afghans are descended from the Ten Tribes, though they may not be the sole descendants." Faber's "Downfall of Turkey," p. 68.

I quote the following from the Messenger of the Churches:—

"Sometimes it is possible to discriminate the tribes to which the parties belong, but more frequently not. We find Dr. Wolff indicating the presence of tribes of Naphtali, Dan, Zebulon, and Asher in the heights of Badagshan and north of the Hindoo Koosh; while, among the Beni Arabah (Rechabites), in Arabia Petra, he found Dantes.

In another corner of Asia are to be found a people as unique as any already noticed—the Karens of Burmah. This race has only become properly known to the civilized world of the west since 1828. Their character must not be confounded with that of the savages of Australia or Nigritia, or of any other heathen peoples; for they have traditions of antecedent which stamps them with a higher character than even those among whom they are located, and who despise them. In the midst of all the sensuous glories of Buddhism, they have no religious forms; yet they hold fast to a creed which has come down in oral tradition from their fathers (they had no literature till now); "which creed," says a late writer, "is, for its amount of genuine truth, the most remarkable ever found within the pale of heathendom." "They have," writes another, "traditions of the Creation, the Temptation, the Fall, and the Dispersion of nations, in prose and verse, nearly as accurate as they are found in the Bible." And what shall we say of a people with such elements as these in their traditions?—"Formerly, God loved the Karen nation above all others; but they transgressed his commands, and therefore we suffer as at present. Because God cursed us, we are in our present afflicted state, and have no books. But God will again have mercy on us, and again he will love us above others. God will yet save us again."

"At the appointed season God will come;
The dead trees will blossom and flower;
When the appointed season comes, God will arise;
The mouldering trees will blossom and bloom again."
